Sec. 305. Abetment of suicide of child or insane person.—If any person under eighteen years of age, any insane person, any delirious person, any idiot, or any person in a state of intoxication commits suicide whoever abets the commission of such suicide shall be punished with death or imprisonment for life, or imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

2. Scope 1881
3. Procedure 1881
4. Charge 1881

1. Amendment.—The words "imprisonment for life" were substituted for the words "transportation for life" by Act 26 of 1955, Section 117 and Sch. (with effect from 1.1.1956).

2. Scope.—Insanity, idiocy, or deliriousness of a person takes away the criminality of the suicide. Bishop's Cr Law, Vol. II, P. 877. But a person who abets the commission of suicide of such person is guilty of an offence which is equal in magnitude to murder. A person abets the doing of a thing, who intentionally aids, by any act or illegal omission the doing of that thing (Section 107). "It seems to us", say the Law Commissioners, "that the rule would fail to be applied under these clauses chiefly in such a case as this, where a person legally bound to take care of the person of another has, by an illegal omission of his duty, intentionally given him the opportunity or permitted him to obtain the means of killing himself. It would apply also, we conceive, in the case of a person seeing another to destroy himself, say by hanging and allowing him to accomplish his purpose without any attempt to prevent him, if as may be expected, the law of procedure makes it a common duty incumbent upon all men to assist in preventing offence about to be committed in their presence. The intention here would be inferable from the circumstances. In the former case collateral proof of the intention would be requisite. But we apprehend that it is active aid which is principally intended in these clauses, and to which the higher penalty is meant to be applied".—First Report, Section 322, 323. "Upon a charge of abetting suicide, under Section 305. It will be incumbent on the prosecution, in addition to the ordinary evidence of abetment by instigating or aiding, etc., to show to the satisfaction of the Court the incapacity—Whether it arises from infancy, or insanity, or intoxication of the person who has committed suicide—In the same manner as incapacity has to be proved by the accused when, upon an ordinary trial, it is relied on by way of defence".—Morgan and Macpherson.

Commission of offence was held under Section 305, I.P.C. Conviction was made and revision petition was filed as regard alleged demand of dowry by father of accused he was not examined as witness. Hence it would be unsafe to convict accused person. The prayer for revision is accepted. Krushanahari Debath v. State, (1995) 8 OCR 568 (Ori).

3. Procedure.—Cognizable–Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoun-dable—Triable by Court of Session.

4. Charge.—I (name and office of Sessions Judge, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows—

That on or about the.......day of......at......you, abetted the commission of suicide by A. B, a person under eighteen years of age (or an insane person, etc.) and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 305 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

1. Scope.—The committing of suicide in itself is not and cannot be regarded as a crime in India. AIR 1938 Lah 561 : ILR 1938 Lah 542. "This and the proceeding section contain express provisions for the punishment of abetting suicide when that offence is actually committed. The ordinary law of abetment is inapplicable here. Suicide or self-murder may be the act of a person who is by law incapable of committing an offence (see Sections 82, 83) ; or it may be committed by a person who is criminally responsible for his actions. In the former case Section 305 makes the abetment of suicide an offence may be punished as severely as murder".—Morgan and Macpherson. Actively assisting a Hindu widow to become a Sati is an offence under this section. 36 All 26 : 11 ALJ 997 : see also 148 Ind Cas 880 : 1931 ALJ 7 : 34 Cr LJ 1069 : AIR 1933 All 160. According to English law a suicide is a felony, and not a misdemeanour, so if it is committed in the adviser's absence, the latter at the common law goes free of punishment ; because the principal being dead cannot be first convicted. Reg v. Ledington. 6 Car & p. 69 : Reg. v. Jessop, 16 Cox CC 204. Bishop's Cr Law p. 876. But when one advises another to kill himself, and he does it in the presence of the adviser, the latter becomes guilty of murder, probably as principal of the second degree but at all events as principal. Ibid. Accused were charged under Sections 149 and 306 with being member of unlawful assembly whose common object was to abet the suicide of a woman and with abetting the woman's suicide. It was found that they induced her to get her burnt along with the body of her deceased husband. With that object, they made her sit on the pyre with the husband on her lap and instantly a fire broke out from her hand. She tried to escape and leapt in the adjoining river where from she was rescued by the police but she died ultimately. The accused foiled the attempts of the police to save her at an earlier stage. Held, that the accused were guilty and the method of destruction resolved on for the suicide was fire and the method of ignition of the fire whether miraculous, whether self applied or whether applied by other is totally immaterial. 9 Pat LT 683 : 112 Ind Cas 363 : 29 Cr LJ 1035 : AIR 1928 Pat 497 ; 1983 Cr LJ 706 : (1983) 85 Punj LR 268 (the accused was held not guilty of illegal omission contemplated by clause 3 of Section 107 on the facts of the case).

In the absence of any evidence as to intentional aiding against accused the act or omission resulting in faecbtating commission of offence would not amount establish offence under Section 306, IPC. Rameshbhai Punjamji Keji Ram Bhail v. State of Gujarat, 2005(2) Crimes 552 (Guj).

The present appellant filed a complaint to the Superintendent of Police and after about two and a half months of the alleged incident. Allegation was that the police did not register a complaint. Ultimately, the complaint was filed on 26.08.2004. Initially on the basis of information lodged, enquiry in terms of Sec. 174 of the Code, was conducted and the police started the proceedings. It is to be noted that at different points of time, different version have been given. In the first stage during investigation under Sec. 174 of the Code it was stated that the accused had come to the village with the deceased. Interestingly, there was no suicide note. Admittedly, marriage was an arranged one. If that is so, it is not believable that the deceased and the accused had not met. The alleged grievance of the accused that the deceased was an ugly man could not have been noticed after marriage, for the first time on 03.06.2004.

Additionally, there was no suicide note in the present case. As noted earlier different versions of death were given. At the earlier stage, during investigation, under Sec. 174 of Code, the version was that the accused had accompanied the deceased to the native home, but subsequently stand was that the accused did not accompany the deceased because the latter was bad and ugly looking.

Though, normally threshold interference should not be made under Sec. 482, in the aforesaid background, this is not a case where any interference is called for with the order, by the High Court. The appeal is dismissed. Sonti Rama Krishna vs. Sonti Shanti Sree, AIR 2009 SC 923 : 2009(1) SCC 554 : 2008(15) Scale 108 : 2008(12) JT 449.

Common object—Determination of. The High Court has noted that from the side of the complainant which includes deceased also, five persons have received in total as many as 15 injuries. The main injury on the head of the deceased has been attributed to A1. Similarly, Gulam Rasul, Jan Mohammad son of Sultan and another Jan

Mohammad, have also received wounds on the head. Injury on the head of Gulam Rasul was an incised wound caused by a Farsa. Jan Mohammad son of Sultan had received an incised wound on the head. The other Jan Mohammed had received lacerated wound on the head. The other injuries on the persons of all the other injured persons are in the shape of bruises or lacerated injuries most of which have been caused by lathies.

The prosecution evidence clearly shows that the common object of the unlawful assembly was to commit the murder of Habib and it was not just an assembly at a particular point of time where the accused persons had assembled with Frasa and lathis in order to cause injury on the complainant including Habib-deceased who had gone for filing nomination papers for the Panchayat election.

The High Court found that the purpose of the unlawful assembly was to stop Habib, his brother Gulam Rasul and their supporter from either contesting the election or supporting the persons who filed the nomination. They were all present near the gate of the school where the nomination papers were to be filed. Both the trial Court and High Court have on analyses of the evidence come to hold that all the accused persons had formed an unlawful assembly armed with weapons which were likely to cause death and, therefore, conviction under Sec. 148 IPC and application of Sec. 149, IPC does not suffer from any infirmity. In the background facts, it is clear that the conviction as done is appropriate. Siri Kishan vs. State of Haryana, 2009 (12) SCC 757 : 2009 (8) JT 305 : 2009 (6) SCR 1184 : 2009 (6) Scale 438.

Deceased being fed up by illicit relationship between accused persons viz., her husband and her mother committed suicide. The evidence of witnesses would have been a strong supporting evidence to dying declaration, if it was made, by the deceased as per the accepted procedure or manner. A dying declaration attaches evidentiary value provided it is corroborated not only by the eyewitness but also by circumstantial evidence vis-a-vis the medical evidence.

The evidence on record is enough for the purpose of coming to any conclusion that the deceased received burn injuries and succumbed to the same injury. It is not an answer to the allegation that the deceased committed or attempted to commit suicide being abetted by the accused petitioner and the co-accused.

The Investigating Officer himself did not visit the hospital to record the statement of the injured person under Section 161, Criminal Procedure Code. He rather sent the SI (PW. 11) and that too after 19 days. There is no explanation from the Investigating Officer as to why he could not personally go to the hospital to record the statement of injured person and why he deputed PW. 11 after a long gap of 19 days from the date of occurrence. Nothing has been stated by the Investigating Officer why he did not make any requisition for dying statement of the injured person, if it was so required to be done in the interest of proper investigation, although, he got sufficient time for doing so. The manner in which dying statement of the injured/deceased was recorded without observing the bare minimum requirements, casts a shadow of doubt on the fact of recording the statement and genuineness of the same.

Is the Court expected to believe in, rely on and act upon such statement of the deceased recorded so casually and improperly without any supporting evidence worth gaining the confidence of the Court? The summit Court in Arvind Singh vs. State of Bihar, AIR 2001 SC 2124 = 2001 (6) SCC 407 = 2001 Cri LJ 2556, aptly held that the dying declaration should be dealt with care and caution and corroboration, though not essential as such, but is otherwise expedient to have the same in order to strengthen the evidentiary value of the declaration. Independent witnesses may not be available but there should be proper care and caution in the matter of acceptance of such a statement as trustworthy evidence. Little step further, the Apex Court in Panchdeo Singh vs. State of Bihar, AIR 2002 SC 526 = 2002 (1) SCC 577 = 2002 Cri LJ 973, observed thus, "confidence of the Court is the summum bonum and in the event of there being any affirmation thereto in the judicial mind, question of any disbelief or distrust would not arise. In the event however of there being some infirmity, howsoever negligible it be, the Court unless otherwise satisfied about the credibility thereof, ought to look for some corroboration, if however it is otherwise, question of requirement of a corroboration would not arise; dying declaration alluring confidence of the Court would be a sufficient piece of evidence to sustain conviction.

Further to note from the evidence of above witnesses is that, although they are neighbours and close to the victim, they have not deposed that they ever personally saw her being tortured physically by the accused persons. They have deposed merely on the basis of what was allegedly disclosed by the victim before the incident. Such evidence not being based on their personally acquired knowledge, in my considered view, is not an admissible evidence. Swapna Saha Bhowmik vs. State of Tripura, 2010 (2) CrLJ 1893 (Gau).

It is a unique legal phenomenon in the Indian Penal Code that the only act the attempt of which alone will become an offence. The person who attempts to commit suicide is guilty of the offence under Section 309, IPC whereas, the person who committed suicide cannot be reached at all. Section 306 renders the person who abets the commission of suicide punishable for which the condition precedent is that, suicide should necessarily have been committed. It is possible to abet the commission of sucide. But nobody would abet a mere attempt to commit suicide. It would be preposterous if law could afford to penalise an abetment to the offence of mere attempt to commit suicide. The accused can not be convicted, under Section 116 linked with Section 306, IPC. The former is abetment of offence punishable with imprisonment, if the offence be not committed. But the crux of the offence under Section 306 itself is abetment. In other words, if there is no abetment there is no question, the offence under Section 306 coming into play. It is inconceivable to have abetment of an abetment. Hence there cannot be an offence under Section 116 read with Section 306 IPC. Satvir Singh v. State of Punjab 2001 Cri LJ 3625 (SC).

Second Marriage—Scope.—Accused treated wife with cruelty for bringing insufficient dowry and also performed another marriage. Statement of witnesses showed that bigamy was in vogue in that place and was recognized as custom.

The proceeding under Section 125 Cr.P.C was compromised between the accused and Sangya Devi wife and at their instance consent order was passed by learned Chief Judicial Magistrate. The learned Sessions Judge has also observed that in view of second marriage of appellant with Sumitra Devi the accused has abetted the suicide of Sangya Devi. Sangya Devi was aware of the marriage of Sumitra Devi with accused and the fact that the accused had married second time with Sumitra Devi has been pleaded in the maintenance application. The maintenance application was prepared on 25.5.1999 and Sangya Devi had committed suicide in the intervening night of 26/27.08.1999. Therefore, it cannot be said that second marriage of accused with Sumitra Devi is the immediate cause of committing suicide by Sangya Devi and in other words by second marriage the accused had abetted suicide of Sangya Devi.

It has come on record that in the area to which the accused and Sangya Devi belong, it is not uncommon for a male to solemnize more than one marriage. Psyche of individual is influenced by the culture of the society in which he or she lives. PW-2 Shyama Nand aged 82 years who remained member of Gram Panchayat has stated that bigamy is prevalent in Kinnaur District and is recognized by custom as well. It is thus clear that for a male to have more than one wife was a part of custom and culture of the society of accused and deceased. In these circumstances, it cannot be said that the second marriage of the accused was the cause for Sangya Devi to commit suicide and for this reason appellant cannot be blamed to have abetted the suicide of Sangya Devi. The prosecution has not brought on record evidence so as to bring the case within the ambit of abetment as provided in Section 107 IPC. Surendra Kumar vs. State of HP, 2010 (2) CriLJ 1356 (HP).

Section 306, I.P.C is indeed against the person abetting the commission of suicide by another person. The conduct of appellant as is depicted by the witnesses and dying declaration of deceased would constitute a species of abetment in that he by his uncivilized behaviour guided the deceased to take her own life. Section 306, I.P.C. is thus attracted and offence under Section 306, I.P.C. would be constituted. Jeevan Babu Desai v. State of Maharashtra, (1994) 2 Bom CR 325 (Bom).

This Court even accepting the allegation that appellants had thrown pebbles on the deceased a day before the incident while she was taking her bath, the same does not amount to abetting her to commit suicide. Hence appellants not guilty of offence under Section 306, I.P.C. Halloo v. State of M.P., 1994 Cr LR 9 (MP).

Death was within 10 months of marriage, there were two complaints—One on the same day by brother-in-law of the deceased—Other on the 2nd day by mother-in-law—F.I.R. was not delayed and was fully held justified. State of West Bengal v. Orilal Jaiswal, 1994 Mad LJ (Cr) 187 (SC) : 1994 LIC 22 : 1994 SCC (Cr) 107 : (1994) 1 SCC 73 : (1994) 3 Recent Cr R 186 : (1994) 2 East Cr C 262 : 1994 Cr LJ 2104 : AIR 1994 SC 1418.

Offence under Section 306 of the I.P.C. which makes abetment, of suicide an offence is Constitutional and does not suffer from any vice. It is not violation of Articles 14 and 21 of the Constitution of India. N.M. Sakhre v. Union of India, 1995 Cr LJ 96 (Bom).

The accused is alleged to have demanded money from the in law through his wife for building a house. The letter written by her to her father contained no reference to such a demand or even harassment. Her brother had deposed that the victim was being beaten when he visited her but F.I.R. was not brought on record. His statement against mother-in-law of the victim was disbelieved and the accused acquitted of abetment to commit suicide. 1986 Cr LJ 816.

Where husband insist to take his wife from her parental home, wife pouring kerosene and died, it was held that husband cannot be convicted for instigating or aiding in commission of offence. Order of acquittal is not amenable to interference. 1987 Cr (MP) 90.

The only allegation apart the accused was that he used to come to the house in a drunk state, used to beat her and abuse her and that when she asked to stop drinking he did not stop drinking. These acts attracted to the accused did not being his acts within the meaning of abetting an offence to commit suicide as contemplated under Section 306, IPC. Bommidi Rajamallu v. State of H.P., 2001 Cri LJ 1318 (A.P.)

There was no evidence on record to support the prosecution case of abetment by husband to his wife to commit suicide. Held, evidence of harassment and maltreatment for insufficiency of dowry is not such an abetment. There was nothing omitted to do something which the accused was required to do undertake. (1986) 3 Crimes 399.

There was no dependable evidence to convict the accused. Held, she is entitled to acquittal. 1986 Cr LJ 816.

When suicide not shows that main reason for suicide was suspicion of husband about fidelity of wife, order of framing of charges against sister-in-law of deceased and her husband under Section 498-A is liable to be quashed. Smt. Rani v. State, 1996 Cri LJ 1026 [Del).

The accused was charged for the offence of abetment of suicide committed by his wife. There was evidence of ill-treatment and cruelty in the past. It is permissible for a Court enquiring a case to look into the past conduct prior to commencement date of amended provision. The drawing of the past instances of cruelty prior to 25.12.1983 would not render the penal provision under Section 498, I.P.C. retrospective. 1987 Cri LJ 901 (Bom).

The accused was charged for the offence of abetment of suicide committed by his wife. It was observed that sufferings which deceased faced were disclosed by her to her father, mother, brother and her friend. Conduct of deceased in disclosing her sufferings to her nearest and dearest ones, was most natural. Therefore those witnesses could not be interested. No element of false involvement of the accused by the witnesses could be found. 1987 Cri LJ 901 (Bom).

When out of frustration and instigation deceased committed suicide, cognizance of offence under Section 306, IPC was rightly taken. Prahlod Das Chela v. State of M.P., 1996 Cri LJ 3659 (MP).

When deceased though had time did not disclose cause of her committing suicide nor connected accused with it, ingredients of offence of cruelty and abetment of suicide not established. Prem Dass v. State of H.P., 1996 Cr LJ 951 (HP).

Once the accused is acquitted of a charge under Section 498-A, IPC, the requisite ingredients whereof are such which may impel a woman to cause physical or mental injury to herself including suicide, the conviction under Section 306, IPC, in the absence of evidence of any other type of abetment as in this case, will not be sustainable in law of factually. Khem Singh v. State of H.P., 2000 Cri LJ 4326 (H.P.)

2. Sentence.—A sentence of six month's rigorous imprisonment for barbarous act or abetment of sati is ludicrous. It is essential that the people should respect the law and as the custom of sati is forbidden by law a deterrent punishment is called for. AIR 1958 Raj 169 : ILR (1958) 8 Raj 143 : 1958 Cr LJ 967.

Girl committing suicide on being threatened by her erstwhile lover that as she refused to marry him he would destroy her and her family. Her lover having in his possession photographs of deceased with him.

The first question, which is required to be decided is, whether there is prima facie case against parents of the petitioner. The prosecution case shows that the parents made phone calls to the complainant and sought his appointment. They obviously were trying to push forward the marriage proposal of their son with deceased Rani. But, their attempt got scuttled at the very inception. Rani promptly made her mind clear to them, telling them that she would not marry their son. Making an attempt to push a marriage proposal of their son to the bride's parents is not a criminal activity. There is nothing on record to show that the parents met Rani to pressurize for agreeing to marry their son. Even the suicide note does not blame them. Rani in her suicide note did not utter a single word against the parents. The petitioners parents as discussed earlier, met two prosecution witnesses namely More and Dalvi for requesting them to act as mediators for pushing their proposal with the complainant and his family. There is nothing on record even to suggest that the petitioners parents tried to misuse the photographs for pressurizing Rani or her parents. Devesh Dattabhau Pathrikar & Ors. vs. State of Maharashtra, 2010 (3) CriLJ 3560 (Bombay) (Aurangabad).

Married woman died of burning—High Court reversed acquittal order—Cruel treatment of woman by her husband and mother-in-law appellants. Cogent and convincing reasons available for ruling out theory of accident pleaded by appellants—Husband not present at time of incident and mother-in-law immediately took deceased to hospital for treatment. Hence conviction by High Court upheld and sentence reduced from 5 years R.I. to 2-1/2 years R.I. Naresh Kumar. v. State of Haryana, 1994 SCC (Cri) 502.

Composite sentence for conviction under both Sections 306 and 498-A should not be passed. Samir Samanta v. State, 1993 Cri LJ 134 (Cal).

In the instant case, a father who was required to protect his daughter had cast his lustful eyes on her and was trying to force her to have sexual intercourse with him. As modest girl, though the daughter tried to resist, ultimately she could not do so and committed suicide by setting on fire by pouring Kerosene on herself. It was held that the conduct of the accused ultimately resulting in maximum punishment. State v. Anthony Nikolas, 2006 Cr LJ 1582 (Kant).

Where there was offence of abetment of suicide—Victim-wife committed suicide on account of torture and maltreatment by accused-husband and others. Offence was fully established. Conviction was upheld but sentence reduced to two years as accused have aged old mother and maltreatment started only after birth of a son. Baldev Raj v. State of Punjab, (1995) 2 CC Cases 101 (P & H).

Provisions of Section 306 do not violate against any of the constitutional mandate. Naresh Marotrao Sakhre v. Union of India, (1995) 1 Crimes 212 (Bom).

3. Procedure—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compound-able—Triable by Court of Session.

4. Absence of charge.—In a case the accused was charged under Section 304B but no charge under Section 306 IPC was framed. The charge under Section 304B was not proved. It was held that even if no charges under Section 306 was framed, the accused could be convicted under Section 306/498A as cruelty is common essential to both Section 304 and 498A. Hira Lal v. State (NCT of Delhi), 2003 Cr LJ 3711 (SC) : AIR 2003 (SC) 2865 : 2003(8) SCC 80 : 2003(3) Crimes 186 (SC) : 2003(5) Supreme 112.

In view of Section 464, Cr PC, it is possible for the appellate or sessional Court to convict an accused for an offence for which no charge was framed unless the Court is of the opinion that a failure of justice would in fact occasioned. In order to judge whether a failure of justice has been occasioned, it will be relevant to examine whether the accused was aware of the basic ingredients of the offence for which he is being convicted and whether the main facts sought to be established 'against him were explained to him' clearly and whether he got a fair chance to defend himself. In the instant case, the basic ingredients of the offence under Section 306 IPC had been established. The features of the prosecution case were sought to be established by the prosecution in order to substantiate the charge under Section 498A, IPC and also for showing that the accused had a motive to commit the crime of murder for which he was actually charged. There was no aspect of the prosecution which may not had been put to him. In view of the material on record it was held that the conviction under Section 306, IPC could safely be recorded and the same would not result in failure of justice in any manner. Sangarabonia Sreenu v. State of AP, 1997 Cr LJ 3955 : AIR 1997 SC 3233 : 1997 (5) SCC 348 overruled. Dalbir Singh v. State of U.P., 2004 Cr LJ 2025 : AIR 2004 SC 1990 : 2004 (5) SCC 334 : 2004 (3) Supreme 506 : 2004 (2) Crimes 471 (SC) : 2004(4) JT 455.

Where the accused was charged for offence under Section 489A and 304B of the Penal Code, but evidence proved him guilty under Section 306, it was held that accused could be convicted under Section 306, though no charge under Section 306 was framed. Vinod Kumar v. State, 2005 Cr LJ (NOC) 222 (Uttaranchal).

5. Charge.—I (name of office of Session Judge, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as followed :—

That on or about the......day of.......... at.........one A. B. committed suicide, and that you-abetted its commission by state in what way), and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 306 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

6. Abetment of suicide.—Abetment involves a mental process of instigating a person or intentionally aiding that person in doing of a thing. In cases of conspiracy also it would involve that mental process of entering into conspiracy for the doing of that thing. It cannot be said that by publication of the articles which are said to be of defamatory character, in a daily newspaper, the editor or the other respondents intentionally aid the commission of suicide by victim. The reaction against an article published can be different from different people who read it. A person may get enraged and retaliate or read it and commit suicide. The possible reaction would not be known before a defamatory statement is published as it will depend upon the nature and sensitivity of a person. Therefore, the reaction to a defamatory article which cannot be predicted will not be attributable as an intention to illegally aiding or instigating the suicide by the person concerned. More active role which can be described as instigating or aiding the doing of a thing it required before a person can be said to be abetting the commission of offence under Sec. 306 of the Indian Penal Code. State of Gujarat v. Pradyuman Ramanlal Mehta, 1999 Cri LJ 736 (Gujarat)

In the present case, the charge against the appellant is that he along with ot two accused "in furtherance of common intention", mentally tortured Jitendra Shar (the deceased) and abetted him to commit suicide by the said act of mental torture. I trite that words uttered on the spur of the moment or in a quarrel, without someth more cannot be taken to have been uttered with mens rea. The onus is on prosecution to show the circumstances which compelled the deceased to take extreme step to bring an end to his life. In the present case, apart from the suicide n extracted above, statements recorded by the police during the course of investigati tend to show that on account of business transactions with the accused, including appellant herein, the deceased was put under tremendous pressure to do someth which he was perhaps not willing to do. Prima facie, it appears that the conduct of appellant and his accomplices was such that the deceased was left with no other opt except to end his life and, therefore, clause firstly of Sec. 107 of the IPC was attractec

In the light of the material on record, in our judgment, it cannot be said that trial Court was in error in drawing an inference that the appellant had "instigated" deceased to commit suicide and, therefore, there was ground for presuming that appellant has committed an offence punishable under Sec. 306 read with Sec. 34, I It is trite that at the stage of framing of charge, the Court is required to evaluate material and documents on record with a view to finding out if the facts emerg therefrom, taken at their face value, disclose the existence of all the ingredie constituting the alleged offence or offences. For this limited purpose, the Court may the evidence as it cannot be expected even at the initial stage to accept as gospel tr all that the prosecution states. At this stage, the Court has to consider the material with a view to find out if there is ground for "presuming" that the accused committed an offence and not for the purpose of arriving at the conclusion that it is likely to lead to a conviction. See Niranjan Singh Karam Singh Punjabi & Ors. v. Jite Bhimraj Bijja & Ors., AIR 1990 SC 1962.

In view of the settled legal position, noted above, we are convinced that the Court was correct in law in coming to the conclusion that a case for framing ch against the appellant had been made out. Similarly, the scope of revisional powe the High Court under Sec. 401 of the Code being limited, the High Court was jus in dismissing the Revision Petition, preferred by the appellant. Chitresh Kumar Ch vs State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi)., 2010 AIR SCW 645 : AIR 2010 SC 1446.

The deceased committed suicide at the house of her parents but not in the h of the accused. The question of abetting that thing of committing suicide b husband did not arise as he had not aided or abetted for setting herself for su pouring Kerosene and putting on fire. Therefore, the accused was entitled f acquittal for the offence punishable under Section 306, IPC. Vanamala Ameran State of A.P. 2001 Cr LJ 4498(AP).

Deceased was married in Phagun 1984 and she died in October, 1984 and it disputed that she died by hanging. If she was not maltreated, then there was no why a young newly married girl would commit suicide. The circumstance appellants were sitting outside the house on cots while she was hanging inside, suggestive of the fact that they were in differs as to what she does and they did unhappy on her committing suicide. 1988 (1) Crimes 211 (P & H).

The accused were alleged to have demanded dowry and treated deceased with ruelty leading her to suicide. No evidence could be produced showing that the eceased was harassed within the meaning of explanation (b) of Section 498-A. herefore, offence under Section 306, IPC had not been made out. State of H.P. v. Nikku Ram, AIR 1996 SC 67 : 1995(5) Scale 94 : 1995(6) SCC 219 : 1995 Cr LJ 4184.

Where there was offence of instigation, incitement or advice to commit suicide. Cognizance under Section 193, Cr. P.C. taken by trial court. It had quashing of cognizance. Quarrel which took place between petitioner and deceased over keeping other lady accused—Petitioner and lady suggested deceased to commit suicide. On frustration and incitement deceased committed suicide and mere use of some words being sufficient to constitute offence of incitement. Hence, there being no infirmity in order of taking cognizance, revision is dismissed. Prahlad Das Chale v. State of M.P., 1995 Cr LR (MP) 195.

Where officers were intimidating the deceased to commit suicide and was omitting to prevent the commission of suicide despite being under a duty to prevent. Even if it be taken that the petitioner had demanded the sum of Rs. 15,000/- from the deceased and on his refusal to pay the same, the petitioner had got the deceased declared until for recruitment to the army. It cannot be said that the petitioner in doing so, had instigated the deceased for committing suicide or had engaged with anyone in any conspiracy for doing any such things or had added the deceased in committing suicide. J.S. Ghura v. State of Rajasthan, 1996 Cr LJ 2158 (Raj).

In the present case, there was love affairs and subsequently they settled mutually. marriage between them. But when accused went away somewhere and did not return there, his wife committed suicide. Where the evidence of witness was simple in nature and deceased nowhere attributed pregnancy to accused, she, in her complaint, has not said anything of intimacy with accused but said that his mother was demanding money as precondition of marriage. It was not proved that accused intended by not marrying that she should commit suicide or knew was likely to commit suicide. Therefore, this act of being her individual, accused, was acquitted. Satish v. State of Maharashtra, 1997 Cri LJ 935 (Bom).

Intention of accused to aid or instigate or abet deceased is necessary to constitute offence under Section 306, IPC and mere non-payment of debt by deceased to accused is no intention of accused to abet suicide. Pallem Denial Victor v. State of A.P., 1997 (1) Crimes 499 (AP).

When there are contradictions in evidence of material witnesses, acquittal of accused is proper. State of H.P. v. Amin Chand, 1996 Cri LJ 4223 (HP).

When it is not proved that accused intended by not marrying that she should commit suicide or knew that she was likely to commit suicide accused was acquitted as it was an independent act of deceased herself. Satish v. State of Maharashtra, 1997 Cri LJ 935 (Bom).

The dying declaration shows that the deceased was asked by her, mother in law to take the child to the first floor and she replied that she has just come on the ground floor. The husband intervened and said that why she was giving replies to her mother in law. If the accused had not crossed this limit it would have been a case of ordinary domestic quarrel of minor jerks and jars. But the husband exceeded that limit. He started assaulting his wife with fisticuffs. She took out the kerosene can from the Kitchen. While she was pouring kerosene on her, her husband who was standing in front of her used provocatie language . She also said that he should not further beat her but he continued to assault her. This brings the conduct of the accused in the category of abetment. When there was already fuel in the hands of the wife, he should not have added fuel to fire by uttering provocative language. Such utterance amounts to instigation to commit suicide (see Brijlal v. Premchand, AIR 1989 SC 166. She was goaded by the accused to bring an end to her life. The words used by the accused amounted to grave and serious provocation enough for an ordinary woman in the Indian set up to do what the deceased actually did. (Gurbachan Singh v. Satpal Singh. AIR 1990 SC 209 : 1990 Cri LJ 592). The wife was thus subjected to cruelty as defined in Section 113-A of the Evidence Act. Arjun Kushwah v. State of M.P., 1999 Cri LJ 2538 (M.P.).

The burn injuries sustained by Aruna were not accidental. She committed suicide within 3 1/2 years of her marriage because of the cruel treatment by her husband. Therefore, Section 113-A of the Evidence Act springs into action. Having regard to all the circumstances of the case it must be held that the accused abetted the commission of suicide by his wife. There was not an astray act of assault on her but as her dying declaration shows there was a persistent course of cruel conduct on the part of the husband. He is therefore, guilty of the offence punishable under Section 306, IPC and the trial Court has rightly convicted him. Ramesh Baburao Patil, v. State of Madhya Pradesh, 2002 Cri LJ 3364 : 2002 Cri LR (SC&MP) MPJ 667 : 2002(4) MPLJ 425.

Where the complaint was closed merely on the ground that a case under Section 306 I.P.C. has been registered already against the applicant in revision. No investigation was made into the allegation whether Nimisha soon before her death was being subjected to cruelty by her husband and his family members in connection with the demand of dowry. Why it was so done in anybody's guess and in this revision it is not necessary for the Court to unravel this mystery. The matter is left for being looked into by superior police officers and to take such action as they deem necessary against the erring official or officials. Asha Shukla v. State of U.P. and another, 2002 Cri LJ 2233. (All.) : 2002 All LJ 823 : 2002(44) All Cri C 542 : 2002(1) All Cri R 544.

Where there is no reliable evidence to support it, therefore, this finding of the trial Court is not acceptable. A perusal of the entire evidence shows that the accused did not make any dowry demand or treat his wife cruelly after the mutual settlement between them after the order of the Family Court in September, 1988. Thus, during the period of about three years prior to the commission of deceased Vijaylaxmi, there is no proof of any demand of dowry or treating her with cruelty by the accused. The past, instances of cruelty which took place before the mutual settlement could not operate in the mind of the deceased to bring an end to her life. Those instances of cruelty of remote past had become stale enough to serve as the impelling force to drive the deceased to commit suicide. Dwarika Prasad Soni v. State of M.P., 2002 Cr LJ 1080 (M.P.) : 2002(3) Cur Cri R 196 : 2002(7) DMC 122 : 2002(2) Hindu LR 720.

7. Husband Committing suicide: Instigation by wife.—The provisions of presumption under Section 113-A of the Evidence Act do not arise against the wife due to whose cruelty the husband commits suicide. It is certainly a case of mental cruelty by the wife due to her alleged characterise manner but unfortunately the legislature has not taken into account these factors. In the absence of any such presumption, inference of abetment because of the cruel conduct of the wife against her, cannot be raised. It is not a common course of events nor a natural result. The husbands generally inflict cruelty upon the wives. It is not that the wives are not cruel. But such cruelty by the wife cannot be said to be an instigation to the husband to commit suicide. Abetment has been defined under Section 107, IPC. There had to be either of the 3 acts by the abettor. Engaging with one or more other person or persons in any conspiracy for the doing of the particular act is one of them. There should have been a conspiracy that the husband led to commit suicide and along with the conspiracy there should be an act of illegal omission or there should be instigation of the person who commits suicide to do that act. There should be intentionally aiding an act or illegal omission. Even facilitation for commission of crime amounts to abetment. It is not a common feature that husband are led to commit suicide. So it is not a normal conduct. In the instant case there was no other material on record against the petitioner except the suicide note of th husband and the letter written by him to his own sister earlier. They were totall insufficient material to infer that the wife abetted suicide. She may be cause for th suicide, but not the abettor Alka jaiswal v. State of MP., 2000 Cri LJ 672 (MP).

There used to be quarrels between the two families at public tap for getting water The accused were threatening and abusing the deceased women that they would revea the, contacts of the deceased to her would be husband illicit. Therefore, the decease jumped into a high level canal and drowned. It was held that the threatening words used by the accused were not sufficient to be described as instigating in th commission of the offence. V. Adinarayana v. State of M.P., 2000 Cri LJ 1182 (AP) : 2000(1) ALT (Cri) 172 (AP).

A domestic quarrel between the deceased and the accused over some milk does not amount cruelty within the meaning of the explanation (a) to section 498-A, IPC so as to attract Section 113-A of the Evidence Act giving use to presumption that the accused abetted the commission of suicide by the deceased. In the ordinary course such quarrel abuses and even pushing the woman do not drive her to take extreme step of committing suicide. "Laxmi Bai v. State of M.P., 2000 Cri LJ 3597 (M.P.)

When the accused was tried for abetting to comimt suicide and hence convicted. It was challenged in revision petition. It was held that the ingredient of office under Section 306, I.P.C. is not established, hence no conviction can be sustained on strength of evidence available on record. Ashok Kumar v. State of M.P., (1995) 3 C Cr 126 (MP).

Conviction for abetment of suicide merely on the allegations of harassment to the deceased is sustainable. Mahendra Singh v. State of M.P., 1995 SCC (Cr) 1157 (SC).

The legislative intent is clear enough to indicate in particular reference to explanation (b) that there shall have to be a series of acts in order to be a harassment within the meaning of explanation (B), the letters by itself though may a reprehensible conduct, would not, however bring home to charge of S.498-A against the accused. Acquittal of a charge under Section 306, as noticed though not by itself a ground for acquittal under Section 498-A, but some cogent evidence is required to bring home the charge of Section 498 as well, without which the charge cannot be said to be maintained. However, there was no such evidence available on record. Thus the accused would be entitled to be acquitted of the charge under Section 498-A Girdhar Shankar Tawade v. State of Maharashtra, 2002 Cri LJ 2814 (SC) : AIR 2002 (SC) 2078 : 2002(5) SCC 177 : 2002(4) JT 357 : 2002(4) Scale 44 : 2002(3) Supreme 583.

8. Conviction.—Conviction for offence under Section 306, I.P.C.—Abetment of suicide and cruelty by husband or his relatives was alleged—Deceased committed suicide within six years of her marriage, there was found no evidence of abetment of suicide. But witnesses being consistent about fact that deceased was treated with cruelty. It was held conviction under Section 498-A maintained but acquitted of offence under Section 306. Dilip v. State of Rajasthan, 1995 RCC 214 (Raj).

Illicit relationship between appellant and wife of deceased. Accused No. 1 had illicit relationship with Accused No. 2 who is the wife of the deceased. It is also not in dispute that Accused No. 1 was visiting the house of the deceased to meet Accused No. 2 and that he even went to the house of deceased when he came to know that the wife of the deceased was sent with her father for counseling and advise. He loudly stated that he would continue to have relationship with Accused No. 2 and would come to her house so long she does not object to the same. He also took her away from the house of PW-5, her brother and kept her with him for 4 days. Immediately after the said incident and deceased committed the suicide. Therefore, there is definitely a proximity and nexus between the conduct and behaviour of Accused No. 1 and Accused No. 2 with that of the suicide committed by the deceased. Besides, there is clear and unambiguous findings of fact of three Courts that the appellant is guilty of the offence under Sec. 306 of IPC. Such findings do not call for any interference in our hand. This Court also does not generally embark upon reappreciation of evidence on facts which are found and held against the appellant. Dammu Sreenu vs. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 2532 : 2009 CrLJ 3728 : 2009 (3) Crimes 35 (SC) : 2009 (7) JT 478 : 2009 (9) SCR 858 : 2009 (8) Scale 731 : 2009 (4) Supreme 525.

The evidence of witnesses would have been a strong supporting evidence to dying declaration, if it was made, by the deceased as per the accepted procedure or manner. A dying declaration attaches evidentiary value provided it is corroborated not only by the eyewitness but also by circumstantial evidence vis-a-vis the medical evidence.

The evidence on record is enough for the purpose of coming to any conclusion that the deceased received burn injuries and succumbed to the same injury. It is not an answer to the allegation that the deceased committed or attempted to commit suicide being abetted by the accused petitioner and the co-accused.

The Investigating Officer himself did not visit the hospital to record the statement of the injured person under Section 161, Criminal Procedure Code. He rather sent the S1 (PW. 11) and that too after 19 days. There is no explanation from the Investigating Officer as to why he could not personally go to the hospital to record the statement of injured person and why he deputed PW. 11 after a long gap of 19 days from the date of occurrence. Nothing has been stated by the Investigating Officer why he did not make any requisition for dying statement of the injured person, if it was so required to be done in the interest of proper investigation, although, he got sufficient time for doing so. The manner in which dying statement of the injured/deceased was recorded without observing the bare minimum requirements, casts a shadow of doubt on the fact of recording the statement and genuineness of the same.

Is the Court expected to believe in, rely on and act upon such statement of the deceased recorded so casually and improperly without any supporting evidence worth gaining the confidence of the Court? The summit Court in Arvind Singh vs. State of Bihar, AIR 2001 SC 2124 = 2001 (6) SCC 407 = 2001 Cri LJ 2556, aptly held that the dying declaration should be dealt with care and caution and corroboration, though not essential as such, but is otherwise expedient to have the same in order to strengthen the evidentiary value of the declaration. Independent witnesses may not be available but there should be proper care and caution in the matter of acceptance of such a statement as trustworthy evidence. Little step further, the Apex Court in Panchdeo Singh vs. State of Bihar, AIR 2002 SC 526 = 2002 (1) SCC 577 = 2002 Cri LJ 973, observed thus, "confidence of the Court is the summum bonum and in the event of there being any affirmation thereto in the judicial mind, question of any disbelief or distrust would not arise. In the event however of there being some infirmity, howsoever negligible it be, the Court unless otherwise satisfied about the credibility thereof, ought to look for some corroboration, if however it is otherwise, question of requirement of a corroboration would not arise; dying declaration alluring confidence of the Court would be a sufficient piece of evidence to sustain conviction.

Further to note from the evidence of above witnesses is that, although they are neighbours and close to the victim, they have not deposed that they ever personally saw her being tortured physically by the accused persons. They have deposed merely on the basis of what was allegedly disclosed by the victim before the incident. Such evidence not being based on their personally acquired knowledge, in my considered view, is not an admissible evidence. Swapna Saha Bhowmik vs. State of Tripura, 2010 (2) CrLJ 1893 (Gau).

The accused as per oral evidence used to subject his wife to mental cruelty and letters written by her before the death showed that accused was dominating his wife and was treating her as a chattel. Thus conduct of husband was such as was likely to drive his wife to commit the suicide. This type of circumstances indicate that the accused had abetted his wife to commit suicide. However point of dowry was not proved and conviction under Section 304B was set aside but conviction under Section 306 and 498A was upheld. Devykinandan v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 1502 (MP) : 2003(2) All Ind Cas 123 : 2003(3) Rec Cri R 379 : 2003 Cri LR (SC&MP) MPJ 55.

Where outrageous act resorted to by the accused had left the deceased with no alternative but to commit suicide, the deceased was held guilty of abetting the suicide. Dammu Ireenu v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 2185 (AP) : 2003 (1) ALD (Crl) 664 : 2003 (2) CW Cri R 475.

Where the appellant was charged and convicted under Section 306/498A for instigating the wife to commit suicide, and in appeal it was found that accused was rarely talking to her wife who had eloped with someone for a particular period, it was held that such an act was not sufficient to hold him guilty of abetment under Section 306 or under Section 498A. Ramesh Bhai Godad v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 2445 : 2003(2) DMC 746 : 2003(2) Guj LH 657 : 2003(3) Guj LR 2390 : 2003(4) Rec Cri R 17.

In a case, the accused due to influence of intoxication hurled abuses at victim who committed suicide in night by throwing himself on railway track. When cogent and reliable evidence of relatives proved demand for dowry, absence of victim's statement before her friend about any harassment by itself is not sufficient to acquit accused, and order of conviction cannot be interfered with. Randhir Singh v. State of Punjab, 2004 Cr LJ 4985 : AIR 2004 SC 5097 : 2004(4) Crimes 193 (SC) : 2004(7) Supreme 420 : 2004(3) JCC 1608 : 2004 Recent Cr 740.

In the instant case, the accused denied the ill treatment and argued that deceased wanted to marry her cousin brother and for that she off and on used to run away from the matrimonial house on her own but all this was simply found the figment of imagination. It was held that conviction of accused for abetting his wife to commit suicide by subjecting her to cruelty was proper. Raj Kumar v. State, 2003 Cr LJ (NOC) 249 (MP).

Where there was no allegations of demand of money in FIR and no specific charge under Section 498B, IPC had been framed and post-mortem report also not duly proved during trial therefore in absence of cause of death established by evidence, conviction under Section 306, IPC was held not sustainable. Veerla Venkateshwara Rao v. State of A.P., 2005 (2) Crimes 486 (AP).

It was established that wife had committed suicide consequent to ill treatment meted out to her by mother-in-law, sister-in-law and husband. It was held that these persons were liable to be convicted under Section 306/34 for abetting her to commit suicide. Kamalakar Nandram Bhavsar v. State of Maharashtra, 2004 Cr LJ 615 (SC) : AIR 2004 (SC) 503 : 2003(9) JT 570 : 2003(8) Supreme 424 : 2004(1) Crimes 31 (SC).

There was overwhelming evidence to show that accused had made life of his deceased wife intolerable by ill treating her and beating her frequently. On day of occurrence of incident she was not allowed to attend marriage of her near relation whereas husband had gone there. It was held that cruel behaviour of husband, who was, had instigated deceased wife to commit suicide and therefore he was liable to be convicted under Section 306, IPC. The accused husband and other in laws of deceased were, however, held entitled to be acquitted of other charges. Batool v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 3286 (Raj) : 2003(2) Crimes 101 : 2003(2) Hindu LR 421 : 2003(3) Rec Cri R 683.

The accused borrowed Rs. 4 lacs from the deceased. When the deceased demanded for repayment of the amount so as to perform his daughter's marriage, the accused used to postpone the repayment. On a particular date, while refusing to repay the amount the accused acted in a high-handed manner and challenged the deceased, and his son to do what they would like to do. They went inside the house and brought pesticide poison and gave it to deceased to consume and die. In the emotional mode the deceased consumed it and died. It was held the accused could be said to have committed the abetment of suicide. Gundala Reddeppa Naidu v. State of A.P., 2005 Cr LJ 4702 (AP) : 2005 (2) ALD (Crl) 206 : 2006 (1) Andh LT (Cri) AP 152 : 2006(1) Rec Cri R 547.

Where the accused persons allegedly followed deceased in streets passing vulgar remarks, demanding her to fulfil their lust and spreading rumours against her in the village and the suicidal note was written immediately before committing suicide. It was held that the suicidal note which specifically mentioned that the accused persons were responsible for creating circumstances leading to death deceased and, therefore, conviction of accused under Sections 306 and 509 was proper. The co-accused in absence of specific role assigned to him in suicidal note were given benefit of doubt. Pothyamsethi Satyanarayana Reddy v. State of A.P., 2006 Cr LJ 27 (AP).

9. Evidence.—The Supreme Court has observed in State of West Bengal v. Orilal Jaiswal, AIR 1994 SC 1418 : 1994 Cri LJ 2104 that the Courts should be extremely careful in assessing the facts and circumstances of each case and the evidence adduced in the trial for the purpose of finding whether the cruelty meted out to the victim had in fact induced her to end the life by committing suicide. If it transpires to the Court that a victim committing suicide was hypersensitive to ordinary petulance, discord and differences in domestic life quite common to the society to which the victim belonged and such petulance discord and differences were not expected to induce a similarly circumstanced individual in a given, society to commit suicide, the conscience of the Court should not be satisfied for basing a finding that the accused charged of abetting the offence of suicide should be found guilty. "Laxmi Bai v. State of M.P., 2000 Cri LJ 3597 (M.P.)

On face of contradictory statement by father and sister of deceased regarding demand of dowry, evidence of harassment not worthy of credence. State of Haryana v. Suresh Kumar, 1993 Cri LJ 1400 (P & H).

Where there was homicidal death of two ladies. Dead bodies found in the toilet of the office and jewellery recovered from the possession of the appellant. Held, appellant guilty under Section 411 of I.P.C.—No other conclusion is possible of being arrived at except holding that the appellant could be found guilty only for an offence punishable under Section 411, I.P.C. In almost similar circumstances, Supreme Court in Union Territory of Goa v. Boaventura D' Souza, 1993 Cr LJ 181, found the accused therein guilty under Section 411, I.P.C. That was a case of murder and robbery. Proof offered was based on circumstantial evidence. Accused was alleged to have stayed in the house of the deceased and committed murder, object being gain. Injured eye-witness did not implicate the accused. Supreme Court also doubted the stay of the accused in the house of his relation. In that background, it was observed that an inference cannot be safely drawn that the accused therein had committed murder based on recovery of stolen articles one month after the incident. However, conviction was recovered under Section 411, IPC. Similarly in Babula v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1992 SC 2091 : (1992) 3 Crimes 341 (SC). Supreme Court found that it was hazardous to convict the accused therein, for murder on the basis of recovery of stolen articles 1-1/2 months after the commission of crime, from a person to whom, the accused, had allegedly sold those articles. Even in that case, there was no clinching evidence about the presence of the accused in the house of the deceased when the occurrence had taken place. Mohan v. State, (1994) 1 Crimes 366 at p. 379 : (1994) 1 ALT (Cr) 442 : (1994) 1-LW (Cr) 78 (Mad).

The High Court has carefully considered the evidence as also the assailing grounds. Strangely enough, there is no basis on the part of 'V' and he has very clearly and truthfully spoken about the painful facts. There is no dispute about the fact that he used to reside close by and the daughter was in regular contact, with the parents and it is but natural that she would convey to him about her woeful life. Under these circumstances, High Court does not see any ground on which this evidence can be discarded. Laxman Irayya Yenganti v. State of Maharashtra, (1995) 1 Bom CR 219 (222) : (1995) 1 B Cr C 265 : (1995) 1 Mah LJ 403 (Bom).

Prosecution case based on evidence of victim relying on two letters and suicide note written by her—Witnesses on these documents being parent and brother of deceased examined by police after ten months of occurrence—Documents not specifically put to accused under Section 313, Cr.P.C. Genuineness of documents not proved by prosecution otherwise and delayed examination of witnesses creating suspicion conviction was held not sustainable. Babula Kundu v. State of Orissa, (1994) 3 Crimes 390 (Ori).

The next head of evidence consists of the deposition of 'I' (P.W. 5), who is a neighbour and who categorically corroborates everything that 'V' (P.W. 3) has deposed about and adds to the fact that the deceased used to tell her from time to time about the terrible situation under which she was living. The manner in which the accused used to assault the deceased and extort, money from her for liquor and that he even threatened to kill her has been deposed to by this witness. The principal ground on which 'K' assailed her evidence is that admittedly the mother tongue of the deceased was Telugu and this witness admits that she does not know Telugu. She has clarified in the evidence that the deceased knew Marathi and she used to talk to 'J' in this language. The latter represents the correct position, more so since the deceased was residing in that locality and would have most certainly picked up enough of the local language to be able to communicate with others. Her having disclosed to 'J' about the happening between the accused and herself is most natural. On the aspect of quarrels between the husband and the wife, the unemployment of the accused, the extortion of money and the physical assaults on the deceased. Court has the evidence of 'S' (P.W. 6) and 'R' (P.W. 7), both of whom are neighbours and who had also come to the scene immediately after the incident. As far as this evidence is concerned, 'K' sought to contend that these persons shared the general bias and prejudice which had been generated against the accused, who was obviously not behaving well and therefore, they had gone against the accused. This is hardly any ground on which the evidence can be assailed because the witnesses have been cross-examined and their evidence is by and large unscalled. They establish quite clearly that everything which 'V' (P.W. 3) has deposed about was, in fact, true. The High Court is conscious of the fact that there is no dying declaration in this case. There are no eye-witnesses and, therefore, it is on the basis of the aforesaid material alone that the charge will either stand or fail. Laxman Irayya Yengan ti v. State of Maharashtra. (1995) 1 Bom CR 219 (222) : (1995) 1 B Cr C 265 : (1995) 1 Mah LJ 403 (Bom).

Deceased not subjected to cruelty and was neither harassed to meet unlawful demand. Subjection to cruelty missing. Onus may shift on the accused. Hence offence was not made out. Bhala Kumar v. State of M.P., 1995 Cr LR (MP) 268.

Cruelty has been committed soon before the death of the deceased reflecting the insignia of cruelty. Facts and circumstances of the case should be such as can reasonably sustain a presumption about the existence of a nexus of cause and effect between the alleged cruelty and suicide. Bansiya v. State of Rajasthan, (1995) 3 Crimes 75 (Raj).

In case of charge under Sections 498-A to 306, I.P.C. it is not safe to rely on the evidence of the brother of the deceased and his other relatives where there is possibility of fake insuniations and allegations. Khemraj H. Agarwal v. State of Maharashtra, 1995 Cr LJ 2271 (Bom).

Suicide was within one year of marriage, there was no evidence of ill-treatment by appellant. None of the elements required to constitute offence under Section 306, I.P.C. proved by prosecution. It was held, that the appellant is entitled to benefit of doubt, hence acquitted of all charges and conviction and sentence set aside. Shekhar Amonkar v. State, (1995) 2 Crimes 460 (Bom).

When married woman committed suicide. Presumption as to abetment under Section 113-A, Evidence Act. It was held not mandatory. Nilakantha Pati v. State of Orissa, 1995 Cr LJ 2472 (Ori).

Ocular evidence. We are of the opinion that this excerpt from his evidence cannot be said to be proof of the document as no statement was made that he recognized the handwriting or the signature of the appellant. Moreover, this letter had not been produced before the police during the course of the initial investigation and had been handed over to the police after several months. This fact, as also a reading of the letter, indicates that this was a concocted piece of evidence and the work of a legal mind, as no person would write such a letter meeting all legal requirements for implicating himself and his near relatives, in a claim for Dowry.

We, however, find from a reading of the testimonies of these witnesses that the problem, if any, lay with Karuna's mother-in-law Ramdulari and she and nobody else was the villain and general allegations with regard to the other accused find mention only in the statement of Ram Prasad. We are, therefore, of the opinion that in this background and keeping in view of the fact that Ramdulari has been acquitted, it would not be possible to maintain the conviction of the appellant on the basis of this evidence.

Admittedly, the conviction of the appellant has been recorded under Sec. 306 which is relatable to Sec. 113-A and though the presumption against an accused has to be raised therein as well, the onus is not as heavy as in the case of a dowry death. In this background, Ms. Makhija's arguments that the onus shifts exclusively and heavily on an accused in such cases is not entirely correct and in the background of sketchy ocular evidence and the additional fact that the dying declaration recorded by the Naib Tehsildar completely exonerates all the accused of any misconduct, clearly dispels any suspicion with regard to their involvement in this unfortunate incident. Anand Kumar v. State of M. P., AIR 2009 SC 2155 : 2009 (2) SCR 775 (56) : 2009 (3) SCC 799 : 2009 (2) JT 662 (SC) : 2009 (3) Scale 1 (SC) : 2009 (2) Supreme 72 (SC) : 2009 (1) Crimes 383 (SC) : 2009 (2) JCC 1092 (SC).

10. Wife subjected to harassment in connection with demand to give consent for husbands' second marriage—Abetment of suicide.—The accused was subjected the deceased to harassment and cruelty by persistently partnering her to give consent for the second marriage. The deceased being frustrated, administered poison to her three minor children and committed suicide. It was held that the deceased committed suicide was but for act of accused and therefore ingredients of Sec. 306, IPC were attracted. State of Karnataka v. Anni Poojary, 2005 Cr LJ 2662 (Kant) : 2005 (2) DMC 152 : AIR 2005 Kant HCR 1193 : 2005 (2) Hindu LR 293.

The prosecution has specifically alleged that the day prior to the date of commission of suicide by the deceased, the deceased was tortured by the appellant, Anita and the other accused persons present in the house of the appellant, as a result of which the deceased committed suicide on the next day. On a perusal of the record of the present case, we find that both the trial Court as well as the High Court have disbelieved the said incident as, according to them, the statement of the witnesses to establish the said fact are not reliable and trustworthy. Those findings recorded by the trial Court and the High Court have not been challenged before us. It is not the case of the prosecution that the case in hand would fall within the ambit of clause firstly of Explanation 1 to Sec. 107, IPC.

It is pertinent to note that the appellant had brought Anita to stay with him at his house three months prior to the date of the death of the deceased. If the deceased had been so perturbed by the act of the appellant in marrying the said Anita and in bringing her to his house that she felt impelled to commit suicide then she could have done so on the very day when Anita had come to stay with the appellant in his house as naturally at that point of time her annoyance or dismay with life would have been at its pinnacle. From the period of three months which elapsed in between the incidents of the appellant bringing Anita to his house and the deceased committing suicide, it can be clearly inferred that it was not the act of the appellant which instigated or provoked the deceased to commit suicide.

The perpetration of physical torture on the deceased on the day prior to the date of the incident which led the deceased to commit suicide is the prosecution case all throughout. It is nowhere the case of the prosecution that the appellant had played any active role either in instigating or aiding the commission of suicide by the deceased for denying to accept Anita as the wife of the appellant. Anita, the second wife of the appellant was brought by the appellant to his house about three months prior to the date of the incident of suicide by the deceased and, therefore, bringing of the second wife to the house by the appellant cannot be said to have either incited or facilitated the commission of suicide by the deceased. It is also not the case of the prosecution as disclosed from the evidence led which we have scrutinised very minutely. The aforesaid contention, in our considered opinion, is far-fetched and is not established by the facts of the present case. After carefully assessing the evidence on record we find that there is no direct evidence to show that the appellant had by his acts instigated or provoked the deceased to commit suicide and has not done any act which could be said to have facilitated the commission of suicide by the deceased.

From the evidence on record available before us, we find that the prosecution witnesses have in their testimonies stated that the deceased was tortured both physically and mentally by the appellant for the first time after his marriage with the deceased when he was refused permission for marriage with said Anita by the deceased. On having been refused the permission for his second marriage with Anita, the appellant again, after a few days requested the deceased to accede to his request for marriage with Anita, which request was again refused by the deceased. Consequent to the said position and due to the adamant position taken by the deceased, cruelty was meted out to her by the accused which fact is sufficiently proved from the evidence on record. Therefore, we find no reason to take a different view than what has been taken by the trial Court and the High Court as far as Sec. 498-A, IPC is concerned. Amalendu Pal alias Jhantu vs State of West Bengal, 2009 AIR SCW 7070 : AIR 2010 SC 512

11. Acquittal.—Death was by 10% burning and suicide was alleged—Demand of dowry—Allegation was of consistent cruelty and harassment. There was found no cogent proof of such allegation. There being no proximate cause of homicide, offence was not proved. Hence acquittal upheld. State of M.P. v. Shivujan Singh, (1995) 1 CCR 262 (MP) (DB).

Girl committing suicide on being threatened by her erstwhile lover that as she refused to marry him he would destroy her and her family. Her lover having in his possession photographs of deceased with him.

The first question, which is required to be decided is, whether there is prima facie case against parents of the petitioner. The prosecution case shows that the parents made phone calls to the complainant and sought his appointment. They obviously were trying to push forward the marriage proposal of their son with deceased Rani. But, their attempt got scuttled at the very inception. Rani promptly made her mind clear to them, telling them that she would not marry their son. Making an attempt to push a marriage proposal of their son to the bride's parents is not a criminal activity. There is nothing on record to show that the parents met Rani to pressurize for agreeing to marry their son. Even the suicide note does not blame them. Rani in her suicide note did not utter a single word against the parents. The petitioners parents as discussed earlier, met two prosecution witnesses namely More and Dalvi for requesting them to act as mediators for pushing their proposal with the complainant and his family. There is nothing on record even to suggest that the petitioners parents tried to misuse the photographs for pressurizing Rani or her parents. Devesh Dattabhau Pathrikar & Ors. vs. State of Maharashtra, 2010 (3) CriLJ 3560 (Bombay) (Aurangabad).

Husband ill-treating his wife on false allegation of illicit relations with his younger brother and instigated her to commit suicide. When report of missing was lodged by brother of deceased, he did not express any kind of doubt against accused. Allegation of illicit relation could not be proved by leading cogent and convincing evidence. Held, presumption under S. 113A of Evidence Act cannot be invoked and conviction of accused liable to be set aside. Bhup Ram vs State of Himachal Pradesh, 2010 (4) CriLJ 4035 (HP).

Three of the accused have been acquitted and that no appeal against their acquittal has been filed is admitted on record. It is also clear from the impugned judgments that the Courts have relied heavily on the letter to support the finding of conviction against the appellant. This letter was sought to be proved in evidence by Ram Prasad, the father of the deceased, to whom it had been addressed.

This except from his evidence cannot be said to be proof of the document as no statement was made that he recognized the handwriting or the signature of the appellant. Moreover, this letter had not been produced before the police during the course of the initial investigation and had been handed over to the police after several months. This fact, as also a reading of the letter, indicates that this was a concocted piece of evidence and the work of a legal mind, as no person would write such a letter meeting all legal requirements for implicating himself and his near relatives, in a claim for Dowry.

Admittedly, the conviction of the appellant has been recorded under Sec. 306 which is relatable to Sec. 113-A and though the presumption against an accused has to be raised therein as well, the onus is not as heavy as in the case of a dowry death. In this background, Ms. Makhija's arguments that the onus shifts exclusively and heavily on an accused in such cases is not entirely correct and in the background of sketchy ocular evidence and the additional fact that the dying declaration recorded by the Naib Tehsildar completely exonerates all the accused of any misconduct, clearly dispels any suspicion with regard to their involvement in this unfortunate incident. Anand Kumar vs. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 2155 : 2009 (3) SCC 799 : 2009 (1) Crimes 383 : 2009 (2) SCR 775 : 2009 (2) JT 662 : 2009 (3) Scale 1 : 2009 (2) Supreme 72 : 2009 (2) JCC 1092.

Acquittal of husband of deceased-wife—When valid. The prosecution examined six witnesses including Shrirang, the father of the deceased, Vimal, the mother of the deceased and Smt. Nirmala, the elder sister of the deceased. The trial Court found that demand of gold ring by mother-in-law and cruelty to deceased on account of non satisfaction of the demand was proved only against mother-in-law. It was found that Anita had committed suicide. Accordingly, mother-in-law was convicted as afore-noted and rest of the accused persons were acquitted. As noted above, Suman challenged the conviction whereas the State challenged the acquittal of rest of the accused persons.

Learned Counsel for the appellant submitted that the trial Court had rightly held that in letter there was nothing to implicate the present appellant. Therefore, his acquittal was correct, but the High Court on erroneous reading of the document has directed conviction.

Learned Counsel for the State on the other hand supported the order. In the letter on which both the trial Court and the High Court have relied upon to conclude one way or the other, reference is made to several earlier letters. It specifically refers to the demand by mother-in-law of a gold ring. There is no reference to the present appellant in the letter.

The evidence of father, mother and sister is also relevant. Father has stated that except above letter he had not received any letter and the statement in the letter to the effect that the deceased had earlier sent 2/3 letters is correct. If on one hand he says that he had not received any letter, the question of not replying to them does not arise. Similarly, mother has stated that she cannot say whether there was any demand of in letter. Elder sister has accepted that deceased had written to her father that mother-in-law Suman was demanding gold ring in the letter.

Learned Counsel for the State submitted that there is some reference to money in the letter. The sentence is being read out of context. The deceased had written in the letter that she may have to get a gold ring but wherefrom will she get the money for buying it. Therefore, there is no reference to any demand of money by the present appellant. That being so, the High Court was not justified in upsetting the judgment of the trial Court. The impugned judgment of the High Court is set aside and that of the trial Court is restored. Vijay vs. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2009 (SC) 1217 : 2009 (2) SCC 87 : 2009 (1) Crimes 178 (SC) : 2009 (16) SCR 890 : 2009 (1) SLT 313 : 2009 (1) JCC 113.

Accused caught hold of deceased and asked to have sexual intercourse—She refused and then accused molested her but no sexual intercourse committed—After one hour of this incident she set herself on fire by pouring kerosene—There being no intention or positive act part of accused to instigate her for suicide. The accused persons caused persistent humiliation to deceased by saying that she had committed theft in a marriage ceremony of some relative. The accused were held entitled to the acquittal. Neelam v. State, 2003 Cr LJ (NOC) 160 (AP) : 2002(2) Andh LT (Cri) AP 186 : 2003(2) DMC 268.

Deceased committed by pouring Kerosene oil on body and setting herself on fire. The act of the deceased, according to prosecution was the result of the fact that she was ravished forcibly by the accused who cohabilitated with her regularly intimidating her. She had conceived and her pregnancy was terminated. It was held that the particular behaviour of accused in past though not substantiated by legal evidence on record, could not be taken into consideration as instigating, adding or abetting deceased to commit suicide. It was further held that there was no evidence to show that on the day of occurrence the accused had met deceased and had attempted to have sexual intercourse with her, and therefore, he could not be convicted under Section 306, IPC. Nagendra Singh v. State of Jharkhand, 2004 Cr LJ (NOC) 79 (Jharkhand) : AIR 2004 Jhar HCR 536.

Deceased widow committed suicide by burning herself after 5 months of her marriage. Her husband already expired of heart ailment after two months of marriage. In-laws of widow had demanded Rs. 40,000/- for treatment of her husband as financial assistance—Such demand cannot be said as unlawful—Wife was not harassed for such demand—After death of husband widow faced pathetic situation and this could have driven her to commit suicide. Hence acquittal of in-law-accused respondents was held fully justified. State of M.P. v. Keval Chandra, (1995) 4 CCR 135 (MP).

In a Supreme Court case the deceased bride committed suicide within two and half months after marriage. Letters written by deceased to her parents and friend did not support the case of prosecution that deceased was subjected to torture and harassment or was being taunted for not bringing car in dowry. The suicide note did not contain any statement which could be used against the accused. It was held that accused, father-in-law and mother-in-law were entitled to the acquittal. Gurucharan Kumar v. State of Rajasthan, 2003 Cr LJ 1234 (SC) : AIR 2003 (SC) 992 : 2003(2) SCC 698 : 2003(1) Supreme 165 : 2003(1) Crimes 329 (SC).

In an AP case where the accused had alleged that the deceased wife was unfit for conjugal happiness, the mere fact that some panchayat was held in that regard was held not sufficient to attract the provisions of Section 306 or 107, IPC. The prosecution evidence was vague and did not inspire confidence of Court. It was further held the allegation that the deceased wife was unfit for conjugal happiness could not be said to amount to harassment falling under "cruelty within the meaning of Section 498A and, therefore, the acquittal was proper. Public Prosecutor, High Court v. Jangili Sammaiah, 2004 Cr LJ 4489 (AP) : 2004(2) ALD (CRI) 579 : 2004(4) All Cri LR 836.

Charge of abetting the commission of suicide by wife—Conviction under Section 306, I.P.C. and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for 5 years—Also convicted under Section 498-A and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for one year which was challenged in revision petition. It was held that the prosecution relied on dying declaration and testimony of prosecution witnesses. Mere statement of deceased in medico legal report is not reliable. The dying declaration should be recorded in question and answer form. The doctor should obtain signature of thumb-impression of such patient in case the patient is not able to do so and a note should be given in the report. Hence the dying declaration allegedly made by the deceased to the Doctor as mentioned in medico-legal report cannot be relied upon. The benefit of doubt goes to the appellant. Harcharan v. State of Haryana, (1994) 3 CC Cases 70 (P & H).

In a Rajasthan case deceased along with accused allegedly had gone to mandi samiti for selling their agricultural produce and received the sale proceeds, though produce belonged to accused. The accused received the sale proceeds from the deceased who was found in the adjoining village. When the deceased told the accused persons that on account of situation, in which he had landed he would have to die. The accused persons allegedly replied that it did not matter to them. It was held that such a dialogue could not amount to abetment of suicide. Shiv Dan Ram v. State of Rajasthan, 2005 Cr LJ 36 (Raj).

In a Bombay case the prosecution wanted the Court to believe that the words "Whether you shall take or I shall take" only suggest that they refer to consuming of passion. The witnesses did not narrate whether the version was repeatedly altered and what were the words prior or latter. Held, on reference that offer by the husband that would he consume poison and prefer to die, instead of her witnessing the husband to consume poison and die. However, that alone could not be considered to be consequence of such utterance. The evidence on record was not sufficient to conclude proof of abetment. Shankar Vishwanath Kalhe v. State of Maharashtra, 2006 Cr LJ 1534 (Bom).

When accused husband is guilty of harassing his wife on account of dowry and abetting her to commit suicide, there should be leniency in sentence to accused. Ashok Kumar v. State of Haryana, 1997 Cri LJ 1379 (P&H).

14. Suicide by newly married women.—When harassment by accused husband is proved by dying declaration and evidence of prosecution witnesses accused liable to be convicted under Sections 306 and 498-A, I.P.C. Public Prosecutor High Court of A.P. v. Mohd. Hoshan, 1996 Cri LJ 2834 (AP).

15. Suicide by Wife.—In the present case, looking at the evidence available on record , the learned Sessions Judge has rightly observed that no case of dowry demand or abetment is made and he has given cogent reasons in acquitting the accused respondents of the charges for the offence under Section 304B, 498-A and 306. IPC. The most important fact, which was discussed by the learned Sessions Judge, is that no report was lodged by the parents of the deceased, though they were present and this circumstance goes against the prosecution and rather shows that there was no dowry demand or torture by accused respondents and that is why they did not lodge report, Had there been any case of dowry demand or torture by accused respondents, certainly PW-7 Galbaji, who is father of the deceased, would have lodged the report with the police when has admitted that when he came SHO and PW-6 Vimal Kumar Jain, SDO were there and they recorded his statement. In these circumstances, this Court does not want to interfere with the impugned judgment and order of acquittal passed by the learned Sessions Judge, Jalore, as they are based on correct appreciation of evidence and especially keeping in mind the powers of the High Court while dealing with the appeal against acquittal. State of Rajasthan v. Kesa and others, 2002 Cri LJ 432. Raj. : 2002(3) All Cri R 430 : 2002(2) Hindu LR 200.

All that was alleged in the FIR or even at the stage of investigation was that there were frequent quarrels between the husband and wife sometimes resulting in physical assault, on account of the husband being addicted to consumption of 'Bhang' and the other allegation that the accused was aggrieved of the fact that his sister was not being properly treated by her husband who was brother of the deceased was also appeared to be untrue, it was held that the presumption under Section 113A of the Evidence Act could not be invoked to find the accused guilty of the offence under Section 306, IPC. It was further held that having regard to the facts of the case, though the prosecution failed to establish the offence under Section 306, IPC, the evidence on record justified the conviction of the accused under Section 498A, IPC. Hans Raj v. State of Haryana, 2004 Cr LJ 1759 : AIR 2004 SC 2790 : 2004(3) Crimes 11 (SC) : 2004(3) JT 45 : 2004(3) Supreme 676 : 2004(1) JCC 650.

16. Bride burning.—Co-accused are entitled to benefit of doubt where there is neither any specific evidence against them nor any act was done by them in furtherance of common intention and his appearance of evidence is caused by them when guilt of husband is proved beyond doubt. Deepak v. State of Maharashtra, 1995 CrLJ 2219 (Bom).

In absence of any trace of kerosene on spot in room or its small on clothes and body of deceased, second dying declaration of deceased wife in presence of her several relations that appellant burned her by pouring kerosene, is not reliable as it may be based on advice of her relations. Changala Jaya Sankara Rao v. State of A.P., 1997 (1) Crimes 122 (AP).

In a case where accused are charged of the offence under Sec. 498-A and Sec. 302 there should be no difficulty for the Court to convict the accused under Sec. 306 if the basic ingredients of the offence under Sec. 306 of IPC are established by the prosecution even without framing a charge under that section. What is material and relevant, is that the prosecution should establish that the accused had enough notice of the allegations which could form the basis for conviction under Sec. 306 of IPC. In a bride burning case there could be or could not be any eye-witness and if there is no direct evidence the Courts have to base the order of conviction either under Sec. 302 or under Sec. 306 of IPC on the basis of circumstantial evidence. Motive for committing murder and basic ingredients of the offence under Sec. 306 of IPC in such cases could be one and the same. In both the cases the accused would make every effort to disprove the case of the prosecution under Sec. 498-A, namely, that neither any demand of dowry was made nor any gifts or presents or money was received by the accused at a subsequent stage or that he subjected the deceased to cruelty for the same or for any other reason. In other words, the accused would try to disprove the motive if a charge is under Sec. 302 and/or to establish that the ingredients of the offence under Sec. 306 do not exist. The motive for conviction either under Sec. 302 or the basic ingredients to establish charge under Sec. 306 of the IPC in a case of bride burning would be common and, therefore, the conviction under Sec. 306 of IPC can safely be recorded and same would not result in failure of justice in any manner even if the charge under Sec. 306 was not framed and the accused was tried only under Sec. 302 r/w Sec. 498-A of IPC. There is absolutely no reason and ground as to why the trial Court cannot frame alternative charge under Sec. 306 of IPC in a case of bride burning particularly where the accused are charged under Sec. 498-A also. As a matter of fact, if the facts and circumstances demand, the trial Court should frame alternative charge under Sec. 306 also so as to keep the accused on guard and make him aware that there could be a conviction under Sec. 306 even if a charge under Sec. 302 of IPC is not established. Kisan and Ors. v. State of Maharashtra, 2007 CriLJ 130 (Bom).

17. Cruelty and abetment of suicide.—The basic difference between the two Sections 306 and Section 498A is that of intention, under the latter, cruelty committed by the husband or his relations drag the woman concerned to commit suicide, while under the former provision suicide is abetted and intended. Sushil Kumar Sharma v. Union of India, 2005 Cr LJ 3439 (SC) : 2005(6) SCC 281 : 2005(5) Supreme 137 : 2005 SCC (Cr) 1473 : 2005(2) JCC 1193.

Cruelty—Second Marriage—Scope.—Accused treated wife with cruelty for bringing insufficient dowry and also performed another marriage. Statement of witnesses showed that bigamy was in vogue in that place and was recognized as custom.

The proceeding under Section 125 Cr.P.C was compromised between the accused and Sangya Devi wife and at their instance consent order was passed by learned Chief Judicial Magistrate. The learned Sessions Judge has also observed that in view of second marriage of appellant with Sumitra Devi the accused has abetted the suicide of Sangya Devi. Sangya Devi was aware of the marriage of Sumitra Devi with accused and the fact that the accused had married second time with Sumitra Devi has been pleaded in the maintenance application. The maintenance application was prepared on 25.5.1999 and Sangya Devi had committed suicide in the intervening night of 26/27.08.1999. Therefore, it cannot be said that second marriage of accused with Sumitra Devi is the immediate cause of committing suicide by Sangya Devi and in other words by second marriage the accused had abetted suicide of Sangya Devi.

It has come on record that in the area to which the accused and Sangya Devi belong, it is not uncommon for a male to solemnize more than one marriage. Psyche of individual is influenced by the culture of the society in which he or she lives. PW-2 Shyama Nand aged 82 years who remained member of Gram Panchayat has stated that bigamy is prevalent in Kinnaur District and is recognized by custom as well. It is thus clear that for a male to have more than one wife was a part of custom and culture of the society of accused and deceased. In these circumstances, it cannot be said that the second marriage of the accused was the cause for Sangya Devi to commit suicide and for this reason appellant cannot be blamed to have abetted the suicide of Sangya Devi. The prosecution has not brought on record evidence so as to bring the case within the ambit of abetment as provided in Section 107 IPC. Surendra Kumar vs. State of HP, 2010 (2) CriLJ 1356 (HP).

This Court do not think that this expression is such a strong expression that the courts could come to the conclusion that it was only and only because of the behaviour and the treatment of the accused to the deceased that she was driven to commit suicide. This takes us to the other letter which has been proved by its author. When we see that letter it becomes clear that the husband of the deceased had become a drunkard. This is a letter written by a loving sister to her younger brother and his wife to mend their ways. She had advised her brother not to drink and not to start humiliating quarrels and fighting. True, it is stated to the effect that the mother should be comfortable and she should be made happy and the mother did not know how to talk and all of them had suffered the pain because of the talks of their mother. However, the daughter is careful enough to write that it should not be taken seriously and nobody should feel about it, and being the mother she should be ignored. This witness has written in the letter that Amma may say something without knowing consequence of the same. We do not think that this letter which has painted the accused with black brush is sufficient to hold that she was so bad and she ill-treated the deceased so much that the deceased was driven to commit suicide only because of these factors.

In the matter of offence under Sec. 306, IPC we would expect much stronger evidence than what is presented. True it is that the evidence about what happens within the four corners of walls is not available to the Investigating Agency. But in this case, very strangely, the Investigating Agency has not proceeded against the husband against whom there was a very strong suspicion. The Investigating Agency has instead made a scapegoat of the old mother perhaps trying to rely on the age old concept of bickerings between the mother-in-law and daughter-in-law. That is not the universal truth. The courts below should have therefore in such a matter appreciated the evidence with discerning eyes. The evidence should have been weighed with more care and the finding should have been arrived at that for but such ill-treatment by the accused, the deceased would not have committed suicide. Such would be the standard of proof in the matter under Sec. 306, IPC. It is indisputable true that the Court has to appreciate the evidence with open mind and not being driven by the age old concepts. Applying all these principles we find that the evidence falls short of the required standard of proof. We are, therefore, not in a position to agree with the courts below in so far as their findings are concerned. Mankamma vs State of Kerala, 2009 AIR SCW 7053 : 2010 CrLJ 389 (SC) : AIR 2010 SC 499

The charges under Sections 306 and 498-A of the IPC are independent of each other. Under Section 498-A of the IPC, the cruelty is committed by the husband and his relations dragging the woman to commit suicide. While under Section 306 of the IPC, suicide is abetted and intended [Giridhar Shankar Tawade vs. State of Maharashtra, 2002 (5) SCC 177 = 2002 Cri LJ 2814, referred to]. However, in the statutory provision under Section 498-A of the IPC, two specific instances have been taken note of in order to ascribe a meaning to the word "cruelty", where explanation (a) involves three specific situations viz. (1) to drive a woman to commit suicide, or (2) to cause grave injury, or (3) to cause danger to life, limb or health, both mental and physical. In explanation (b) there is an absence of physical injury that includes coercive harassment which obviously is equally heinous to match the physical injury, where one is patent, the other one is latent, but equally serious in terms of the provisions of the statute since same would also embrace the attributes of cruelty in terms of Section 498-A of the IPC. Jamnalal Pande vs. State of MP, 2010 (1) CrLJ 538 (MP).

The only thing which can be gathered from the entire evidence available on record happens to be that the victim was hypersensitive to ordinary petulance, discord and differences in domestic life which are quite common in the society and all these things are not expected to have induced her to take such an extreme step. Thus unfortunately, even if the entire case of the prosecution is taken as it is, ingredients of Section 107 of the Indian Penal Code are amiss in toto for the obvious reason that none of the witnesses examined in this case including the mother, father and brother of the deceased has made any specific allegation against the appellants except that they used to pass taunt against the deceased branding her to be of weaker mental faculty and not well-versed with the house-hold matters such as cooking etc. which cannot at all be termed as abetment. Speaking legally, the abetment or instigation literally means to goad, urge forward, provoke, incite or encourage to do an act, which if applied in the instant case, conviction for abetment appears to be a distant and envious neighbour and the same is liable to receive a forceful jolt.

Now let's turn to conviction under Section 498-A, IPC. It is not in dispute that the deceased had stepped in the house of the accused/appellants as a bride 17 years prior to the date of incident. Prosecution has not brought forth any material to show that the deceased was subjected to cruelty at the hands of the accused/appellants as is provided under Section 498-A, IPC. The taunts made by the accused/appellants to the deceased for not knowing the household work and that of her being a woman of weaker mental faculty as has been deposed by the witnesses in their evidence, cannot be construed to be cruelty in accordance with Section 498-A, IPC. Murlidhar Sahu & Anr vs State of Chhattisgarh, 2010 Cri LJ 1599 (Chattisgarh).

Accused person in-laws of deceased ill-treated her on account of non-fulfillment of dowry demand due to which deceased committed suicide. Evidence of prosecution witnesses viz., brother, parents and aunt was consistent.

The victim committed suicide. Such fact was proved by medical evidence. Inquest report proved that she committed suicide in her in-laws' place. In our considered view, he appellants being her in-laws were duty-bound to unfold the narrative, which was within their special knowledge. The appellants did not do so while being examined under Section 313. They did not even adduce any evidence. The Appellant No. 1 on the other hand tried to make aspertion on the victim that she had extra marital affair, although the defence did not lead any evidence on that score. The other accused Urmila could not check her grievance and categorically stated that they did not get any gold out of dowry.

The learned Judge held the appellants' guilty under Section 304-B/498-A of Indian Penal Code. Taking a sum total of the facts, followed by consistent evidence of witnesses being corroborated by each other, we do not find any scope to hold it otherwise, specially in case of appellants. We, however, find that the evidence on record which is held reliable to convict the appellants for the offence under Section 498-A of Indian Penal Code clearly makes out a case for offence of abetting suicide under Section 306 of ndian Penal Code with the aid of Section 113-A of the Evidence Act, 1872. The facts of his case do not support the conviction of the appellants under Section 304-B of Indian Penal Code. Jhantu Sardar and Ors. vs. State of West Bengal, 2010 (3) Cri LJ 3012 (Cal).

18. Essential to constitute offence.—The deceased was undoubtedly hype ensitive to ordinary petulance, discord and differences which happen in our day-to-c life. Human sensitivity of each individual differs from the other. Different people beh differently in the same situation.

The intention of the Legislature and the ratio of the cases decided by this Court clear that in order to convict a person under Section 306, IPC there has to be a cl mens rea to commit the offence. It also requires an active act or direct act which led t deceased to commit suicide seeing no option and this act must have been intended push the deceased into such a position that he committed suicide.

In the light of the provisions of law and the settled legal positions crystallized by series of judgments of this Court, the conviction of the appellant cannot be sustain Consequently, the appeal filed by the appellant is allowed and disposed of. Gang Mohan Reddy vs. State of Andhra Pradesh, 2010 (2) CrLJ 2110 (SC).

Abetment involves a mental process of instigating a person or intentionally aidi that person in doing of a thing. In cases of conspiracy also it would involve that men process of entering into conspiracy for the doing of that thing. More active role whi can be described as instigating or aiding the doing of a thing it required before a pers can be said to be abetting the commission of offence under Sec. 306 of IPC. Kishang Mangalgiri Goswami vs. State of Gujarat, AIR 2009 SC 1808 : 2009 CrLJ 1720 : 2009 SCC 52 : 2009 (2) JT 84 : 2009 (2) Scale 31 : 2009 (1) Supreme 491 : 2009 (1) SLT 69

19. Mental imbalance.—To convict a person for an offence under Section 306, I it has to be seen that instigation to do a particular thing must be there. 'Instigati literally means provocation, incitement, urge or persuasion to do any thing. In t present case none of the witnesses had made even a whisper that the deceased w abetted by the appellant to commit suicide. Most of the witnesses including the paren of the deceased have stated that the deceased was not having mental equilibrium ev before marriage and was receiving treatment for the same. Thus it can be presum that the deceased might have taken such extreme step at the cost of her life under t influence of mental imbalance. Even according to the statement of witness, father deceased, once the accused/appellant had written a letter to him requesting to visit h and solve the problem as the deceased was not obeying his instructions. The enti evidence brought on record goes to show that the deceased was not actuated by a abetment to end her life by committing suicide rather it is the mental imbalance whi drove her to do so. Madhukar vs State of Madhya Pradesh (now Chhattisgarh), 2010 (LJ 1623 (Chha).

20. Mental torture.—In the present case, the charge against the appellant is th he along with other two accused "in furtherance of common intention", menta tortured Jitendra Sharma (the deceased) and abetted him to commit suicide by the sa act of mental torture. It is trite that words uttered on the spur of the moment or in quarrel, without something more cannot be taken to have been uttered with mens re The onus is on the prosecution to show the circumstances which compelled th deceased to take an extreme step to bring an end to his life. In the present case, apa from the suicide note, extracted above, statements recorded by the police during th course of investigation, tend to show that on account of business transactions with th accused, including the appellant herein, the deceased was put under tremendou pressure to do something which he was perhaps not willing to do. Prima facie, it appears that the conduct of the appellant and his accomplices was such that the deceased was left with no other option except to end his life and, therefore, clause firstly of Sec. 107 of the IPC was attracted.

In the light of the material on record, in our judgment, it cannot be said that the trial Court was in error in drawing an inference that the appellant had "instigated" the deceased to commit suicide and, therefore, there was ground for presuming that the appellant has committed an offence punishable under Sec. 306 read with Sec. 34, IPC. It is trite that at the stage of framing of charge, the Court is required to evaluate the material and documents on record with a view to finding out if the facts emerging therefrom, taken at their face value, disclose the existence of all the ingredients constituting the alleged offence or offences. For this limited purpose, the Court may sift the evidence as it cannot be expected even at the initial stage to accept as gospel truth all that the prosecution states. At this stage, the Court has to consider the material only with a view to find out if there is ground for "presuming" that the accused has committed an offence and not for the purpose of arriving at the conclusion that it is not likely to lead to a conviction. See Niranjan Singh Karam Singh Punjabi & Ors. v. Jitendra Bhimraj Bijja & Ors., AIR 1990 SC 1962.

In view of the settled legal position, noted above, we are convinced that the trial Court was correct in law in coming to the conclusion that a case for framing charge against the appellant had been made out. Similarly, the scope of revisional powers of the High Court under Sec. 401 of the Code being limited, the High Court was justified in dismissing the Revision Petition, preferred by the appellant. Chitresh Kumar Chopra vs State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), 2010 AIR SCW 645 : AIR 2010 SC 1446.

The concurrent findings were found against the appellant, however, in the interest of justice, we again carefully examined the entire evidence and documents on record. The evidence of Sushmna PW. 6 (neighbour of the deceased), Vidhya PW. 7 (sister of the deceased) and Vasant PW. 8 (father of the deceased) clearly lead to the only conclusion that this was a case of extreme mental cruelty which was perpetuated from the point of marriage and lasted till the deceased had committed suicide. There cannot be any iota of doubt that the extreme mental cruelty and torture compelled the deceased to put an end to her life. The appellant was wholly responsible for creating all the circumstances which led the deceased to take an extreme step of putting an end to her life.

The letter written by the deceased to her parents immediately before she had committed suicide, gives graphic description of the number of instances of extreme mental torture, day in and day out. This letter gives the impression that the appellant was deriving sadistic pleasure in causing extreme mental torture to the deceased. He would leave no stone unturned to ensure that the maximum mental torture and agony is caused to the deceased. We do not find the slightest doubt that the circumstances which have been enumerated in letter and the testimony of witnesses lead to a situation where the deceased virtually was left with no option except to take an extreme step of putting an end to her life. Milind Bhagwanrao Godse vs. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2009 SC 1828 : 2009 (3) SCC 699 : 2009 CrLJ 1736 : 2009 (1) Crimes 439 : 2009 (2) JT 574 : 2009 (2) SCR 39 : 2009 (2) Scale 621 : 2009 (2) Supreme 94 : 2009 (2) SLT 207 : 2009 (2) JCC 948.

21. "Abetment"—Meaning of.—Abetment involves a mental process of instigatin a person or intentionally aiding that person in doing a of thing. Kishangiri Mangalgi Goswami vs. State of Gujarat, AIR 2009 SC 1808 : 2009 CrLJ 1720 : 2009 (4) SCC 52 2009 (2) JT 84 : 2009 (2) Scale 31 : 2009 (1) Supreme 491 : 2009 (1) SLT 698.

22. Dowry Demand.—The accused married Kantaben (deceased). Soon after tw years of his marriage, the accused started in flicting mental and physical torture on he and she was taunted by the accused for not bringing sufficient dowry in the marriage He also demanded from the victim an amount of Rs. 40,000/- for the purpose o purchasing a house. He even wrote letters to the in-laws and demanded Rs. 40,000/ for purchasing the house. The demand was persistent. Even threats were administere to the deceased and her family members. Thus, the accused inflicted mental an physical torture on the victim which prompted her to commit suicide by burning hersel after pouring kerosene on her body. Thus, as per the prosecution case, the appellan has committed the offence punishable under Secs. 498-A and 306 IPC read with Secs. 3 and 7 of Dowry Prohibition Act.

The complaint was given by Dhulagiri Gumangiri Goswami on 17.05.1999. On the strength of the complaint given by the complainant investigation was carried out.

It is pointed about that the accused himself had taken the deceased to the hospita and from his conduct it clearly shows that the accused was not guilty. In essence, it is submitted that the commission of alleged offences has not been established by the prosecution.

The conviction so far as it relates to Sec. 306 IPC, therefore, cannot be sustained in view of the background facts and is set aside. But the materials on record particularly the letters on which specific emphasis has been led by the trial Court and the High Court amply demonstrate the commission of offences punishable under Sec. 498-A IPC and Sec. 3 of DP Act. The convictions are sustained. But the sentence in respect of Sec. 3 of DP Act is reduced to three years. Kishangiri Mangalgiri Goswami v. State of Gujarat, AIR 2009 SC 1808 : 2009 CrLJ 1720 : 2009 (4) SCC 52 : 2009 (2) JT 84 : 2009 (2) Scale 31 : 2009 (1) Supreme 491 : 2009 (1) SLT 698.

No evidence of dowry. In order to sustain conviction under Sec. 306, IPC, it must, therefore, be proved by the prosecution that there was abetment of suicide. According to the allegations of the complainant and the case of the prosecution, the deceased was instigated to commit suicide by constant harassment in connection with demand of Rs. one lac and motorcycle by the appellant and his mother. In the present case the prosecution has failed to prove that deceased was subjected to cruelty or harassment by the appellant in connection with the demand of dowry. The statements of prosecution witnesses are inconsistent, contradictory and unreliable. It would be pertinent to mention here that presumption under Sec. 113A of the Indian Evidence Act cannot be taken as the marriage of the deceased was not solemnized within a period of seven years before her death. Accused not liable to be convicted for offences under Sections 304B, 306 and 498A. Suresh Kumar alias Sushil and etc. v. State of Rajasthan, 2006 CriLJ 116 (Raj).

Suicide by woman within 7 years and cruelty by husband does not automatically give rise to presumption. Having regard to the principles aforesaid, we may now advert to the fact of the present case. Here is a case where the evidence on record discloses that the deceased wanted to be married in a literate family. She was not happy with the fact that her husband was illiterate and also with the status and condition of the family of her husband. She was also required to do some domestic work as the family was poor, for which she was not happy. The deceased was of the view point that her life has been spoiled by marrying appellant. The letter reflects the attitude of the in-laws of the deceased towards the deceased. In the said letter there was no reference of any act or incident whereby the appellants were alleged to have committed any wilful act or omission or intentionally aided or instigated the deceased to commit suicide.

On such slender evidence, therefore, we are not persuaded to invoke the presumption under Sec. 113-A of the Evidence Act to find the appellant guilty of the offence under Sec. 306 IPC.

The next question which remains forour consideration is whether an offence is made out under Sec. 498A of IPC. Though the letter allegedly written by the deceased mentions the fact that the attitude of the family was not good towards the deceased and she was not treated well but there is no mention about any of such incident. Witnesses in their statements have emphasized that the mother-in-law of the deceased used to ask the deceased to run hand driven flourmill to which she was not habitual. In the year 1988 when the abovementioned incident occurred, the hand driven flourmills were generally used by women in the poor families in the villages and even till today one may find use of the same in some villages in the country. Thus asking one to run the same at that point of time may not amount to an act of cruelty.

In the said statements there is also a mention of an incident where the deceased had been beaten by her husband. The mother-in-law cannot be held liable for the said act; rather there is evidence on record of PW3 who had stated that mother-in-law had once restrained her son. Though in the statement of PW 1 there is mention of one or two incident when the present appellant had beaten the deceased but there appears to be possibility of embellishment. The father of the deceased (PW2), in his statement has not made any statement regarding cruelty being committed on his daughter in her in-laws house. After analyzing the said evidence and the statements made by PW1 and PW3 we are of the opinion that the benefit of doubt should be granted to mother-in-law. Rajbabu and Anr. v. State of M.P., AIR 2008 SC 3212 : 2008 (8) JT 250 (SC) : 2008 (10) Scale 437 (SC) : 2008 (5) Supreme 666 (SC) : 2008 (8) SLT 472 (SC) : 2008 (8) SRJ 119 (SC) : 2008 CrLJ 4301 (SC) : 2008 (3) Crimes 313 (SC) : 2008 (3) JCC 2013 (SC) : 2008 (3) Recent CR 890 (SC).

Dowry death/Abetment of suicide. Deceased was harassed by accused husband and mother-in-law for demand of dowry, died by consuming poison within seven years of her marriage. Accused husband sought financial assistance from his father-in-law for going abroad. Deceased was pressurized that her father should render financial help to accused husband who was in the need of money. Held, accused husband guilty of offence under S. 306 IPC and not under S. 304B. Amarjit Singh alias Mintu and Anr vs State of Punjab, 2010 (4) CriLJ 4134 (P&H).

23. Difference between Sec. 306 and 498-A.—One other provision which is relevant to be noted is Sec. 306, IPC. The basic difference between the two Sections i.e. Sec. 306 and Sec. 498-A is that of intention. Under the latter, cruelty committed by the husband or his relations drag the woman concerned to commit suicide, while under the ormer provision suicide is abetted and intended. Satish Kumar Batra and Ors. v. State f Haryana., AIR 2009 SC 2180 : 2009 (5) SCR 451 (SC) : 2009 (12) SCC 491 : 2009 (5) T 403 (SC) : 2009 (5) Scale 280 (SC) : 2009 (3) SLT 379 (SC) : 2009 CrLJ 2447 (SC) : 009 (2) JCC 1341 (SC).

24. Intention and mens rea for offence.—Accused and deceased earlier had love ffair. Subsequently deceased in clear terms severed her relationship with him.

Taking clues and the ratios quoted, the learned counsel appearing for the etitioners asserted that even though the case of prosecution is accepted as truthful, it annot be said that the petitioner intended to cause deceased Rani's death by suicide. Ie also pointed out that the last incident in the series had occurred on 16th December, bout two weeks prior to the unfortunate event. He pointed further that there is nothing n record to show that within those two weeks, the petitioner further provoked Rani or er family members. He said, there is no proximity between Rani's suicide and the ncident that had lastly occurred on 16th December. He, therefore, asserted that the etitioner cannot be said to have intention to cause Rani's suicidal death.

This Court think, this argument is rather superficial. As discussed above, the etitioner was persistently pushing his proposal to gel married to Rani? He, in the rocess, almost forgot that Rani no longer intended to marry him. Assuming that earlier e and Rani had romantic relationship and assuming that Rani expressed her love to im, ultimately Rani in clear terms severed her relationship with him and made it mply clear to him that she no longer wanted to marry him. Instead of accepting this, s the wish of his beloved and getting out of her way, the petitioner started blackmailing er. The last incident of 16th December clearly show that his intentions were cruel and evengeful. He, in clear terms, theatened Rani and her brother that he would destroy Rani and her family. Having realized that Rani would never marry him, the petitioner ntended to finished Rani's prospects of good life. In the process, if Rani succumbed to he pressure and commits suicide, apparently the petitioner would not have minded. Vhen the petitioner stated that he would destroy her, he clearly indicated all possible neans of Rani's destruction. It could be her defamation, it could be destroying her rospects of getting married through an arranged marriage, it could be her destroying er attempt to get a job and start a new life and it could be her death by any means. So, rima facie, it is seen that the petitioners intention was to finish Rani as a person. It an, therefore be said that the petitioner had intention and mens rea for committing the ffence under Section 306 of the Indian Penal Code. Held, it prima facie established that he petitioner intended by his acts inter alia the possibility of Rani committing suicide. Devesh Dattabhau Pathrikar & Ors. vs. State of Maharashtra, 2010 (3) CriLJ 3560 Bombay) (Aurangabad).

25. Conversion of offence under Sec. 302 to Sec. 306—Permissibility.—It is bvious that even though there is no specific charge framed and the offence under other ection is made out, the Court can record a finding under such a charge, which is unishable with lesser sentence for a cognate offence.

In a situation, where both the charges under Ss. 302, IPC and 306, IPC cannot be evelled against the accused, but, if the circumstances suggest conclusively that the ffence was sufficiently proved to the extent of the offence under S. 306, IPC, this Court, being an appellate Court, can always hold that the accused has committed an offence under Sec. 306, IPC and the conviction for the said offence can safely be recorded. Godugula Adellu v. State of A.P., 2008 CriLJ 206 (AP).

26. Mention of names of persons responsible in suicide note.—In order to substantiate a charge under Section 306 it has to be established that the person abetted must commit suicide. Death by commission of suicide must have been the desired object of the abettors; and with that in view they must have instigated, goaded, urged or encouraged the victim in commission of suicide. The instigation may be by provoking or inciting the person committing suicide and this instigation may be gathered by positive acts done by the abettors or by omission in the doing of a thing. Thus the acts or omission committed by the abettors immediately before the commission of suicide are vital. The mere fact that certain persons have been named in the suicidal note to be responsible for his death is not by itself a ground to fasten one with the charge of abetment. In terms of Section 107, it must prima facie appear to hold that that the person named in the suicide note to be responsible for commission of suicide has abetted in the act. The act for conduct of the accused, even if there may be any, however, insulting and abusive those may be, will not by themselves suffice to constitute abetment of commission of suicide, unless those are reasonably capable of suggesting that the accused intended by such acts consequence of suicide. Anil Kr. Sarkar v. The State of W. B. and Ors., 2009 CriLJ 4678 (Cal).

27. Abetment of unsuccessful attempt to commit suicide.—Merely because S. 306 opens with the words "if any person commits suicide" it cannot be held that in a case of unsuccessful suicide there is no attempt to abet the commission of suicide. The abetment becomes complete only when suicide is committed and Section 306, IPC principally would come into operation only when suicide successfully takes place. The content and character of an offence of attempt to commit suicide is qualitatively different from the attempt to abet the commission of suicide. Suicide and its attempt on the one hand and abetment of commission of suicide and its attempt on the other are treated differently by law and, therefore, the one who abet the commission of an unsuccessful attempt to commit suicide cannot be held to be punishable merely under Section 309 r/w. 116, IPC, to implement the scheme of law he has got to be held to be punishable under Section 306 r/w. 511, IPC. Berin P. Varghese and Ors. v. State of Kerala, 2008 CriLJ 1759 (Ker).

1. Amendment.—The words “imprisonment for life” were substituted for the word “transportation for life” by Act 26 of 1955, Section 117 and Sch. (with effect fror 1.1.1956). The clause within brackets has been added by the Indian Penal Cod Amendment Act, 1870 (27 of 1870), Section 11 and the words within quotations i Illustration (c) have been inserted by the Amending Act, 1891 (12 of 1891), Sch. II.

2. Attempt to murder.—To justify a conviction under Section 307, it is nc essential that bodily injury capable of causing death should have been inflictec Although the nature of injury actually caused may often give considerable assistance i coming to a finding as to the intention of the accused, such intention may also b deduced from other circumstances, and may even, in some cases, be ascertainec without any reference at all to actual wounds. The section makes a distinction betweer an act of the accused and its result, if any. Such an act may not be attended by an result so far as the person assaulted is concerned, but still there may be cases in whicl the culprit would be liable under this section. It is not necessary that the injury actuall caused to the victim of the assault should be sufficient under ordinary circumstances t cause the death of the person assaulted. What the Court has to see is whether the act irrespective of its result, was done with the intention or knowledge and unde circumstances mentioned in the section. An attempt in order to be criminal need not b the penultimate act. It is sufficient in law, if there is present an intent coupled witl some overt act in execution thereof. Whether there was intention to kill or knowledg that death will be caused is a question of fact and would depend on the facts of a giver case. The circumstances that the injury inflicted by the accused was simple or mino will not by itself rule out application of Section 307, IPC. The determinative question i intention or knowledge, as the case may be, and not nature of the injury. In the instan case the accused fired gun from a very close range of about 6-8 feet aiming at the victir when he was sleeping. The bullet broke into pieces and three such pieces struck th victim on his leg. Both intention and knowledge in terms of Section 307 can b attributed to the accused. Therefore, the High Court was justified in recordin conviction of the accused appellant under Section 307, IPC. Vasant Vithu Jadhav v State of Maharashtra, 2004 Cr LJ 1786: AIR 2004 SC 2678: 2004(9) SCC 31: 2004(3) J 267: 2004 (2) Suprme 351: 2004(2) Crimes 5 (SC).

Appellant had intention to commit murder as he threw full glass of acid on body c injured informant, causing extensive injury. Prosecution proved case beyond reasonabl doubts against appellant. He has rightly been found guilty under Sections 341, 323 326 and 307/34. Amar Soni & Anr vs State of Jharkhand, 2010 (4) CriLJ 4003 (Jhar).

This Court do find absolutely no reason to doubt the statements of witnesses witl regard to the incident. An independent witness in as much that he had been employe ith the complainant party as well as the accused party at various times. It also ppears that he was the focus of the quarrel and the motive that had precipitated the ncident, as both the parties were pushing for employing which had led to the npleasant situation between them. Likewise we find difficult to disbelieve the tatement of PW. 3 the injured victim himself as he has given a graphic description as o what had happened. It is true, as has been contended that there are some differences etween the statements of these two witnesses but they are bound to occur with the vidence being recorded after about five years. It must also be borne in mind that a arrot like deposition after a long lapse of time smacks of tutoring and some differences n fact advance the credibility of the witnesses. We also find that the counter version iven by the accused cannot be accepted. The accused has claimed that PW. 3 had an vil eye on Neelam Bahal but if that was the reason for the incident they were further alled upon to explain as to how the injuries had been suffered, more particularly, as he incident had apparently taken place outside the residential home of the appellants.

We are, however, of the opinion that there is some uncertainty about the nvolvement of Neelam Bahal, Appellant. The facts of the case indicate that she was erhaps not aware that Rakesh Bahal was carrying a weapon in his pocket or on his erson. The prosecution evidence also reveals that it was only after the quarrel had eached a certain pitch that he had rushed inside the house and had brought a knife nd caused the injuries to Satish Chandra. We also find that no specific overt act has een attributed to Neelam Bahal and only a very tenuous role that has been ascribed to er. To our mind this kind of evidence creates a clear doubt as to her participation.

We are, therefore, of the opinion that Neelam Bahal, Appellant must be given the enefit of doubt, and thereby acquitted. The appeal qua her is allowed.

A reading of the above would indicate that though the general condition of the atient was very bad yet there is no categorical statement in the medical certificate ssued by doctor that the injuries were in fact dangerous to life. We are unable to athom as to whether this was a deliberate omission or an oversight but whatsoever it nay be the benefit must accrue to the accused. We have also gone through the evidence f doctor and find that he had admitted that he had mentioned that the injury was langerous to the life as he did not think it necessary to do so. At the same time we are nable to accept that the case would fall under Sections 323 and 324 of the IPC but in he light of the statement of victim that he had remained in hospital for fifteen days due o the injuries caused to him, makes out a case of grievous hurt. Rakesh Bahal alone hould thus be held guilty under Section 326 of the IPC simpliciter. We are told that he as already undergone almost one year of the sentence and in the light of the fact that he incident happened in the year 1987 when he was a young man of about 25 and now nust be of middle age, we reduce the sentence to the period already undergone by him. Neelam Bahal and Anr. vs. State of Uttarakhand, 2010 (2) CrLJ 2100 (SC).

When complainant party protested against abuses, accused person took out sword and assaulted them causing injuries on various parts of their body. Evidence of vitnesses supported prosecution case narrating in detail as to the manner in which ictims were assaulted. Although doctors have not specifically stated regarding injuries ustained by victims to be serious in nature. But, fracture or dislocation of a bone or ooth are designated as grievous hurt in view of Sec. 320(7). Mukesh Rathore vs State of Chhattisgarh, 2010 Cri LJ 1289 (Chatt).

Petitioner who was holding iron rod in his hand and other accused inflicted blov causing injuries on head of informant and his son. The injuries sustained by the victim at the hands of the petitioners could not be denied as the factum of occurrence wa corroborated by several witnesses as has been referred in the order impugned recorde by the learned Additional Sessions Judge. It was not the case of the prosecution tha the accused persons had administered poison, rather the petitioner inflicted blow wit iron rod on his head in furtherance of common intention with the co-accused causin injuries having got bearing in the injury report as well as in the post-mortem report the deceased. However, the learned Counsel is silent as to the finding of pesticide in th stomach of the deceased in the viscera report furnished by the Forensic Scienc Laboratory which gives altogether a different circumstance as to the cause of death.

No offence in the given situation is made out under Section 302 or 307 of th Indian Penal Code against any of the petitioners and at best, it could be under Sectio 325 of the Indian Penal Code as the materials prima facie suggest without much mor discussion and without prejudice to the merit of the case. As regards complicity of th petitioner Rupa Devi in the alleged offence is concerned, her earlier version before th police suggests that it was Dhananjay Kumhar who was aggressor and, therefore, prim facie, charge under Section 325/34 of the Indian Penal Code cannot be, in my view directed against her and I find material sufficient to consider her case for discharge an accordingly she is discharged in Baghmara. For the reasons stated above, I find prim facie materials to proceed against other two petitioners for the charge under Sectio 325/ 34 of the Indian Penal Code. Anup Kumhar and Ors. vs. State of Jharkhand, 201 (3) Cri LJ 2963 (Jhar).

Under Section 307, IPC what the Court is to see is whether the act irrespective its result was done with the intention or knowledge and under circumstance mentioned in that section. The intention or knowledge of the accused must be such a is necessary to constitute murder. Without this ingredients being established, there ca be offence of 'attempt to murder' under Section 307, IPC the intention preceeds the a attributed to the accused. Therefore the intention is to be gathered from all th circumstances and not merely form the consequence that ensures. The prosecution ha utterly failed to place any material from which the intention or knowledge could b gathered that the appellant has done the act with the intention to commit the murde Rather, the medical report suggestes that the injuries are not so grievous in nature fro which it could be said that there was intention and knowledge of the appellant commit such murder. Meghnath De v. The State 1999 Cri LJ 2252.

Appellant caused injury on head of informant by Sabal. There was evidence witnesses and independent witness.

It appears that the prosecution case is in support of the evidence of informant ar independent witness and also the evidences of PWs. 1 and 4. The I.O. and the doct have not been examined in this case and no injury report proved in the trial Court. It difficult to say that the injury caused to the informant is grievous in nature ar dangerous to his life.

In that view of the matter, conviction of the appellant under Section 307 of tl Indian Penal Code is bad in law and the same is converted under Section 324 of tl Indian Penal Code.

Since, the evidence is that the accused assaulted the informant by Sabal, which is dangerous weapon. Accordingly, the sentence of R.I. for four years under Section 307 of the Indian Penal Code is altered to the sentence for two years under Section 324 of the Indian Penal Code. It appears from the record that the appellant was not granted bail. After that, the appellant has filed this appeal and he remained in custody for more than the conviction passed by the trial Court or by this Court. In that view of the matter, trial Court is directed to release this appellant forthwith, if not wanted in any other case. Patrik Kindo vs. State of Bihar (Now Jharkhand), 2010 (3) Cri LJ 2961 (Jhar).

It is sufficient to justify a conviction under Section 307, IPC if there is present an intent coupled with some avert act on execution thereof. It is not essential that bodily injury capable of causing death should have been inflicted. The section makes a distinction between the act of the accused and its result, if any. The Court has to see whether the act, irrespective of the result, was done with the intention or knowledge and under circumstances mentioned in the section. Therefore an accused charged under Section 307, IPC cannot be acquitted merely because the injuries inflicted on the victim were in the nature of simple hurt. State of MP v. Saleem, 2005 Cr LJ 3435 (SC) : AIR 2005 SC 3996 : 2005 (5) SCC 5541 (SC) : 2005 (4) Supreme 733 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1329.

The accused, with deliberate intention of causing the death of his father-in-law, gave him three blows on the head. He fell down sense less on the ground. The accused, thinking that he was dead, put under his head a bundle of fire-wood, and set fire to the hut in which he was lying, with the intention of removing all evidence of crime. The medical evidence in the case showed that the injury caused by blows would not have caused death if the hut had not been set fire to and that the burning caused the death. Held, that the accused was not guilty of murder, because when he set fire to the hut he thought that his father-in-law was dead, and his object in setting fire to the hut was apparently to remove evidence of the crime, and not to make the deceased's death certain. He was therefore guilty of an attempt to commit murder under Section 307, I.P. Code. 15 Bom 184. A culprit who inflicts 20 incised wounds on the body of person most of which were aimed at his head must be charged with murderous intent and the sentence of transportation for life is not excessive. 13 PWR 1915 Cr : 132 PLR 1915. The accused, in the course of a quarrel with her sister-in-law and in a fit of anger, flung her child, three years old, into a pond four feet deep, on the edge of which her house was situated, and at the same time gave expression to wish that the death of the child should rest as a course on the woman with whom she was quarrelling. Held, that the circumstances gave rise to a presumption that the intention of the accused was to cause death of the child, and that she was therefore, guilty of an offence under Section 307, although the child was picked up by a stander by without loss of time. 5 Ind Cas 138 : 11 Cr LJ 48. A person intentionally discharging a loaded gun at another from a short distance inflicting injuries which might have proved fatal, is guilty of an offence under Section 307, Penal Code, and not merely of causing grievous hurt. 16 Cr LJ 542 : 29 Ind Cas 670.

In a case the accused gave only one knife blow on the chest of victim and that injury was found simple in nature. He did not try to make a second attempt by the same knife on any part of the body of the victim. The injuries caused by the other accused were only simple. In these circumstances, the Court held that by causing the said injuries the accused could not be said to have an intention to commit murder and conviction of accused who caused incised wound or the chest of victim was attuned to one under Section 324 and the other accused were released or probation. Kailash v. The State of Rajasthan, 2002 Cri LJ 390(Raj).

Accused who was driving jeep alleged to have dashed same against complainant in an attempt to kill him. Co-accused was also allegedly present in same jeep.

The findings recorded by the trial Court leading to acquittal of respondent/ accused, the nature of the overt-act attributed to respondent/accused; the fact that the complainant in his First Information Report did not even mention the presence of Shivprasad at the time of the incident, and in view of the above quoted dictum of the Apex Court in the case Javed Alam vs. State of Chhattisgarh, AIR 2009 SCW 3918, Court does not find any infirmity in the findings recorded by the trial Court leading to acquittal of respondent/accused, which may warrant interference by this Court in this appeal against acquittal. State of Chhattisgarh vs. Shivprasad Katvariram Rajwade, 2010 (3) CrLJ 2530 (Chha).

Causing of injury with sharp edge weapon offence under Section 307, I.P.C. is made out. The doctor opined that injury could prove dangerous to life if injured not hospitalised in time. There was land dispute between parties, offence under Section 307, I.P.C. is prima facie made out. Nanak Chand v. State of Haryana, (1994) 1 Recent Cr R 342 (P & H).

Conviction under Section 307, I.P.C.—Sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for 5 years. Which was challenged in appeal. It was held that appellant had sufficient opportunity to select portion of body for giving blow. He took out knife and gave the blow on the chest and the blow was given with calculated action. The blow caused serious incised wound and damaged the parts. Hence offence to 'attempt to murder' is proved. Bansidas v. State of M.P., 1994 Cr LR (N) 270 (MP).

Accused came to deceased hotel and shot his abdomen with a fire arm Medical evidence showing that there was impaction of bullet inside serum on left side of abdomen and despite operation said bullet could not be extracted. Deceased was shot by the appellant from fairly close quarters. Deceased remained hospitalized more than two months for the injury sustained by him. From the evidence of Doctor as well as from the medical papers it is evident that there was impaction of bullet inside serum on the left side of the abdomen and despite operation conducted by doctor on two occasions, the said bullet could not be extracted. That apart, according to Doctor the injury sustained by the victim was life threatened injury.

In that view of the matter, Court finds that the appellant with intention to cause the death of deceased fired upon him and he committed offence punishable under Section 307 IPC. Dharam Chand Rajbhar vs. State of W.B., 2010 (3) CrLJ 2516 (Cal).

Husband wanted to injure the wife with a blade which was snatched by people assembled. But husband brought a sickle and inflicted one incised wound on her neck. This injury was dangerous for life. Hence conviction upheld. Jaisingh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, 1995 Cr LR 194 (MP).

In the absence of two of the independent eye-witness not being produced and one of the eye-witnesses refusing to identify the appellant as the person connected with the commission of the crime, it is absolutely unsafe, if not improper, to depend on the solitary evidence of A.S.I., and head constable, even though A.S.I., had sustained injuries. It was held that conviction u/Sec. 307, IPC wholly based on the uncorroborated testimony of two police officials is not sustainable. 1988 (1) Crimes 518 (Del).

The prosecution should make out facts and circumstance as envisaged in Section 300, I.P.C. Unless it can be said that the intention or knowledge of the accused was to cause such bodily injury as would come within the scope of Section 300, I.P.C. he cannot be found guilty under Section 307, I.P.C. It must be proved that if act complained of would have culminated in the death of the victim, the offence would have come within the ingredients as envisaged in Section 300, I.P.C. Abhi Ram Mukhi v. State of Orissa, 1996 Cr LJ 234 (Ori).

Where there were multiple incised wound on his right little finger right upper arm, left little ring, middle and index fingers, on the palmar aspect and left little ring, accused was held guilty under Section 307, I.P.C. Kishan Singh v. State of Rajasthan, 1996 Cr LJ 251 (Raj).

When the appellant inflicted nine incised wounds on vital parts of the body of the victim who was of a tender age of ten years, it can safely be presumed that he intended to kill him. Intention to commit murder in this case can also be inferred from the existence of a strong motive on the part of the appellant against the victim. The statement of doctor to the effect that, had timely medical aid been not given to the victim his injuries would have proved fatal, also brings the offence within the ambit of Section 307, IPC. R.T. Badjujar v. State of Maharashtra, 1996 Cr LJ 2482 (Bom).

An attempt in order to be criminal need not be the penultimate act. It is sufficient in law, if there is present an intention coupled with some overt act in execution thereof. It must be proved that if act complained of would have culminated in the death of the victim, the offence would have come within the ingredients as envisaged in Section 300, IPC. Abhi Ram Mukhi v. State of Orissa, 1996 Cr LJ 2341 (Ori).

To justify conviction. It is to essential that bodily injury capable of causing death should have been inflicted but there should be an intent coupled with some overt act in execution thereof. Hari Mohan Mandal v. State of Jharkhand, 2005(3) East Cr C 57 (SC).

Mere firing does not raise inference of attempt to murder. Fire should be specifically aimed. The mens rea required under Section 300, I.P.C. has to exist, there has also to exist an effective act to achieve the end of killing. An "attempt" means doing everything by an accused within his power to achieve the final result, but the final result alludes because something, beyond his control intervense e.g. there may be slight deflection of the shot or something comes in between suddenly or the victim is saved with medical aid after being struck. In the instant case the act of firing generally in the direction of approaching police people did not show aiming at the group or on a particular police official. It was not shown that firing was so dangerous as in all probabilities to kill one of the members of police party. So, that act did not fall under Section 307, I.P.C. Rajan v. State, 2000 Cri LJ 2423 (M.P.).

Though the injury was by a pellet, it only seems to have grazed the head of S. It is, therefore, held that ingredients of Section 307 are not satisfied qua S. M.P. Khachar v. State of Gujarat, 1996 Cr LJ 2465 (SC).

The evidence showed that prior to the incident both the accused and the victim had (taken) some rum and were drunk. Immediately before the incident the accused was talking with two persons and the victim was standing there. On this, the accused reprimanded the victim and an altercation which lasted for 10 to 15 minutes took place between them, culminating in the accused inflicting a single blow with a pen knife on the abdomen of the victim. On these facts, it would be difficult to conclude that the accused had the requisite intention to commit the murder of the victim within the terms of Section 307, IPC. For the said reason, only an offence under Section 324, IPC and not one under Section 307, IPC would be made out against the accused. Ekos Joseph Vargese v. State of Maharashtra, 1999 Cri LJ 1430 (Bom).

The accused had entertained a serious grudge and grievance against the deceased as well as injured complainant. The prosecution succinctly established this motive. Apart from that, the manner and mode in which the accused made criminal trespass with criminal intention to cause hurt and commit serious offence with dangerous dharia and giving three successive blows on the persons of the deceased who was undefended, unarmed, helpless, aged, clearly demonstrated his intention. In view of the circumstances, The accused was held liable to be convicted under Section 307 IPC., State of Gujarat v. Mahendra Mulji Kerai Patel, 1999 Cri LJ 768 (Guj).

Accused was armed with country made pistol and is alleged to have inflicted firearm injury, which was proved by medical evidence. The testimony of injured was not reliable nor corroborated by any other evidence. Therefore, the witness is not wholly reliable and to base conviction on his evidence, corroboration was needed. Evidence of S.I. Sudama Singh, (P.W.2) which could have corroborated the evidence of Khurmulli (P.W.1) is not believable. Therefore, despite Khurmulli (P.W.1) being injured, his testimony is not corroborated by any other evidence and is not sufficient to base conviction of appellant. It is true that principle of falsus in unofalsus in omnibus is not applicable in India and the duty of the Court is to spare out grain of truth from heap of chaffs of falsehood, but in the instant case the falsehood and truth have been so intermingled, that it is difficult to spare out the grain of truth from the evidence of Khurmulli, (P.W.1), therefore, the prosecution fails to prove its case. Daya Nand Yadav (in Jail) v. State of U.P., 2002 Cri LJ 2230 (All.) : 2002 All LJ 818 : 2002(44) All Cri R 650 : 2002(1) All Cri R 318 : 2002(2) Crimes 7.

The occurrence took place on the night of 30.6.1978 and 1.7.1978 i.e. in summer season. It was season when sale of ice was on the top. Therefore, the witness has given reasonable and probable explanation regarding his presence at his ice shop. The shop of the witness was adjacent to the place of occurrence and in all probabilities he could reach the spot hearing the altercation between the appellant and the injured. There is nothing in the cross-examination of the witness to show that he had any ground to depose falsely against the appellant. It has also come in the evidence that appellate was a bully character and as such Rafiq Ahmad (P.W. 4) would not have dared to depose falsely against him. In this way, the testimony of injured has been fully corroborated by two other witnesses. The testimony of occular witnesses is further corroborated by medical evidence, F.I.R. and other circumstances of the case. Bhoora v. State of U.P., 2002 Cri L.J. 2716 (Allah.) : 2002 All LJ 1023 : 2002(44) All Cri C 830 : 2002 All Cri R 932.

Even assuming that Ex. P-1 and the evidence of P.W. 1 can be brushed aside, the evidence of P.W.2 which is corroborated by the evidence of the truthful witness P.W. 5 and the medical evidence adduced through P.Ws. 3 and 4 Doctors would clearly show that the respondents 1 and 2 (A1 and A2) had committed the Act of attempt to murder P.W. 2. No doubt, there may be some contradiction between the evidence of P.W.2 and P.W. 5 As indicated above, the entire evidence adduced by P.W.5 can be accepted as true. He implicated only respondents 1 and 2(A1 and A2). On the other hand, P.W.2 has implicated all the three accused. In view of the above contradiction. It cannot be said that the entire case of the prosecution is untrue. State by Public Prosecutor, Madras v. Murugan and others, 2002 Cri LJ 670(Mad.) : 2001(2) Mad LW (Cri) 815.

The fact that P.W. 1 was sent from the scene of occurrence to the police station with burn injuries immediately after the incident is also a circumstance which corroborates P.W.1's evidence. The fact that P.W. 1 has received burn injuries is fortified by the medical evidence of the Doctor. P.W.7 has stated that P.W.1 received partial burn injuries all over his body except back, abdomen etc. According to P.W.7 both the hands of P.W.1 had become defunct due to burns. It is further in the evidence of P.W.7 that such injuries are possible when kerosene is sprinkled on the body and is set on fire, he also described the injuries as grievous in nature. The evidence of P.W. 7 is not challenged during his cross-examination at all. Thus, in the light of this evidence, the findings of the learned Assistant Judge that the prosecution has poured beyond reasonable doubt the broad spectrum of the incident, namely, the accused sprinkled kerosene on the body of P.W.1 and set fire to him must be held to be in accordance with the evidence on record and has to be up held. Gellapudi Satyam v. State, 2002 Cri LJ 762 (AP) : 2001(1) Andh LT (Cri) AP 503 : 2001(1) Crimes 408 : 2002(1) Cur Cri R 202.

In this case, there is evidence that accused appellant No. 3 Iqbal gave only one knife blow on the chest of PW. 1 Ratnesh Kumar and that injury is found simple in nature and there is no evidence that he tried to make a second attempt by the same knife on any prt of the body of P.W. 1 Ratnesh Kumar. By this Act of the accused appellant No. 3 Iqbal Mohammed, it cannot be held that accused appellant No. 3 Iqbal Mohammed had intention to murder PW. 1 Ratnesh Kumar and all the three doctors, namely, PW. 9 Dr. S. S. Mehta, P.W. 13 Dr. N. S. Kothari and P.W. 14 K.C. Vyas nowhere have stated that the injury No. 1 mentioned in injury report Ex. P/9 of P. W. 1 Ratnesh Kumar was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death and, therefore, in these circumstances, it cannot be held that by inflicting this injury on the chest of P.W. 1 Ratnesh Kumar, the accused appellant No. 3 Iqbal had an intention to commit murder of P.W. 1 Ratensh Kumar, and therefore, the findings of the learned sessions Judge convicting the accused appellant No. 3 Iqbal for the offense under Section 307 IPC are liable to be set aside. Since the injury No. 1 mentioned in report Ratnesh Kumar has been found simple in nature and, therefore, the act of the accused appellant No. 3 Iqbal Mohammed would be covered for the offence under Section 324 IPC and thus, he is to be convicted for the offense under Section 324, IPC in place 307 IPC and rest accused appellants Nos. 1 and 2 Kailash and Babu Rao are to be convicted for the offence under Section 324 read with 34 IPC in place of 307/34, IPC and the findings of learned Sessions Judge are liable to be altered accordingly. Kailash and Others v. The State of Rajasthan 2002 Cri LJ 390 (Raj.).

Single knife blow given on the chest causing incised wound causing no fracture - Injury was simple, therefore, there was no intention to kill the injured and conviction of the accused under Section 307, therefore, converted under Section 324 IPC. Since the injury No. 1 mentioned in report Ratenesh Kumar has been found simple in nature and, therefore the act of the accused appellant No. 3 Iqbal Mohammed would be converted for the offense under Section 324 IPC and thus, he is to be convicted for the offense under Section 324 IPC and thus, he is to be convicted for the offense under Section 324

IPC in place 307 IPC and rest accused appellants No. 1 and 2 Kailash and Babu Rao are to be convicted for the offence under Section 324 read with Section 34 IPC in place of 307/34 IPC and the findings of the learned sessions judge are liable to be altered accordingly. Kailash and Others v. The State of Rajasthan 2002 Cri LJ 390 (Raj.).

(a) Attempt to murder—Ingredients.—The essential ingredients required to be proved in the case of an offence under Sec. 307 are : (i) that the death of a human being was attempted; (ii) that such death was attempted to be caused by, or in consequence of the act of the accused; and (iii) that such act was done with the intention of causing death; or that it was done with the intention of causing such bodily injury as : (a) the accused knew to be likely to cause death; or (b) was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, or that the accused attempted to cause death by doing an act known to him to be so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause (a) death, or (b) such bodily injury as is likely to cause death, the accused having no excuse for incurring the risk of causing such death or injury. Chimanbhai Jagabhai Patel vs. State of Gujarat, AIR 2009 SC 3223 : 2009 (11) SCC 273 : 2009 (2) Crimes 34 (SC) : 2009 (4) JT 102 : 2009 (4) SCR 275 : 2009 (4) Scale 188 : 2009 (2) Supreme 712.

3. Scope.—To determine whether an act falls within the ambit of this section, three considerations appear to be essential ; (i) the nature of the act done; (ii) the intention or knowledge of the agent; and (iii) the circumstances under which the act is done. AIR 1943 Nag 145 : 44 Cr LJ 512. To support a conviction under this section, it must be proved that the accused intended by his act to cause death and also that the act was one capable of causing death in the natural and ordinary course of things, although death did not eventually ensue. 1 Weir 328 ; 32 PLR 1911 : 12 Cr LJ 125 : 9 Ind Cas 731. The scope of Section 307, is very clear. The intention or knowledge, which is necessary to constitute murder, may exist combined with an act which falls short of the complete commission of the offence. The murderer may do an act towards the commission of the murder, but may involuntarily fail, or be intercepted, or prevented from commission of the crime. To justify a conviction under Section 107, therefore, it is not essential that actual injury capable of causing death should have been inflicted. 154 Ind Cas 534 : A1R 1935 Oudh 176 : 1935 OWN 131 : 1935 Cr C 582 : AIR 1935 Oudh 181. All that is necessary in such a case that the act must be capable of causing death in the natural course of things ; and if it is not of that description the assailant is not guilty of the offence of attempt to murder. 155 Ind Cas l014 : 36 Cr LJ 854 : 1935 Nag 177 ; AIR 1941 Nag 302 : 43 Cr LJ 54 ; AIR 1941 Mad 489 : ILR 1941 Mad 592 : 42 Cr LJ 821.

An act regarded from two points of view ; one in relation to the intention which preceded the act and another, the actual consequence which follows from it. For the purpose of this section what is material is the intention or knowledge, not the consequence of the actual act done for the purpose of carrying out the intention. The section clearly contemplates an act which is one with the intention of causing death but which fails to bring about the intended consequence on account of the intervention of a cause operating independently of the volition of the agent. 44 Cr LJ 512 : AIR 1943 Nag 145 : ILR 1943 Nag 411; 1953 All WR (HC) 491 : 1954 Cr LJ 68 : AIR 1954 All 59. So far as a conviction is to be based on knowledge as opposed to intention, the act (necessarily the injury caused) must be likely to cause death and Section 307 or Section 308 will apply according to the degree of likelihood and the knowledge of the assailant established. Ibid ; see also AIR 1944 Sind 82 : 45 Cr LJ 598. Where simple injury is caused with knife, the offence committed is one under Section 324 and not under this section. AIR 1942 Pesh 21(2) : 43 Cr LJ 594 ; see also AIR 1941 Lah 322 : 43 Cr LJ 166 : AIR 1939 Mad 780 : 40 Cr LJ 922 ; AIR 1938 Rang 220 : 39 Cr LJ 692 ; AIR 1936 Lah 914 : 38 Cr LJ 24. For the application of this section it is not necessary that the injury capable of causing death should have been actually inflicted. AIR 1940 All 113 : 41 Cr LJ 362 ; AIR 1937 Lah 619 : ILR 1937 Lah 111 : 38 Cr LJ 1052 ; AIR 1936 Oudh 294 : 37 Cr LJ 747 ; 39 CWN 334 : AIR 1935 Cal 561 : 36 Cr LJ 1275 ; AIR 1935 Pesh 74 : 37 Cr LJ 25.

For the purpose of this section, what is essential is the intention or knowledge and not the consequence of the actual act done for the purpose carrying out the intention. AIR 1950 MB 21. Under this section, it is the intention or knowledge and the circumstances under which the act is done that are important. Even if the accused did not have a deliberate intention, if he must have had the knowledge that his act was likely to cause death, this section applies. The intention of the accused has to be taken to cause injury likely to cause death, and the fact that the injury was providentially relatively slight is not relevant to the provisions of section. 1937 MWN 556 ; see also 18 Lah 111 : 117 Ind Cas 284 : 38 Cr LJ 1052 : AIR 1937 Lah 619 ; see also 162 Ind Cas 841 : 37 Cr LJ 787 : 1936 OWN 553 : 1936 Cr C 648 : AIR 1936 Oudh 294 ; AIR 1941 Pat 51 : 42 Ind Cas 303. If a person who has an evil intent does an act which is the least possible act that he could do towards the accomplishment of a particular crime that he has in his mind he is not entitled to plead in his aid an obstacle intervening not known to himself, 14 All 38. This section is exhaustive.

"The intention or knowledge which is necessary to constitute murder may exist, combined with an act which falls short of the complete commission of that offence. The murderer may do an act towards the commission of the murder, but may involuntarily fail or be intercepted or prevented from consummating the crime. This and the following section seem to apply (as the Illustrations show) to attempt to murder, in which there has been not merely a commencement of an execution of the purpose, but something little short of a complete execution, the consummation being hindered, by circumstances independent of the will such as author. The act or omission, although it does not cause death, is carried to length as at the time of carrying it to that length, the offender consider sufficient to cause death. Whether the act causes hurt or not is material only with reference to the degree of punishment which the section authorises. There may be many atrocious and deliberate attempts to murder falling within the provision, which not only cause no hurt, but which are not even trespasses or assaults.—Morgan and Macpherson. The intention must be gathered from the nature of the act, manner and object proclaimed. Where complainant was beaten to unconsciousness, conviction under Section 307 is justified. AIR 1929 Lah 67 : 79 Cr LJ 1008 : 112 Ind Cas 224 ; see also 125 Ind Cas 183 : AIR 1930 Lah 253 ; AIR 1930 Lah 491 : 126 Ind Cas 573. This section applies where the act is done with sufficiently guilty intention and knowledge that death would occur but death does not occur owing to something which is beyond the accused's control. AIR 1932 Bom 279 : 56 Bom 434 : 33 Cr LJ 613 : 34 Bom LR 571 : 138 Ind Cas 503.

As pointed out the manner in which the alleged incident is supposed to have taken place does not fit in with the injuries received by the complainant. The most glaring inconsistency is the story of the complainant's having held the blade of the knife, alleged to have been used in the commission of the offence, with both hands and thereby suffering incised injuries on his left palm. The injury report shows that the complainant did not have any incised injury or any other injury on his left palm and the injury to his right palm was not of an incised nature, but a bruise which could have been caused by a blunt instrument. Moreover, the knife, which was seized and was alleged to have been used for the commission of the offence, was never sent for forensic examination so as to connect it with the offence. Furthermore, the other sharp-cutting implements, which were also seized, were also not sent for such examination. Even the mat which had blood stains on it was not sent for such examination and it could, therefore, not be proved as to whether the blood stains thereon were of human or animal origin. Coupled with the above is the fact that on going to the hospital in the night for medical treatment, the complainant did not even disclose to the doctor as to how he had sustained the injuries. The doctor was, therefore, not at all aware of any such incident, as presented by the prosecution, having been committed. Coupled with the above is the fact of the delay in lodging the FIR after consultation with the local villagers. Therefore, chances of fabrication in the FIR cannot be ruled out. Prabir Mondal and Anr. vs. State of West Bengal, 2010 (1) Cri LJ 444 (SC).

Failure on part of investigation. The very fact that all four of them came to the place, all being armed with firearms and they all rushed to the office of the victim and one of them shot him and then all of them fled away, was proved beyond doubt.

In any event, both the brothers subsequently mustered up courage and came to Court and deposed in most clear language which could not be shaken during cross-examination. We are unable to upset the conviction. We fully appreciate the contention that there had been lapses and failure on the part of the investigative agency. But that would not demolish or could not demolish the entire case when the victim himself and his brother categorically deposed as against the appellants them. Minor anomaly and/or discrepancy in evidence would not per se amount to acquittal of the accused. Ajoy Sen alias Mahanta & Anr. vs State of West Bengal, 2010 Cri LJ 943 (Calcutta).

The submission of the learned senior Counsel for the appellants that since deceased received only one and two fatal injuries respectively, the common object at the most could be to cause injuries and not fatal injuries hardly merits acceptance. The deadly weapons with which appellants were armed, the number of injuries inflicted on deceased, and the murderous assault lead to a certain inference that the appellants shared common object of committing murder with other accused. That they were more than five and formed unlawful assembly is beyond doubt. deceased died on the spot. Witness fortunately survived after surgery and hospitalization for more than month. Anna Reddy Sambasiva Reddy vs. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 2661 : 2009 (3) Crimes 17 (SC) : 2009 (12) SCC 546 (SC) : 2009 (5) JT 617 : 2009 (6) Scale 223 : 2009 (6) SCR 755 : 2009 (4) Supreme 506.

There cannot be duality of opinion that ordinarily, air rifle or airgun is used for killing small birds, etc. Airguns are regarded as safe weapons. The observations made by learned Author Modi in the Commentary on "Medical Jurisprudence and Toxicology" (23rd Edition) at page 713 is thus :

"Air Rifles and Air Pistols : In these rifles, compressed air is used to fire lead slugs.

Here, as the mass of the pellet and velocity are low, usually minor injuries are caused. Serious injuries at short range are however reported."

Thus, it may be gathered that though airgun is usually regarded as safe weapon, yet when used at short range, the same may be dangerous one. Rajesh Madhukar Srisundar v. State of Maharashtra, 2008 CriLJ 1857 (Bom).

Accused assaulting complainant with lathi and Farsa. Causing amongst other, two injuries on head of complainant. Nature of injuries were grievous and were caused by use of sufficient force. It is seen that the High Court had arrived at erroneous hypothetical conclusions ignoring the fact that the nature of injuries were grievous and were caused by use of sufficient force by sharp edged weapons. The injuries were so serious that both the investigating agency and the doctor felt that dying declaration was to be recorded. That being so, the High Court's conclusion that the offence under Sec. 307 was not made out is clearly indefensible. *State of M.P. v. An attempt is the third stage of an act which is completed viz. intention, preparation, attempt and commission. It is an act or series of acts which lead to the commission of an offence and stops short of commission by frustration because of something which the doer of the act neither foresaw nor intended. AIR 1955 Bhopal 9 : 1955 Cr LJ 1033.

Accused stabbed complainant's brother/PW. 1 and his wife/Beena with knife. Earlier complaint filed before police requesting to get accused evicted from their house. He demanded that five cents of property should be assigned to the mother, but PW. 1 was not amenable. A week back, PW. 1 orally complained before the police requesting to take steps to get the mother and the appellant evicted from the house. Since there was no development, PW. 1 filed complaint against the appellant at Police Station and thereafter he along with Beena had been to the house. Noticing PW 1 and Beena at the courtyard, the appellant came out and stabbed PW. 1 by stating that he and his wife had filed complaint against him and that none of them would be spared. The stab fell at the back left side and was bleeding. Seeing that, Beena rushed to rescue him. By the time the appellant stabbed Beena and it fell at her buttock. Beena ran towards the southern courtyard. The appellant chased her and kicked, following which Beena fell down. When PW. 1 rushed to Beena, the appellant took to his heels with the knife. The neighbours gathered and PW. 1 and Beena were taken to the District Hospital, from where they were referred to the Medical College Hospital. While undergoing treatment, at 4.30 p.m., Beena succumbed to the injuries. It was further deposed that being motivated because of the filing of complaint, PW. 1 and Beena were stabbed by the appellant with the intention to commit murder. PW. 1 identified Exh. P1 and the clothes. Mohanan vs. State of Kerala, 2010 (3) Cri LJ 2920 (Ker)

To justify conviction under section 307, IPC, it is not essential that bodily injury capable of causing death should have been inflicted. An attempt in order to be criminal need not be the penultimate act foreboding death. It is sufficient in law if there is present an intent coupled with some overt act in execution thereof, such act being proximate to the crime intended and of the attempt has gone so far that it would have been complete but for the extraneous intervention which frustrated its consummation. There are different stages in a crime. First intention to commit it; second preparation to commit it; third an attempt to commit it. If at the third stage the attempt falls, the crime is not complete but law punishes for attempting the same. An attempt to commit crime must be distinguished from an intent to commit it or preparation of its commission. A police appeal was deputed to search the house of the appellant along with two other members of his staff. When he went to the house of the appellant along with the other officers, the accused tried to assault them. He somehow escaped from the assault. Again accused tried to pierce with a sword but he escaped that he assault and caught hold of him but then he threatened that would kill. This was all the evidence that had been given which would only mean that there was only a threat to assault the police officer but the over acts attributed to him would not amount to attempt to murder, at best it could be one of attempt to assault but there was not even an injury upon the victim. Sagayam v. State of Karnataka, 2000 Cri LJ 3182 (SC) : AIR 2000 (SC) 2161 : 2000(4) SCC 454 : 2000(5) JT 260 : 2000(4) Scale 43 : 2000(3) Supreme 437.

Offence can be made out under Section 307, I.P.C., provided the act done was with such intention or knowledge and under circumstances that by that act death can be caused. Rakesh Kumar alias Rakesh v. State of U.P., 1995 UP Cr R 40 (All).

Where accused given knife blow on vital part of injured with knowledge and intention that it may cause death, offence under Section 307 is made out. Krishan Kumar v. State (Delhi Administration), 1993 Cri LJ 19 (Del).

The appellants who were landlords were charged for committing offence punishable under Section 307. The appellants fired gun shots on the tenant as a result of which her (tenant) grandson was injured. Landlords wanted to get premises vacated with force. Held, that counsel's contention that appellants were old men and having a feeling of remorse and the incident was of ten years old, as such it would be harsh to sent them back to jail, could not be justified. Landlords were trigger happy who tried to throw out tenant by use of firearms. However, considering the fact that appellants were old men and acted in heat of the moment their sentence to be reduced from three years to one and a half years. A fine of Rs. 5,000 in all i.e., Rs. 2,500 each to be paid by them and the amount so recovered should be paid to the complainant and her grandson by way of compensation. 1987 Cri LJ 1969 (SC) : AIR 1987 SC 1335.

It is not necessary for the offence of attempt under this section that any hurt or injury should have been caused by the act. 1969 Cr LJ 686 : AIR 1979 Ker 98. The act must be one which is capable of causing death. AIR 1970 Ker 98 : 1970 Cr LJ 633 ; (1982) 2 SCC 149 : 1982 Cr LR (SC) 316.

In a case where the injury that is caused does not cause death, but is caused under such circumstances that had death ensued, the accused can be held guilty of the offence punishable under Section 307, I.P.C. 1988 (1) Guj LR 64.

Offence of attempt to commit murder or culpable homicide—Sudden occurrence of scuffle in dark night. There was knife injuries on non-vital parts of body—It can be said that accused had knowledge that he was likely to cause death. It was held, that offence falls under Section 308 and not under Section 307. Tuaram Gundu Naik v. State of Maharashtra, 1994 SCC (Cri) 432 ; (1994) 1 SCC 465.

Where murder committed without enmity under mental tension. Held that accused requires sympathetic attitude. Gulam Dastageer v. State, (1995) 1 CCR 553 (Raj).

Offence under Section 307, can be made out even if no apparent hurt was caused. Rakesh Kumar alias Rakesh v. State of U.P., 1995 JIC 47 (Alld).

When the appellant inflicted incised wounds on the vital parts of the body of the victim who was of a tender age of ten years. It can safely be presumed that he intended to kill him. Intention to commit murder in this case can also be inferred from the existence of a strong motive on the part of the appellant against the victim. The statement of doctor to the effect that had timely medical aid been not given to the victim his injuries would have proved fatal also brings the offence within the ambit of Section 307, I.P.C. K.T. Balgujar v. State of Maharashtra, (1996) Cr LJ 2482 (Bom).

In absence of even a single injury on vital part, cognizance of offence under Section 307, I.P.C., to be vacated. Sarab @ Sarleeswar Prodhan v State of Orissa, (1995) 9 OCR 623 (Ori).

When the evidence of eye-witnesses as to incident in which accused attacked victims by sharp weapon causing injuries found cogent and reliable then minor discrepancies as to date of incident and in medical certificate is of no consequence. Vari Appalanaidu v. State, 2005 Cr LJ 1459 (AP).

4. Intention or knowledge.—A person commits an offence under Section 307 when he has an intention to commit murder and in pursuance of that act does an act towards its commission irrespective of the fact whether the act is the penultimate act or not. The expression "whoever attempts to commit an act" in Section 511 can only mean whoever intends to do a certain act with the intent or knowledge necessary for the commission of that offence. The same is meant by the expression 'whoever does an act with such intention or knowledge and under such circumstances that if he, by that act, caused death, he would be guilty of murder' in Section 307. The expression 'by that act' does not mean that immediate effect of the act committed must be death "The word "act" denotes, according to Section 33 as well, a series of act. Held, on facts of the case that the course of conduct adopted by the accused in regularly starving the wife in order to accelerate her end came within the purview of section 307 though it was not the last act which if effective would cause death. AIR 1961 SC 1698 and (1910) 2 KB 124 relied on but ILR 14 All 38, 1891 All WN 174 overruled and 10 Cr LJ 363 distinguished]. The nature of the weapon used, the exposed intention and motive of the accused, the nature of the injuries and the place where caused and the severity to blows are all to be taken into consideration. (1965) 1 Cr LJ 766 : AIR 1965 SC 843.

If the accused had used a sophisticated rifle there would have been no doubt about the fact that his intention was to kill and even if the shot had missed the victim, he would still have been liable. From the fact that he used a firearm that was not only unlikely but was incapable of endangering life it is very clear that the intention was to cause injury and not to cause death. It is not proper for the court to be totally carried away by the word "firearm" because it is of greater consequence that the courts must scrutinize the type of fire-arm that was used and the consequences that emanate therefrom. Secondly, what the court must also guard against are the type of half-baked unprofessional opinions that are based on a very unrealistic and immature knowledge of medical science that are sprouted out in the witness-box by ignorant medical practitioners most of whom are unfortunately in Government service and who technically pass off when put in the witness-box as expert. No court is obliged to be led by the nose by the opinions from this class of persons unless those opinions when scrutinised pass the scientific test. It was held that on asses sment of the injuries caused which were not of much consequence, the accused would be liable for conviction under Section 324, IPC and not under Section 307, IPC. Prabhu v. State of Karnataka, 2001 Cri LJ 1427 (Kant).

The victim has narrated that when he was accosted and exhortation raised to finish him and a blow was raised towards him by the appellant, he cried out that he should not be killed and, at the same time, raised his right arm to ward-off the blow which, on falling instantaneously, severed his head. The severity of the blow speaks for itself. The damage done has its own story to tell. Held, the hand not been raised in a bid to defend, the aim was the head of the victim. The blow thus aimed would have clearly spelled out the murderous intent of the appellant. It is from that angle the guilt of the appellant needs to be viewed rather than the result achieved. Antony v. State of Kerala, AIR 1995 SC 2451 : 1995 Cr LJ 4167.

'Mar do sale Ko' or 'Aj Jan se Mardalo' terms do not indicate the intention to cause death. It was held only exclamation. Mannu Lal Yadav v. State of U.P., 1994 JIC 202 : (1994) 1 Crimes 653 : 1994 UP Cr R 247 (All).

Absence of intention or knowledge. To constitute an offence under Section 307 I.P.C. two ingredients have to be established namely (i) intention or knowledge relating to commission of murder and (ii) the doing of act towards it. For an offence under Section 307 I.P.C. presence of intention or knowledge is material and not the consequence of the actual act done for the purpose of carrying out the intention. In the absence of intention or knowledge there can be no offence of attempt to murder. The injured witnesses have not stated that the accused intended to kill them. The evidence showed that they received simple injuries. In the absence of intention or knowledge which is necessary ingredient of Section 307 I.P.C, the accused cannot be held guilty for the offence under Section 307 I.P.C. The accused appellants having voluntarily caused simple hurt to the witnesses in furtherance of their common intention, they are liable for the offence under Section 323/34 I.P.C. Om Prakash and Ors. v. State of U. P., 2009 CriLJ 1677 (All).

Absence of Common object. The High Court rightly noted that the evidence adduced by the prosecution did not establish that remaining accused persons had any knowledge that Gajadhar was carrying a country made pistol or that he would go to shoot the deceased. The testimony of PW-2 shows that Janardan was initially arising the voters not to caste vote for Ramakant Yadav but to vote for his candidate and subsequently he had resorted to rowdism in order to disturb the voting process so that Ramakant Yadav may not win the election and that simple injuries were caused by blunt weapon to three persons. Therefore, as rightly observed by the High Court the common object of the assembly was not to commit the murder of Chandra Bhan Singh and it was the solitary act of Gajadhar. PW-2 had also stated that he had not seen the lathis or country made pistol in the hands of any of the accused persons at the time when Janardan was disturbing the voters and was asking them not to caste vote in favour of Ramakant Yadav. PW-4 i.e. Constable on duty had also stated that there was fight between the parties regarding disturbance in voting. State of Uttar Pradesh vs. Gajadhar Singh, AIR 2009 SC 1935 : 2009 (1) Crimes 348 : 2009 (11) SCC 366 : 2009 (2) JT 354 : 2009 (2) Scale 452 : 2009 (2) SCR 17 : 2009 (1) Supreme 793.

Where there was sudden quarrel—Simple injuries by sharp cutting weapon and certain injuries on chest—Acquittal by Trial court was given—Conviction by High Court under Section 307, I.P.C., and sentenced to 3 years, R. I.—Petition to Supreme Court was tiled and it was held that, there was no motive or intention to cause injury which is necessary to bring offence under ambit of Section 307, I.P.C. The injuries caused are only skin deep hence the case would fall within scope of Section 324, I.P.C. Sanjay Kumar v. State of M.P., 1995 JIC 553 (SC) : (1995) 1 East Cr C 437 (SC).

Two respondents were present and indeed their mere presence by itself cannot be of criminal nature in the sense that by their mere presence a common intention can not be attributed to them. Indeed, they have not done anything. No overt act is attributed to them though it was tried to be claimed by one of the witnesses that when the police party reached that they were standing on one leg. This also appears to be a tall claim without any basis and the High Court has rightly not believed this story which was tried to be introduced.

There can be no dispute that the specter of superstition had affected the psyche of all these accused persons. The case of the Shahrunnisa (A-3) is one of a Mohammedan lady whose husband and daughter were overpowered by the superstitious belief. The force of the superstition was so overpowering that A-1 and A-2 probably were convinced of the non-existent supernatural powers of A-2. A poor Mohammedan lady coming from the humble background, whose husband and whose daughter claimed these powers could not have ordinarily opposed which was being done and, therefore, had to see with open eyes the death of her two sons. We do not think that her not opposing the gruesome acts speaks in favour of her nurturing the common intention. The High Court was undoubtedly right that she could be afraid of A-1 and A-2 has she herself might be under the superstitious psyche.

It is bane of the Indian society that in search of some worldly gains, the society becomes superstitious and blindly follows the path which leads only to desolation. Number of lives are lost and number of families are destroyed because of this false belief in the so-called black magic and so-called supernatural powers. All this is a result of the total lack of education and human avarice. It is for this reason that we agree with the findings of the High Court. Even the case of the 4th respondent is no different. True it is that he was a police Constable, but the fact is that he has not committed any overt acts. Again it is his own wife who claimed all the supernatural powers and went on to commit the horrible acts of un-paralleled cruelty against the two innocent boys. True it is that it was his duty to stop the crime from being committed but inaction on his part would not by itself make him join the company of the guilty accused. This is apart from the fact that he has not been asked about his duty in his examination. In fact, the whole prosecution is strangely silent about the aspect of Sec. 221 IPC nor was such charge ever levelled against him.

We are dealing with an appeal against acquittal where the law so far crystallized desists us from fact finding exercise. Though, the whole evidence is open for us to appreciate the finding of acquittal that too by the High Court has to be given its own weight. We have, therefore, gone through the evidence ourselves only to find that the evidence against the two respondents is not clinching enough and it cannot be said that the finding of the High Court is perverse or such as cannot be reached after reasonable and careful survey of the evidence. A suspicion by itself cannot take place of the proof much less in an appeal against acquittal. The law requires hard facts duly proved by admissible and truthful evidence. In case where the High Court has recorded the finding of acquittal giving benefit of doubt, unless such a finding was an impossible one, the interference at this stage is not feasible. We, therefore, would agree with the High Court, though with a heavy heart. State of Uttar Pradesh vs. Sahrunnisa, AIR 2009 SC 3182 : 2009 CrLJ 4151 : 2009 (9) Scale 170 : 2009 (9) JT 16 : 2009 (6) SLT 47 : 2009 (10) SCR 237.

It is not necessary that injury capable of causing death should have been inflicted. AIR 1983 SC 305 : 1983 Cr LJ 331 ; 1979 Cr LJ 400 ; 1972 Cr LJ 938 ; AIR 1971 SC 335 : 1971 Cr LJ 288 (no conviction in case of no evidence as to the nature of the injury caused). In 1982 Cr LJ 626 : AIR 1982 SC 82 (accused not intending to injure from shots fired by him-no conviction). The act must be done with intention knowledge requisite for the commission of the offence of murder. AIR 1961 SC 1182 : 1962 (2) Cr LJ 848.

When medical evidence shows one simple injury and other dangerous to life only if medical treatment not given, no intention to cause death can be inferred. Piara Singh v. State of Punjab, 1996 Cri LJ 4333 (P & H).

When the evidence, circumstances and nature of injuries show intention to commit murder, the conviction is justified. Rohtas v. State of U.P., 1997 (2) East Cr C 177 (SC).

It is sufficient to justify a conviction under Sec. 307 if there is present an intent coupled with some overt act in execution thereof. It is not essential that bodily injury capable of causing death should have been inflicted. The section makes a distinction between the act of the accused and its result, if any. The Court has to see whether the act, irrespective of its result, was done with the intention or knowledge and under circumstances mentioned in the Section. Therefore, an accused charged under Sec. 307, IPC cannot be acquitted merely because the injuries inflicted on the victim were in the nature of a simple hurt. State of M.P. v. Imrat & Anr., AIR 2008 SC 2967 : 2008 (10) SCR 847 (SC) : 2008 (11) SCC 523 : 2008 (10) Scale 143 (SC) : 2008 CrLJ 3869 (SC).

5. Under such circumstances.—In Sections 307 and 308, the words "under such circumstances" have used to distinguish "attempted" murder from "attempted culpable homicide not amounting to murder. An offence under Section 307 can be committed where there is no intention is proved but only knowledge the act is imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death and that an offence under Section 308 can be committed where there is no intention proved but only the knowledge of offender that he is likely to cause death by the act. In so far as the words "attempt" is used in the marginal notes to sections may be held to connote intention but it should not receive weight in construing the section itself. AIR 1943 Nag 145 : 44 Cr LJ 512. The expression "under such circumstances" refers to facts which would introduce a defence to a charge of murder such as for instance that the accused was acting in self-defence or in the course of military duty. AIR 1932 Bom 279 : 33 Cr LJ 613 : 56 Bom 434. Both in Section 307 and Section 308, the phrase "under such circumstances" does not stand by itself and it has to be read in conjunction with "such intention of knowledge". 1952 Cr LJ 1467 : AIR 1952 Pepsu 138 ; 1982 Cr LJ 654.

Cruelty and attempt to murder.—Accused husband subjected victim, second wife, to physical and mental torture and attempted to kill her. Evidence of witnesses that accused used to beat victim under influence of liquor.

Initially the defence case was that the victim had herself poured kerosene oil. However, the suggestion was changed during the cross-examination of the victim. I have already mentioned earlier that the victim was given a suggestion that kerosene oil fell on her body accidentally in the midst of scuffle. Strangely, while giving statement under Section 313, Cr.P.C., accused neither pleaded that the victim had herself poured kerosene oil to make out a false case or that the said petroleum product had accidentally fell on her body.

Be that as it may a good number of independent witnesses from the locality have deposed in chorus that the victim came running to the house of P.W. 3 and was found terrified and reported that her husband had attempted to kill her by setting her afire. No prosecution witness was given any suggestion that he or she was giving a tainted testimony due to any enmity or grudge against the accused. At any rate, the suggestion given to the victim that kerosene oil fell on her body in the midst of scuffle is somewhat an admission of the accused and the same can be considered as corroborative evidence under Section 21 of the Evidence Act, 1872.

In the cross-examination, has deposed that she herself was tortured by her step-mother and that she did not have good relation with her. In my considered opinion, this might be the reason for giving a twisted testimony to defend her father. I am also of the view that the defence story of pouring kerosene oil just to teach a lesson to the husband, who was already in an angry mood and physically powerful, is inconceivable. In ordinary course, in such a situation, a battered and mentally week woman would run for cover instead of challenging a physically sound and intoxicated person.

Section 307, I.P.C. relates to the offence of attempted murder. Under this provision of law, if any act is done with such intention or knowledge that the act was likely to cause death, if not prevented or intercepted, it would constitute the offence of attempt to murder. In the case before me, large quantity of kerosene oil, was poured on the body of the victim woman. Had the appellant been successful to ignite the wearing apparels of the victim there would have been every possibility of her death. Hence, conviction of the appellant under Section 307, I.P.C., having based on evidence does not call for interference. Sri Maran Nama vs. State of Tripura, 2010 (2) CriLJ 1594 (Gau).

6. Evidence and proof.—Where the doctor treating the injuries, who is the best person to describe the exact nature of the injuries and their natural effect, does not say that the injuries inflicted by the accused are sufficient, in the ordinary course, to cause death, an intention to cause death cannot be deduced from the nature of the injuries and their natural and probable consequences. 155 Ind Cas 1014 : 36 Cr LJ 854 : AIR 1935 Nag 177. Although the nature of the injuries caused may often given considerable assistance to a Court in coming to finding as to the intention of the accused, such intention may also be deduced from other circumstances, and may even in some cases be ascertained without reference at all to the actual wounds inflicted upon the person attacked. 154 Ind Cas 697 : 36 Cr LJ 534 : 1935 OWN 312 : 1935 Cr C 582 : AIR 1935 Oudh 24 ; ILR 1964 Cut 730 : 1965 (2) Cr LJ 169 (interference of intention to kill can be made for nature of the act done). For liability under Section 307, the prosecution has to prove the following facts : (1) that the accused did an act, and (2) that the act was done with such intention or knowledge and under such circumstances that if he by that act caused death would be guilty of murder. AIR 1958 All 627 : 1958 Cr LJ 1112.

Evidence showing that appellant accused alongwith others went to spot and attacked deceased and caused his death and also caused injuries on injured.

The Injuries sustained by PW 2 were simple, but at the same time, it should hot be forgotten that though the injuries caused by the accused were simple, they have acted actually with an intention to cause his death. It is quite evident that all of them went to the spot with Veecharuval and attacked the deceased and caused his death.

It is not in controversy that one deceased died due to homicidal violence and following the inquest made by the Investigating Officer, the dead body was subjected to post-mortem and all the accused stood charged for the offences referred to above and on trial, accused 1 and 3 were found guilty of murder. Thangaraj vs. State, 2010 (3) CriLJ 3409 (Mad).

To constitute an attempt to murder contemplated by Section 307, there must be some overt act combined with evidence of 'mens rea. The burden is always on the prosecution to prove from the 'actus reus' that is, the accused had done something and secondly the 'means rea' i.e., in taking the step he was inspired by the intention. AIR 1955 Pat 330 : 1955 Cr LJ 1092 ; AIR 1960 Punj 135 : 1960 Cr LJ 393 ; AIR 1977 SC 2083 : 1977 Cr LJ 1738 ; 1979 UJ (SC) 281.

Accused came to deceased hotel and shot his abdomen with a fire arm Medical evidence showing that there was impaction of bullet inside serum on left side of abdomen and despite operation said bullet could not be extracted. Deceased was shot by the appellant from fairly close quarters. Deceased remained hospitalized more than two months for the injury sustained by him. From the evidence of Doctor as well as from the medical papers it is evident that there was impaction of bullet inside serum on the left side of the abdomen and despite operation conducted by doctor on two occasions, the said bullet could not be extracted. That apart, according to Doctor the injury sustained by the victim was life threatened injury.

In that view of the matter, Court finds that the appellant with intention to cause the death of deceased fired upon him and he committed offence punishable under Section 307 IPC. Dharam Chand Rajbhar vs. State of West Bengal, 2010 (3) CrLJ 2516 (Cal).

Doubtful evidence—Absence of any explanation of Injuries on accused. It is difficult to hold that the complainant party was in settled and peaceful possession of 2/3 share of the plot in question on the date of incident and there seems to be weight in the defence argument that the accused party was in possession to the extent of 1/2 share and in any view of the matter there was a bona fide dispute between the parties regarding their shares and extent of possession. This finding gives twist to the entire prosecution version and it is not clear as to who were in fact the aggressors and whether the injuries caused by the accused persons to the complainant party were in fact caused in their right of their private defence or not.

The High Court also came to the conclusion that witnesses cannot be said to be totally independent witnesses as the defence had filed documentary evidence to show that Lalloo, the father of the accused persons had lodged an FIR against these witnesses for an offence under Sec. 308 IPC. These witnesses were, therefore, also somewhat inimical to the accused persons and their evidence cannot be given due weight especially with regard to the use of Lathi and Danda by the prosecution witnesses, particularly when such an important fact had not been stated by them in their statements recorded under Sec. 161 Criminal Procedure Code and the statements being contradictory to each other with regard to the use of Danda by the prosecution witness. The High Court arrived at the conclusion that the injuries of the accused persons have not been satisfactorily explained.

The High Court in the impugned judgment arrived at a definite finding that it is highly doubtful that the complainant party was in exclusive possession of the disputed land at the relevant time and witnesses cannot be considered to be independent witnesses. A serious doubt has been cast on the credibility of the prosecution version. The High Court allowed the appeal and set aside the conviction and sentence of the appellants and they were acquitted of the offences charged for.

When we apply the above mentioned parameters laid down by a number of cases decided by this Court to the facts of this case, then conclusions become irresistible and no interference is warranted by this Court. Consequently, the appeal filed by the State of UP being devoid of any merits, is accordingly dismissed. State of Uttar Pradesh vs. Banne, 2009 CrLJ 2234 : 2009 (4) SCC 271 : 2009 (3) Scale 35 : 2009 (3) JT 552 : 2009 (2) SLT 687.

It was alleged that accused persons first fired pistol at victim causing injury to his abdomen and therefore inflicted knife injuries. According to medical evidence, there was no gun-shot injury on the person of the victim. No cartridges were recovered by the prosecution. Held, the testimony of prosecution witnesses were not reliable, as they had reached spot after occurrence of incident and the occurrence of incident was narrated to them by the victim. There were inconsistencies in the manner of occurrence narrated by the victim to witnesses and statement of victim before Court. Conviction of accused under Section 307, IPC was not proper. Ishwar Singh v. State of MP, 2004 Cr LJ 2776 (MP) : 2004 Cri LR (SC & MP) 454 : 2004(3) Cur Cri R 310 : 2004(2) MPHT 506 : 2004(2) MPLJ 479.

Where the accused stopped the victim, sprinkled chilly powder on his face and assaulted him on his face, head and other parts of his body, conviction under Section 307 was held proper. On a careful scrutiny of the evidence of the accused, injured and other witnesses established the fact that the accused was not of unsound mind and, therefore, it was held that the benefit of Section 84, IPC could not be extended to the accused so as to hold that he committed the act while he was in the state of mind but not of unsoundness. The Court, however, in view of the fact that the accused was suffering from schizophrenia, the sentence of imprisonment for a period of 5 years was reduced to simple imprisonment for a period of two years 20 days which he had already undergone. Venkatesh v. State of Karnataka, 2005 Cr LJ 1112 (Kant) : AIR 2005 Kant HCR 307 : 2005(2) All Cri LR 139 : 2005(1) Kant LJ 612.

Where ditching material was found that the students attempted to take away the life of the principal of the college who had rusticated him, conviction of the student for attempt to murder was held proper. Atish Behera v. State of 'Orissa, 1996 Cr LJ 270 (Ori).

Offence punishable under Sections 377/34, I.P.C. and 25/27 of Arms Act discharged from liability—Revision petition was filed and held that the discharging of the non-applicants without testing the truth or otherwise of alibi is premature assessment of evidence which is not only against the cannon of justice but is also against rule of prudence. Chandrika Prasad v. Rajaram, (1995) 3 CCR 742 (MP).

Evidence of eye-witnesses out of a trial and not effected by the information received during an investigation. (1986) 2 Crimes 624.

When trial court has not given any finding as to competency of witnesses, it was not justified in recording evidence of that witness and also relying on it. In view of this illegality the order of trial court is unsustainable. Hence, case remanded to trial court for de novo trial. State of Karnataka v. Shabuddin, (1995) 1 Kar LJ 168 (DB).

The evidence of eye-witness regarding presence of co-accused person was not trustworthy. Their testimony vis-a-vis accused cannot be accepted. The evidence of injured witness was not cogent and reliable. Time of incident was not proved. Hence. acquittal does not call for interference. State of U.P. v. Baboo Ram, 1995 Cr LJ 643 (Alld).

Where circumstances not formed complete chain of evidence—Conviction, held not sustainable. Raisa w/o Mohd. Hussain v. State of Madhya Pradesh, 1995 Cr LJ 169 (MP).

Medical evidence showed injuries to prosecution-witness as well as to accused. Injuries on accused not explained—Evidence of prosecution witnesses inconsistent and not reliable—Doubt on origin of fight—Case not proved beyond reasonable doubt. Held. benefit of doubt goes to accused who cannot be convicted on conjectures or surmises. Ashwani Kumar v. State of Punjab, (1995) 2 CC Cases 484 (P & H).

Conviction was appealed—No eye-witness was available—Medical evidence adduced on record fully corroborating the victims with regard to the injuries inflicted on them. Injuries grievous and extensive—Indicative of an attempt of murder—Extra-judicial confession submitted in natural sequence indicative of appellant voluntarily inflicting injuries and plea of private defence not available. Hence, judgment and order needs no interference. Kisto Majhi v. State, (1995) 2 Crimes 623 (Cal).

(a) Evidence of police personnel—Absence of any other independent witness. It is true that the prosecution should not be insisted upon independent witness while convicting the accused on the basis of the police personnel evidence, but the police personnel evidence should be corroborated by other evidence. Prosecution has not been able to produce a single witness pointing towards the fact that the arms used by the appellants were serviceable or not. Even for recoveries of arms from the accused appellants has also not been proved by independent witness. The findings arrived at by the trial Court is not perverse so far as acquittal of the accused appellants for the offence under Sections 3/25 Arms Act. It may be possible that in order to avoid their arrest they must not have co-operated the police personnel or hindrance was created by them in the discharge of duties by the police personnel for that the trial Court rightly convicted the accused appellants under Section 353, IPC, but so far as guilt of the accused appellants for section 307, IPC, in absence of independent evidence or any corroborative evidence such like FSL report, benefit of doubt can be given to the accused appellants. The charge of Section 307, IPC framed by the trial Court is not proved and the accused appellants are entitled to be given the benefit of doubt in absence of any other independent evidence or corroborative evidence. Bhairon Singh & Anr. vs State of Rajasthan, 2010 Cri LJ 1177 (Raj)

(b) Related eye-witness. The statement of witness who is none other than the daughter of the deceased. The incident according to her took place at about 2.00 A.M. in the night when the appellant hacked her mother and father. She stated that on her raising hue and cry one Kanniah Tata and others came to the spot. She did not reveal the name of the appellant to the neighbours when they came to the house on her raising hue and cry. Kanniah Tata who is examined as PW-7 stated in his evidence that PW-4 informed him that her father and mother were beaten by somebody. The evidence on record suggests that even PW-4 has also acquaintance with the appellant but she did not mention the name of the appellant at any point of time prior to her evidence in the Court. Her evidence is also vague based on which it would be difficult to record any finding of commission of any crime by the appellant. Gajula Surya Prakasarao vs. State of Andhra Pradesh, 2010 (1) SCC 88 : 2009 (4) Crimes 199 (SC) : 2009 (13) Scale 656 : 2009 (14) JT 203 : 2009 (8) SLT 546.

Reliability of Eye-witness. PW. 2 Suresh Kumar at the time of occurrence was studying in the school. He is the friend of Raj Kumar, who is the brother of PW. 1. According to him, on the date of occurrence, PW. 2 and his friend Raj Kumar accompanied PW. 1 and the deceased to go to river for taking bath. On the way, the occurrence had taken place. He could state about the occurrence only. He did not refer about the other happenings with reference to the motive as spoken to by PW. 1. At the time of deposition, he was studying B.A. in Nesamani Christian College. He clearly corroborated the evidence of PW. 1 with reference to the overt acts attributed to each of the accused. Nothing has been elicited from PW. 2 that he had anything to speak falsehood against the accused. As a matter of fact, when the victim was taken in a car to hospital, he also accompanied him. When Exh. P1 complaint was given to PW. 11 Head Constable, PW. 2 attested the said complaint. In Exh. P1 also the name of PW. 2 is mentioned. PW. 2 was examined at the hospital during the course of inquest by PW. 14. Therefore, there is no reason to reject the evidence of PW. 2. Vijaykumar vs. State, 2009 (12) SCC 629 : 2009 CrLJ 3056 : 2009 (7) JT 36 : 2009 (6) SCR 919 : 2009 (6) Scale 364 : 2009 (8) SLT 27.

7. Sections 307 and 34—Common intention.—Once it is decided that the act is so done by a number of persons in furtherance of the common intention of all, the legal position is that each person shall be held to have committed the entire criminal act. Hence a charge under Section 307, read with Section 34, is sustainable in law. (1964) 1 SCWR 501 : 1964 SCD 766 : AIR 1965 SC 182 : 1965 (1) Cr LJ 126 ; AIR 1978 SC 1604 : 1978 Cr LJ 1474 ; AIR 1961 SC 1782 : 1961 (2) Cr LJ 848.

Absence of common intention. Prosecution has not brought on records any evidence to show that the accused persons had a common intention to commit the murder of deceased. It has not been shown that even otherwise they were bearing any common grudge against the deceased. Evidently, both the accused and the deceased were customers of the said Wine shop. They might have picked up some quarrel. At the time when the occurrence took place, appellant being an employee of the said shop the question of his coming to the place of occurrence together with the other accused did not arise. The evidence of prosecution witnesses, particulary P.Ws. 1 and 2, on which both the Courts below have relied upon, even if taken at their face value, would merely show that it was the accused who had assaulted the deceased with an iron rod: appellant was said to have only kicked the deceased.

A general statement was made that about a month prior to the incident, when the deceased had gone to Nandi Wine shop, quarrel between him and the accused persons took place. According to PW. 1, at that point of time, accused persons had threatened the deceased. From whom he had heard thereabout has not been disclosed.

Indisputably, P.W. 1's house was situated at about one furlong from the place of occurrence. He came to the place of occurrence in search of his brother. He failed to bring any material on record as to on what basis he arrived at the conclusion that accused persons had formed a common intention.

Ms. Shenoy may also not be correct in contending that all the accused persons ran away together. PW. 2 deposed that they went in different directions. Appellant, according to PW. 1, ran towards the Wine shop. Thus, it is not a case where all the accused came together and ran away together. A bald statement said to have been made by him that the accused while assaulting the deceased had exhorted that they would not leave him till he died, cannot be a ground to hold that the same by itself is demonstrative of the fact that accused No. 3 also had a similar intention. Admittedly, no weapon was recovered at the instance of appellant. He was wholly unarmed. On the basis of the voluntary statement made by the Accused alone, an iron rod was recovered.

We are not concerned herein as to whether the said iron rod was the weapon of assault. Having regard to the quality of evidence that the prosecution had led, in our opinion, it is difficult to come to the conclusion that all the accused persons had a common intention to commit the murder of the deceased.

The prosecution has failed to establish why and how a quarrel had started. The prosecution even has not proved as to why the Accused No. 1 was carrying the iron rod even before the quarrel with the deceased started or as to whether the appellant was aware of this. It has also not been shown that he along with other accused persons came to assault the deceased. Appellant ordinarily was expected to be at his work place only. His presence at the spot, therefore, has sufficiently been explained.

For the aforementioned reasons, we are of the opinion that appellant cannot be held guilty for commission of offence punishable under Sec. 302 read with Sec. 34 of the IPC. The very fact that the appellant was unarmed and must be presumed to have been performing his duties at his place of employment, it cannot be said that he had formed any kind of common intention at the spot to murder the deceased. Some incident might have taken place and he might have formed a common intention to teach a lesson to the deceased. He might be guilty for commission of offence punishable under Sec. 323 of the IPC and not for commission of offence punishable under Sec. 302 read with Sec. 34 of the IPC. He is sentenced to the period already undergone. Nagaraja vs. State of Karnataka, AIR 2009 SC 1522 : 2009 (1) Crimes 278 (SC) : 2009 (1) JT 48 : 2008 (16) Scale 380 : 2008 (17) SCR 1127 : 2009 (1) Supreme 94.

Accused causing injury by firing gun. He was charged of attempt to murder. The testimony of injuries witness corroborated with injury report and F.I.R. Evidence showed that accused persons before firing shouted to kill victim and then fired from guns. Hence, intention was clearly to commit murder. Offence under Sections 307/34 made out. Mohar Singh v. State of U.P., 1995 Cr LJ 649 (Alld).

Accused assaulted his first wife—F.I.R. was lodged. The charge-sheet may not be quashed. Interference was held not possible. Richpal Singh v. State of Rajasthan, 1994 Cr LR 177 (Raj).

Four accused persons were found guilty under Section 307/34, I.P.C., and sentenced to 3 years R.I. which was challenged in appeal—Hence, it was held that there are material contradictions in statement of two injured and that other eye-witnesses also have contradicted themselves on material points. The story put up by prosecution appears unbelievable and doubtful. The weapon of offence 'Rampt was not examined by the doctor so as to find out if injuries could have been caused by that Rampt. Main accused No. 1 has since died, the conviction of other co-accused is liable to be set aside. Babu Lal and others v. State, (1994) 2 CC Cases 477 (P & H).

Appeal was made against acquittal—Case not supported by independent witness—Weapon not produced—Impugned order for conviction may be set aside. Benefit of doubt may be given. Dilbagh Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 2 CC Cases 215 (P & H).

Offence under Section 307, I.P.C.—Acquittal was appealed by State—Motive of offence as alleged by prosecution found to be false—No blood found at the place of occurrence. Time of incident was also not proved—Two ocular witnesses being highly interested ones. Acquittal order was confirmed. State of U.P. v. Baboo Ram, 1994 ACC 412 (All).

The co-accused was convicted along with the main accused for the offence under Section 307 read with Section 34. It was held that the conviction with the help of Section 34 could not be upheld because he did not know that the main accused would be inflicting an injury on the victim with the intention of murdering him and that the co-accused could be convicted for the act done by him under Section 323, IPC.

Trial for attempt to commit murder—Evidence on record not bringing home the guilt of the accused beyond reasonable doubt—Accused to be acquitted. Machhindra Sidu Chavan v. State of Maharashtra, (1994) 1 CCR 140 (Bom).

Trial of two appellants under Section 307, read with Section 34 and 323/34, I.P.C.—First appellant convicted under Section 307, I.P.C., whereas second under Section 307/34, I.P.C., by Session Judge—Conviction confirmed by High Court—Hence. appeal was made. It was held, that one of the accused inflicted blow by sharp edged weapon on head of injured and another accused inflicting only one lathi blow on shoulder of the injured. Injury on head proved to be grievous and serious one. Hence accused inflicting injury on head liable to be convicted under Section 307, I.P.C. The accused giving only one blow on shoulder does not share common intention and liable to be convicted only under Section 323, I.P.C. Kuldip Singh v. State of Punjab, 1994 Cri LJ 2201 : (1994) 3 Recent CR 137 (SC).

Appellant alleged to have instigated other two accused to kill J—Other two accused fired shot which hit J—Two independent witnesses turned hostile. Another eye-witness being near relation of J and no relation proved between appellant and other two accused persons, conviction against appellant was held non-sustainable. Hameed v. State of U.P., (1994) 1 Crimes 847 (All).

Where there is nothing on record to show that accused exceeded right of private defence, conviction not sustainable. Badri v. State of U.P., 1997 (1) Crimes 135 (All).

8. Sections 307 and 148.—In a case of rioting to evade and resist arrest by lawful authority, conviction under Sections 307 and 149 is sufficient. AIR 1952 Mani 2 : 1922 Cr LJ 1500.

Common object of unlawful assembly.—Section 149, IPC consists of two parts. The first part of the Sec. means that the offence to be committed in prosecution of the common object must be one which is committed with a view to accomplish the common object. In order that the offence may fall within the first part, the offence must be connected immediately with the common object of the unlawful assembly of which the accused was member. Even if the offence committed is not in direct prosecution of the common object of the assembly, it may yet fall under Sec. 141, if it can be held that the offence was such as the members knew was likely to be committed and this is what is required in the second part of the section. The purpose for which the members of the assembly set out or desired to achieve is the object. If the object desired by all the members is the same, the knowledge that is the object which is being pursued is shared by all the members and they are in general agreement as to how it is to be achieved and that is now the common object.

The distinction between the two parts of Sec. 149 cannot be ignored or obliterated. In every case, it would be an issue to be determined, whether the offence committed falls within the first part or it was an offence such as the members of the assembly knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of the common object and falls within the second part. However, there may be cases which would be within first part, but offences committed in prosecution of the common object would be generally, if not always, be within the second part, namely, offences which the parties knew to be likely committed in the prosecution of the common object.

Sec. 14 IPC has clear application to the facts of the cases. Therefore, the trial Court and the High Court were justified in convicting the appellant. The appeals are dismissed. Raj Nath vs. State of U.P., AIR 2009 SC 1422 : 2009 (4) SCC 334 : 2009 (1) JT 373 : 2009 (1) Scale 619 : 2009 (1) Supreme 370 : 2009 (1) SCR 336 : 2009 (1) JCC 801.

If apparently accused had fired only in the air with an idea to scare away the aggressors so that they should scatter then he has obviously committed no offence. It was nobody's case that he had fired at the two dead persons. The finding of both Courts is clear that only two accused had fired. The High Court dismissed the appeal of appellant Deomuni Sharma on the wrong impression that even he was convicted of the offence under Sec. 302, IPC substantively or with the aid of Sec. 149, IPC, one look at the Trial Court's judgment suggests that he was not so convicted. The Trial Court convicted him only of offence under Sec. 307 read with Sec. 149, IPC. Therefore, the very basis of the High Court judgment against the appellant is knocked down. The other appellants who were convicted for the offence under Sec. 304 Part I, IPC have not filed any appeal nor has the prosecution come up in appeal against this finding and the consequent conviction for offence under Sec. 304 Part I, IPC. Therefore, this finding has become final. Reading the finding as it is, along with the finding given, it is clear that the appellant's conviction which is also not specifically referred to by the High Court is per se incorrect as the appellant was never convicted for the offence under Sec 302, IPC and even that finding of the Sessions Judge was never challenged by the prosecution. Deomuni Sharma v. State of Jharkhand., AIR 2009 SC 2731 : 2009 (9) SCR 587 (SC) : 2009 (8) Scale 303 (SC) : 2009 (4) Supreme 459 (SC) : 2009 (6) SLT 83 (SC) : 2009 (2) Crimes 490 (SC) : 2009 CrLJ 3948 (SC).

9. Sections 307 and 324.—There is no indication from the evidence that the accused really intended or attempted to caused any deadly injury. The offences committed by the accused fall under Sections 324 and 448 Penal Code and under Sections 307 and 452 Penal Code, 1964 BLJ 660. The fact that no vital organ of A has been cut would not by itself be sufficient to take the accused out of the purview of Section 307. 1965 SCWR 284 : 1965 Cur LJ 360 : 1965 SCD 281 : AIR 1965 SC 843 ; AIR 1960 J & K 104 : 1960 Cr LJ 1080 (in the absence of any evidence to show that the accused had any intention of causing death by firing, the offence fell under Section 354). The prosecution must establish in an offence under this section that intention or knowledge of the accused was of the description mentioned in Section 300. 1980 UP Cr Rul. 70.

Appellant caused injury on head of informant by Sabal. There was evidence of witnesses and independent witness. It appears that the prosecution case is in support of the evidence of informant and independent witness and also the evidences of PWs. 1 and 4. The I.O. and the doctor have not been examined in this case and no injury report proved in the trial Court. It is difficult to say that the injury caused to the informant is grievous in nature and dangerous to his life.

In that view of the matter, conviction of the appellant under Section 307 of the Indian Penal Code is bad in law and the same is converted under Section 324 of the Indian Penal Code.

Since, the evidence is that the accused assaulted the informant by Sabal, which is dangerous weapon. Accordingly, the sentence of R.I. for four years under Section 307 of the Indian Penal Code is altered to the sentence for two years under Section 324 of the Indian Penal Code. It appears from the record that the appellant was not granted bail. After that, the appellant has filed this appeal and he remained in custody for more than the conviction passed by the trial Court or by this Court. In that view of the matter, trial Court is directed to release this appellant forthwith, if not wanted in any other case. Patrik Kindo vs. State of Bihar (Now Jharkhand), 2010 (3) Cri LJ 2961 (Jhar).

Evidence showing that appellant accused alongwith others went to spot and attacked deceased and caused his death and also caused injuries on injured.

The Injuries sustained by PW 2 were simple, but at the same time, it should hot be forgotten that though the injuries caused by the accused were simple, they have acted actually with an intention to cause his death. It is quite evident that all of them went to the spot with Veecharuval and attacked the deceased and caused his death.

It is not in controversy that one deceased died due to homicidal violence and following the inquest made by the Investigating Officer, the dead body was subjected to post-mortem and all the accused stood charged for the offences referred to above and on trial, accused 1 and 3 were found guilty of murder. Thangaraj vs. State. 2010 (3) CriLJ 3409 (Mad).

Though injuries by dangerous weapon are serious, offence under Section 307, not made out thus modified to one under Section 324. Dharmapal v. "State of Punjab. 1993 Cri LJ 2856 (SC).

High Court does not find any case for an offence under Section 307. I.P.C. because there is no definite opinion of the Doctor. The offence under Section 325. I.P.C.. is only made out. Permission to compound the offence is accorded. Abdul Latif v. State of M.P., 1994 Cr LR 55 N (MP).

Injuries was from, country-made pistol—Conviction was held u/Secs. 307, IPC and 324 IPC and 3/25 Arms Act. Revision petition was filed, the testimony of witness is reliable. The oral evidence is corroborated by medical evidence and recovery of pistol at the instance of accused. F.I.R. was promptly lodged. Hence, conviction u/Sec. 307, IPC and 3/25 Arms Act is sustained. Sumar v. State of Rajasthan, (1995) 2 RCD 434 (Raj).

Injuries was caused by appellant to his wife—Conviction and sentence thereof—Challenged in appeal. It was hence, held that more than one knife blow inflicted which were sufficient to cause death in ordinary course of nature. Hence, intention to cause death was made out. Since the injuries were caused under mental unbalance the sentence of 4 years, R.I. and fine of Rs. 500/- reduced to 2 years rigorous imprisonment and fine of Rs. 100/- respectively. Gulam Dastageer v. State, (1994) 2 WLC 607 (Raj).

The accused assembled together and attempted to murder the injured victim but evidence showed that main accused dealt blow with spade on head of victim and other accused had not come together with main accused. It was held that conviction under Section 307/149 was not sustainable but main accused was convicted under Section 324 as he had not repeated the blow on the injured. Muni Lal Paswan v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 1625 (Pat) : 2002(2) BLJ 693 : 2002(2) East Cri C 272.

The accused in another case under the influence of liquor had caused gun shot injury to victim in his hotel. The evidence of victim as to manner of occurrence was reliable and no evidence was led by defence to substantiate its case. The guilt of accused could be said to have been proved but keeping in view of the fact that injury caused was simple the conviction was altered to Section 324. Karunamoy Sarmah v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 2270 Orissa : 2003(95) Cut LT 477.

When injuries caused were simple in nature and were not on vital part of the body the offence under Section 324 was held to have been made out and conviction was altered from under Section 307 to one under Section 324 penal code. Sarjog Turi v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 2864 (Jhar) : AIR 2003 Jhar HCR 831 : 2003(3) East Cri C 188.

In a case the accused inflicted injuries on the deceased with knife. The injuries which were caused on abdominal area and were relatively of minor nature. He was admitted to the hospital where he died because of gangrene. The accused was held liable to be convicted under Section 324 and sentenced to undergo imprisonment for period already undergone and pay fine of Rs. 5000/-. State of Karnataka v. Bhadrayya Bhaskar Rane, 2004 Cr LJ (NOC) 111 : AIR 2004 Kant HCR 883.

The accused was alleged to have caused gun shot injury on person of complainant. Despite firing from close range non-vital part (thigh) was aimed at and shot was not repeated which exhibited that there was no intention to kill. Conviction of accused was altered from Sections 307 to 324 and taking into the account a 23 years long duration of case the sentence of imprisonment was substituted by a fine of Rs. 7500/- Rameshwar v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 3437 (All) : 2003 All LJ 1653 : 2003(1) All Cri R 720 : 2003(50) All LR 567.

Several persons were present at the place of occurrence. None of them tried to prevent accused from assaulting. The accused caused grievous injuries by inflicting

Farsa blows due to some dispute regarding cutting of paddy crops, he, however, had also accompanied the injured to the hospital after the occurrence. It was held that if accused had intention to kill, he could have killed the injured easily, and, therefore, the accused was guilty under Sections 326 and 324 and not under Section 307, IPC. Atawari Mandal v. State of Jharkhand, 2006 Cr LJ 291 (Jhar).

Keeping in view the nature of injuries and the statement of the doctor and other circumstances, it is not a case under Section 307, I.P.C., but a case under Section 324, I.P.C. Hence, conviction under Section 307, I.P.C., set aside, and the appellant is convicted under Section 324, I.P.C. Buddin v. State of .U.P., 1995 (32) ACC 116 (All).

Conviction under Section 307, I.P.C., was challenged in revision petitions. It was held that the accused appellant caused incised wounds to injured 'S' while he was taking water from accused's field. The incident was at spur of moment and there was no intention to kill. Hence, offence under Section 307 is not made out. However, conviction under Section 324 is justified. Ramadheen v. State of M.P., 1994 Cr LR (MP) 14.

Injuries were simple in nature—Conviction under Section 307 was challenged in appeal. The doctor admits that injuries on the person was simple in nature. The convictions cannot be based on assumption and presumption but actual facts on record. From the perusal of medical report and Statement of doctor no offence under Section 307 is made out. Hence, conviction under Section 307 I.P.C. is converted into one under Section 324, I.P.C. Bhau, Gir v. State of M.P., 1994 Cr LR 57 (N) (MP).

Conviction under Section 307, I.P.C., and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for 5 years was challenged in revision petition. The nature of altercation and conduct of the appellant while causing injury to deceased indicates that accused had actually no intention to murder nor he made such an attempt. His intention was only to teach a lesson and not to murder and with that end in view he attacked and caused injuries which were not sufficient to cause death. Hence no offence under Section 307, I.P.C., is made out. The conviction altered from under Section 307, I.P.C., to Section 324, I.P.C. Dilawar v. State, 1994 UP Cr R 288 (All).

Intention or knowledge to commit murder must exist—Injury was being skin deep only—Circumstances not revealing that assault was made with intent to murder—Thus case would fall under Section 324 and not under Section 307 as held by High Court—Parties being neighbours expressing desire to compound matter. It was held that to ensure lasting peace parties permitted to compound matter and hence conviction under Section 307 set aside and appellants acquitted. Sanjay Kumar v. State of M.P., 1994 SCC (Cri) 586 : 1994 Supp(1) SCC 502.

When only simple injuries caused and no fatal blow inflicted though accused had plenty of time, only beating was intended and not to cause death. Pravat Kumar Mishra v. State of Orissa, 1996 Cri LJ 4357 (Ori).

It was alleged that accused committed injury with chopper on neck of victim. But evidence was showing that there was grapping and dragging from both sides. Where assault between accused and deceased took place due to quarrel; nature of injury was found to be simple in nature and victim was completely conscious throughout. If accused cann't held liable for offence under Section 307, it would fall under Section 324 namely voluntarily causing hurt with dangerous weapon. Manohar v. State of Karnataka, 1997 Cri LJ 398.

Though both the accused came together but the role played by co-accused was minimal insofar as he had not assaulted the injured who was the real target but he had only inflicted minor injury on the hand of the son of injured with a knife Conviction of co-accused under section 307, read with section 34 along with man accused was held not proper and the co-accused was held liable for conviction under section 324, IPC. B.M. Singh v. State of Karnataka, 2001 Cri LJ 36 (Kant).

10. Sections 307 and 325, IPC.—The accused caused grievous and simple hurt with tappers knife to the victim. When the victim questioned her attitude of the accused towards his own daughter. It was held that in view of the relationship between the parties it could not be said that he had any requisite intention to do away with the life of the victim and therefore Section 307 was not attracted, but definitely the ingredients under Section 325, IPC were satisfied. Gurram Sambaiah v. State, 2005 Cr LJ 238 (AP) : 2005(1) Andh LT (Cri) 299 (AP).

Petitioner who was holding iron rod in his hand and other accused inflicted blow causing injuries on head of informant and his son. The injuries sustained by the victim, at the hands of the petitioners could not be denied as the factum of occurrence was corroborated by several witnesses as has been referred in the order impugned recorded by the learned Additional Sessions Judge. It was not the case of the prosecution that the accused persons had administered poison, rather the petitioner inflicted blow with iron rod on his head in furtherance of common intention with the co-accused causing injuries having got bearing in the injury report as well as in the post-mortem report of the deceased. However, the learned Counsel is silent as to the finding of pesticide in the stomach of the deceased in the viscera report furnished by the Forensic Science Laboratory which gives altogether a different circumstances as to the cause of death.

No offence in the given situation is made out under Section 302 or 307 of the Indian Penal Code against any of the petitioners and at best, it could be under Section 325 of the Indian Penal Code as the materials prima facie suggest without much more discussion and without prejudice to the merit of the case. As regards complicity of the petitioner Rupa Devi in the alleged offence is concerned, her earlier version before the police suggests that it was Dhananjay Kumhar who was aggressor and, therefore, prima facie, charge under Section 325/34 of the Indian Penal Code cannot be, in my view, directed against her and I find material sufficient to consider her case for discharge and accordingly she is discharged in Baghmara. For the reasons stated above, I find prima facie materials to proceed against other two petitioners for the charge under Section 325/ 34 of the Indian Penal Code. Anup Kumhar and Ors. vs. State of Jharkhand, 2010 (3) Cri LJ 2963 (Jhar).

The accused allegedly caused injuries to complainant by lathi, fist and kicks causing injuries on his head, hand and leg. There was absence of fracture on his body. It was held that from the nature and number of injuries caused and the weapon used it could not be said that the attempt was made to cause death of complainant and, therefore, the conviction of the accused under Section 307/149 IPC deserved to be converted to Section 325/149, IPC. Chand Patel v. State of MP, 2005 Cr LJ 3420 (MP) : 2005 Cri LR (SC & MP) Mpi 691 : 2005(4) MPHT 125.

11. Sections 307 and 149.—Held, on facts that the common object of the unlawful assembly was to give to a severe thrashing to the complainant, that is only voluntarily causing grievous hurt to him. The conviction under Section 307/149 was not therefore, warranted by law. AIR 1955 Bhopal 9 : 1955 Cr LJ 1033 ; AIR 1979 SC 1599 : 1980 Cr LJ 831 ; AIR 1982 SC 59 : 1982 Cr LJ 189 (no proof that the other accused used weapons driving assailant-sentence reduced); AIR 1974 SC 1567 : 1974 Cr LJ 1033 (the charge under Section 149 read with the substantive offences can not be vitiated if there are other persons who might not have identified or convicted but were party to the crime and together constitute the statutory number).

Where no over act was attributed to any of the accused on the injured, the mere fact that the accused writ armed with lathis would not by itself, prove that they shared the common object with which the main accused was inspired. In the instant case, the petitioners No. 3 to 5 were simply said to have been holding lathis at the relevant time and admittedly they were coming from field with paddy. So there was no any intention on their part for committing any occurence as well as the said occurrence took place at the spur of moment and the said accused had not used the lathis in any way. Thus the accused No. 3 to 5 could not be said to be members of the unlawful assembly. Naurangi Mahto v. State, 2001 Cri LJ 1525 (Jharkhand).

The High Court has completely overlooked the evidence on record and the impugned judgment shows total non-application of mind. The High Court observed that the doctor has not stated that the injury was sufficient to cause death in the ordinary course of nature. PW. 1 had noted that 1/3 of the leg was chopped off below the knee. He had categorically stated that the injury could have caused death. The Doctor i.e. the Radiologist clearly stated that the aforesaid chopping of the leg was grievous in nature. With some strange logic the High Court observed that merely on the testimony of witness it cannot be assumed that the injury was sufficient to cause death in ordinary course of nature.

The evidence of PW. 5 the victim clearly shows the gruesome nature of the attack and the intention of the accused persons. According to him, accused Ram Singh and Bapulal caught hold of him. He was laid down on the ground and the accused Krishan Lal chopped out the left foot and Ram Singh caught hold of his left leg and Bapulal caught hold of his right leg, Arjun caught hold of his leg and Krishan Lal kept his legs on his left hand and put clothes in his mouth and caught hold of his head. Leela Krishan said that his foot jaw has been chopped off and the heels should also be chopped out. Accused Suraj Singh kept his leg on a log of wood and Leela Krishan chopped out his feet by axe from above the ankle. The trial Court noticed that the leg was chopped out between the knee and the ankle. Krishan Lal asked Ram Singh to keep the chopped pieces of the leg in the bag and Ram Singh picked up the pieces of legs and kept them in the bag. Though accused Arjun Singh asked that both his eyes should be taken out, accused Ganga Ram told him that chopping of his one leg was sufficient to cause his death.

Thereafter the High Court directed suspension of sentence. By then they had suffered custody for about 3 months 15 days more. There was no similarity in the period of sentence already suffered by the accused persons when the High Court passed the impugned judgment.

Looked at from any angle the judgment of the High Court is clearly unsustainable. deserves to be set aside which we direct. The judgment of the trial Court stands restored so far as conviction as well as the sentences are concerned. State of Madhya Pradesh vs. Kashiram, AIR 2009 SC 1642 : 2009 (4) SCC 26 : 2009 CrLJ 1530 : 2009 (9) JT 140 : 2009 (1) SCR 806 : 2009 (2) Scale 118 : 2009 (1) SLT 765 : 2009 (2) JCC 872.

Attempt to murder—Incident was established—Intention of causing death was not established. Hence, conviction under Section 326/149 made out only. Chhota v. State of Rajasthan, 1995 Cr LR 108 (Raj).

The charge under Sections 307/149, IPC is about firing shots on the members of police force in the prosecution of the aforesaid common object. It is astonishing that there is allegation of firing shots by the accused in the prosecution of the aforesaid common object, but prosecution side (police and public witnesses) did not receive even a scratch on their bodies by the alleged firing in the prosecution of the common object and the accused-appellant is said to have himself received fire-arm injuries by the fires from the side of the police.

It was alleged that unlawful assembly was made by accused persons with common object to commit the alleged offence. But where five accused persons were acquitted, it was held that in such circumstances, conviction of other accused on the same evidence was not proper. Santosh Kumar v. State, 1997 Cri LJ 984 (Alld).

In Uma Shanker Bharti v. State of U.P., 2001 Cri LJ 362 (All), there was a group assault by 11 persons. One of the victims sustained head injury. The prosecution evidence was absolutely silent with regard to the author of the head injury . There was complete absence of specification of the author of the head injury. Even medical officer's had come up with a categorical statement that the head injury was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause his death. In view of the above facts, the conviction of accused persons under section 307, read with. Section 149 was held liable to be set aside.

12. Sections 307 and 326.—There is nothing incongruous between Sections 307 and 326 and conviction under both of them is therefore not improper, though punishment for them should be only one. 167 Ind Cas 943 : 38 Cr LJ 487 : A1R 1937 Sind 61. Where an accused person shoots one with a pistol and thereby causes hurt to him, he is liable to conviction under the latter part of Section 307 and his conviction under Section 326 for the same offence is not warranted. 1953 All LJ 408 : 1953 Cr LJ 1677 : AIR 1953 All 726.

Causing injuries, though with the intention of causing death but which do not result in death, does not come under Section 307. 25 Cut LT 212 : AIR 1959 Ori 21 : ILR 1958 Cut 700 : 1959 Cr LJ 213 (punishable under Section 326).

There was absolutely no reason to doubt the statements of witnesses with regard to the incident. PW.2 was an independent witness in as much that he had been employed with the complainant party as well as the accused party at various times. It also appears that he was the focus of the quarrel and the motive that had precipitated the incident. as both the parties were pushing for employing which had led to the unpleasant situation between them. ·Likewise we find difficult to disbelieve the statement of the injured victim himself as he has given a graphic description as to what had happened. It is true, as has been contended by Ms. Jaiswal. that there are some differences between the statements of these two witnesses but they are bound to occur with the evidence being recorded after about five years. It must also be borne in mind that a parrot like deposition after a long lapse of time smacks of tutoring and some differences in fact advance the credibility of the witnesses.

There is some uncertainty about the involvement of Neelam Bahal, appellant No.l. The facts of the case indicate that she was perhaps not aware that Rakesh Bahal was carrying a weapon in his pocket or on his person. The prosecution evidence also reveals that it was only after the quarrel had reached a certain pitch that he had rushed inside the house and had brought a knife and caused the injuries to Satish Chandra. We also find that no specific overt act has been attributed to Neelam Bahal and only a very tenuous role that has been ascribed to her. To our mind this kind of evidence creates a clear doubt as to her participation. Held that Neelam Bahal, appellant No.1 must be given the benefit of doubt, and thereby acquitted. The appeal qua her is allowed.

Though the general condition of the patient was very bad yet there is no categoric statement in the medical certificate issued by Dr. S.M.Sehgal that the injuries were in fact dangerous to life. We are unable to fathom as to whether this was a deliberate omission or an oversight but whatsoever it may be the benefit must accrue to the accused. We have also gone through the evidence of Dr.S.M.Sehgal and find that he had admitted that he had not mentioned that the injury was dangerous to the life as he did not think it necessary to do so. At the same time we are unable to accept Ms. Jaiswal"s statement that the case would fall under Sec. 323 or 324 of the IPC but in the light of the statement of victim that he had remained in hospital for fifteen days due to the injuries caused to him, makes out a case of grevious hurt. Rakesh Bahal alone should thus be held guilty under Sec. 326 of the IPC simpliciter. We are told that he has already undergone almost one year of the sentence and in the light of the fact that the incident happened in the year 1987 when he was a young man of about 25 and now must be of middle age, we reduce the sentence to the period already undergone by him. Neelam Bahal & Anr vs State of Uttarakhand, 2010 AIR SCW 88 : AIR 2010 SC 428

Revision against charges under I.P.C. and Arms Act—Husband caused 9 injuries to his wife by sword—All injuries found simple and not sufficient to cause death but there being strong suspicion against petitioner. Hence, simpleness of injuries has no importance at the time of framing of charge. Revision was therefore dismissed. Richpal Singh v. State of Rajasthan, 1994 RCC 631 : 1994 Cr LR 177 (Raj).

This Court do find absolutely no reason to doubt the statements of witnesses with regard to the incident. An independent witness in as much that he had been employed with the complainant party as well as the accused party at various times. It also appears that he was the focus of the quarrel and the motive that had precipitated the incident, as both the parties were pushing for employing which had led to the unpleasant situation between them. Likewise we find difficult to disbelieve the statement of PW. 3 the injured victim himself as he has given a graphic description as to what had happened. It is true, as has been contended that there are some differences between the statements of these two witnesses but they are bound to occur with the evidence being recorded after about five years. It must also be borne in mind that a parrot like deposition after a long lapse of time smacks of tutoring and some differences in fact advance the credibility of the witnesses. We also find that the counter version given by the accused cannot be accepted. The accused has claimed that PW. 3 had an evil eye on Neelam Bahal but if that was the reason for the incident they were further called upon to explain as to how the injuries had been suffered by PW. 3, more particularly, as the incident had apparently taken place outside the residential home of the appellants.

We are, however, of the opinion that there is some uncertainty about the involvement of Neelam Bahal, Appellant. The facts of the case indicate that she was perhaps not aware that Rakesh Bahal was carrying a weapon in his pocket or on his person. The prosecution evidence also reveals that it was only after the quarrel had reached a certain pitch that he had rushed inside the house and had brought a knife and caused the injuries to Satish Chandra. We also find that no specific overt act has been attributed to Neelam Bahal and only a very tenuous role that has been ascribed to her. To our mind this kind of evidence creates a clear doubt as to her participation.

We are, therefore, of the opinion that Neelam Bahal, Appellant must be given the benefit of doubt, and thereby acquitted. The appeal qua her is allowed.

A reading of the above would indicate that though the general condition of the patient was very bad yet there is no categorical statement in the medical certificate issued by doctor that the injuries were in fact dangerous to life. We are unable to fathom as to whether this was a deliberate omission or an oversight but whatsoever it may be the benefit must accrue to the accused. We have also gone through the evidence of doctor and find that he had admitted that he had mentioned that the injury was dangerous to the life as he did not think it necessary to do so. At the same time we are unable to accept that the case would fall under Sections 323 and 324 of the IPC but in the light of the statement of victim that he had remained in hospital for fifteen days due to the injuries caused to him, makes out a case of grievous hurt. Rakesh Bahal alone should thus be held guilty under Section 326 of the IPC simpliciter. We are told that he has already undergone almost one year of the sentence and in the light of the fact that the incident happened in the year 1987 when he was a young man of about 25 and now must be of middle age, we reduce the sentence to the period already undergone by him. Neelam Bahal and Anr. vs. State of Uttarakhand, 2010 (2) CrLJ 2100 (SC).

Attempt was to murder—Conviction under Section 307, I.P.C.—Revision petition was filed and the medical report does not show that act of throwing acid on the face and eyes of injured would have caused death. Therefore, the conviction is altered to one under Section 326, I.P.C. for grievous hurt from under Section 307, I.P.C. Kulamani Sahu v. State of Orissa, 1994 Cri LJ 2245 : (1994) 3 Crimes 250 (Ori).

Where the injury was found to be relatively minor and facts and circumstances also did not reveal intention and purpose of accused to murder victim, conviction of accused under Section 326, IPC was held proper. State v. Dinesh Shastry, 2004 CrLJ 332 ; AIR 2003 Kant HCR 3076 : 2004(1) All Cri LR 926 : 2003(4) KCCR 2565.

The accused had suddenly arrived at the site of incident and had given two blows from behind and had thereafter run away from the place of incident. The size of the blade of the knife was not such from which it could be said that the intention was to commit murder. The accused had inflicted two blows on the stomach of the victim who had to be operated for two hours and discharged after 9 days. It was held that that the accused committed the offence under Section 326, IPC and not under Section 307. Prakash Chandrappa Channur v. State of Maharashtra, 2005 Cr LJ 1085 (Bom) : 2005 All MR (Cri) 584 (Bom).

When injuries suffered by complainant were neither dangerous to his life nor capable of causing death, conviction altered from Section 307 to Section 326, IPC. State of Maharashtra v. Hanshchandra, 1997 Cri LJ 612 (Bom).

Offence was of attempting to commit murder of his wife—Acquittal appealed by State—Accused suspecting fidelity of his wife—Wife sustained grievous injuries—Accused husband living separately with his two children, only husband was in house when he assaulted his wife on her entering in house—Wife's evidence not direct but only circumstantial one—She not supporting prosecution case completely—Held, circumstantial one. Hence, circumstances strong enough to connect accused with offence, conviction under Section 326, I.P.C., justified. State of Karnataka v. Krishnappa, (1994) 1 Crimes 884 (Kant).

On re-appraisal in an appeal by the State against the acquittal of the accused, P.Ws. 2 and 4 were held not tutored witnesses. Evidence of P.W. 4 fitted into the stream of events and presence of P.W. 2 was found established. Injuries to P.W. 5 were corroborated by P.W. 4. Evidentiary infirmities against P.Ws. 2, 4 and 5 were not material regards injuries caused by the accused who had as well caused an injury to P.W. 5. Held, the conviction of the accused should be under Section 326, I.P.C. (1986) 2 Crimes 524.

Though injury was caused by sharp weapon on vital part of body i.e. head yet said fact by itself, in absence of any fracture or X-ray report, not sufficient to declare said injury as dangerous to life and thus conviction under Section, 307 or 326 not proper. State of Punjab v. Bant Singh, 1996 Cri LJ 3886 (P & H).

When injuries suffered were neither dangerous to his life nor capable of causing death, conviction altered from Section 307 to Section 326, IPC. State of Maharashtra v. Harish Chandra Tukaram Awatade, 1997 Cri LJ 612 (Bom).

14. Sentence.—The sentence that the accused in no case be reduced till he has undergone a minimum period of 25 years in Jail is bad in law. 1982 Cr LJ 1762 : AIR 1979 SC 699 : 1979 Cr LJ 642 : AIR 1977 SC 1338 : 1977 Cr LJ 1007 : AIR 1982 SC 1765; 1982 Cr LJ (Supreme Court can reduce the sentence to period already undergone).

Appropriateness of Sentence. In this case we feel the High Court has erred in balancing the relevant factors. The High Court seems to have waived off the custodial sentence and let off the respondents with a modest fine mainly on two considerations

One, that the offence was committed in the year 1996 and it would serve no usefu purpose to send the respondents to jail after ten years of the occurrence. And two, th respondents being convicted of the offence of causing grievous hurt in place attempte murder. We are unable to agree with the High Court on both the counts. Any inordinat delay in conclusion of a criminal trial undoubtedly has highly deleterious effect on th society generally and particularly on the two sides to the case. But it will be a grave mistake to assume that delay in trial does not cause acute suffering and anguish to the victim of the offence. In many cases the victim may suffer even more than the accused. There is, therefore, no reason to give all the benefits on account of the delay in trial to the accused and to completely deny all justice to the victim of the offence. In this case there is nothing to indicate that the appellants or the prosecution were responsible for the delay in trial. We are, therefore, of the view that the High Court was not right in substituting the custodial sentence of the respondents to only fines of Rs. 3500.

Coming to the second reason weighing with the High Court, it is a mistake to think that as a rule all offences falling under Sec. 326 would be less serious than the offences falling under Sec. 307 of the Penal Code and would consequently attract lighter sentence.

From the injuries suffered by Appellant No. 2 it is evident that though the respondents did not intend to kill him altogether they surely wanted to leave him crippled for a lifetime. In our opinion, therefore, the High Court was not right in letting them off on completing sentence of imprisonment of merely four months and three months respectively. We accordingly restore the sentence of rigorous imprisonment given to the respondents 1 and 3 and direct that they must serve rigorous imprisonment for two years in addition to the fine of Rs. 3,500 imposed by High Court, in case of default in payment of fine the respondents would suffer simple imprisonment for six months. On realization of the amounts of fine Rs. 6,000.00 would be paid to Appellant No. 2. Mangal Singh vs. Kishan Singh, AIR 2009 SC 1535 : 2008 (12) JT 582 : 2008 (16) SCR 505 : 2008 (15) Scale 33 : 2008 (9) SLT 564.

Incident occurred over boundary dispute when in heat of passion appellant fired two shots inflicting grievous injuries to complainant not on vital part of body and incidence occurred about 10 years back and appellant being 70 years of age punishment for long period not justified. Held. sentence reduced to 3 years due to protracted litigation. Joginder Singh v. State of Punjab, (1995) 2 CC Cases 230 (P&H).

As pointed out the manner in which the alleged incident is supposed to have taken place does not fit in with the injuries received by the complainant. The most glaring inconsistency is the story of the complainant's having held the blade of the knife, alleged to have been used in the commission of the offence, with both hands and thereby suffering incised injuries on his left palm. The injury report shows that the complainant did not have any incised injury or any other injury on his left palm and the injury to his right palm was not of an incised nature, but a bruise which could have been caused by a blunt instrument. Moreover, the knife, which was seized and was alleged to have been used for the commission of the offence, was never sent for forensic examination so as to connect it with the offence. Furthermore, the other sharp-cutting implements, which were also seized, were also not sent for such examination. Even the mat which had blood stains on it was not sent for such examination and it could, therefore, not be proved as to whether the blood stains thereon were of human or animal origin. Coupled with the above is the fact that on going to the hospital in the night for medical treatment, the complainant did not even disclose to the doctor as to how he had sustained the injuries. The doctor was, therefore, not at all aware of any such incident, as presented by the prosecution, having been committed. Coupled with the above is the fact of the delay in lodging the FIR after consultation with the local villagers. Therefore, chances of fabrication in the FIR cannot be ruled out. Prabir Mondal and Anr. vs. State of West Bengal, 2010 (1) Cri LJ 444 (SC).

Death sentence—Rarest of rare cases. The murders were not only cruel, brutal but were diabolic. The High Court has held that those who were guilty of rape and murder deserve death sentence, while those who were convicted for murder only were to be awarded life sentence. The High Court noted that the whole incident is extremely revolting, it shocks the collective conscience of the community and the aggravating circumstances have outweighed the mitigating circumstances in the case of accused persons 1, 2 and 4; but held that in the case of others it was to be altered to life sentence. The High Court itself noticed that five members of a family were brutally murdered, they were not known to the accused and there was no animosity towards them. Four of the witnesses were of tender age, they were defenseless and the attack was without any provocation. Some of them were so young that they could not resist any attack by the accused. A minor girl of about fifteen years was dragged in the open field, gang raped and done to death. There can be no doubt that the case at hand falls under the rarest of rare category. There was no reason to adopt a different yardstick for A2, A3 and A5. In fact, A3 was the main person. He assaulted PW. 1 and took the money from the deceased.

Above being the position, the appeal filed by the accused persons deserves dismissal, which we direct and the State's appeal deserves to be allowed. A2, A3 and A5 are also awarded death sentence. In essence all the six accused persons deserve death sentence. Ankush Maruti Shinde vs. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2009 SC 2609 : 2009 (6) SCC 667 : 2009 (6) JT 358 : 2009 (7) SCR 182 : 2009 (6) Scale 388 : 2009 (3) Supreme 760 : 2009 (4) SLT 470.

Injuries inflicted on right side of chest of victim—Guilt was proved and appeal was pending since 1986. Held, sentence of imprisonment reduced to period already undergone for one year and 10 months. Manoj v. State of Haryana, (1995) 2 CC Cases 469 (P & H).

When axe was used to cause grievous injury, accused to be convicted under Section 326 and not under Section 325, I.P.C. Ananda Moharana v. State, 1996 Cri LJ 2654 (Ori).

Where incident occurred nine years back and parties were real brothers. Sentence of imprisonment reduced to period already undergone. Rup Singh v. State of Punjab, (1995) 2 CC Cases 496 (P & H).

Accused compromised with complainant and filed joint pursis. Accused a youngman being first offender and not hardened criminal. Held, though offence under Section 307 is not compoundable, sentence reduced to already undergone with payment of compensation of Rs. 7,500/- to complainant. Modan v. State of Maharashtra, 1995 Cr LJ 1419 (Bom).

In the case under Section 307, I.P.C., the High Court reduced the term of substantive punishment from 3 years to 3 months which amounted to mockery in the eyes of justice. The quantum of fine was however enhanced. Criticising the action, Supreme Court expressed fears that if pockets are fill, crime in the circumstances even for an offence prescribing life imprisonment can be committed. Sentence of trial court restored. 1985 Cr LJ 1361 (SC) : AIR 1985 SC 1130 : 1985 Cr LR (SC) 290 : (1995) 3 SCC 225 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 241.

Victim suffered multiple injuries with spear and lathies by assault. Conviction which was challenged in appeal. Hence, the assailants were known to victim and he had adequate opportunity to identify them. The medical report of injuries corroborated prosecution case. Hence, prosecution case proved beyond doubt. Conviction sustained with modification in sentence. Thakur Ram v. State of U.P., 1995 All LJ 848 (All).

Offence was made under Section 307—Conviction was not challenged—Only prayed for reduction of sentence of 10 years imprisonment—Accused threw acid on face of victim which was disfigured. Hence, it was held that on facts and circumstances sentence reduced to 5 years imprisonment and fine enhanced to Rs. 20,000/- payable to injured. Gopal v. State, (1995) 1 RCD 131 (Raj).

Conviction and sentence under Section 307/34, I.P.C. hence an appeal was filed. Accused, a youngman, apprehended at spot alongwith robbed articles and country-made pistol—Evidence of prosecution-witnesses corroborated with evidence of complainant—Accused also fired shot from pistol during police-chase. Hence conviction justified—However, considering protracted litigation and young age of accused, sentence reduced to period of 1-½ years, imprisonment already undergone. Mukhtar Singh Mukha v. State of Haryana, (1995) 2 CC Cases 337 (P & H).

F.I.R. was delayed which was not explained. There was pistol shot injury—Injuries showed shot was from very close range and shot was alleged to be made from some distance—Medical evidence corroborated the case and parties compromised to live peacefully—Quantum of sentence was reduced. Sukhminder Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 2 CC Cases 190 (P & H).

Attempt to murder and conviction under Section 307, I.P.C., and 307/34, I.P.C. of appellants and sentenced to five years R.I. respectively which was challenged in appeal. It was held that the appellants have been convicted and sentenced for non-compoundable offence under Section 307, I.P.C. for five years R.I. He has already undergone some imprisonment. In view of facts and circumstances of the case relating to compromise and betterment of relations between parties it is just and proper that imprisonment already undergone will meet ends of justice. Inam v. State of U.P., 1994 (24) ALR 362 (All).

Where offence under Section 307 fully proved—As regard quantum of sentence, same reduced from 7 years R.I. to 4 'years' R.I. considering his age of 25 years, being of scheduled caste and being enraged at spur of moment. Sukha s/o Ram Lal v. State of Rajasthan, 1995 Cr LJ 554 (Raj).

Conviction under Section 307 and sentenced to R.I. for 4 years—Challenged in revision petition. Hence, the appellant repeatedly gave two blows on front of the neck and on left upper part of the chest of complainant. Hence, an inference can reasonably be drawn that appellant had the intention and requisite knowledge to commit murder which is sufficient for charge under Section 307, I.P.C. No interference warranted. Nageshwar Shah v. State of Punjab, (1994) 1 Recent Cr R 327 (P & H).

Tried and convicted on a charge for offence punishable under Section 307, I.P.C., which he challenged in appeal. The recovery of spear on the disclosure of the accused is unacceptable as the accused would not keep concealed spear in his hut at the risk of creating evidence. The prosecution has not led any evidence to prove that accused was sole occupant of that hut. Hence, there is no option but to accept the appeal and acquit the appellant of charge under Section 307, I.P.C. Resham Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 2 CC Cases 529 (P & H).

Charges framed under Section 307, I.P.C., was challenged in revision. Hence, the tractor was driven negligently which dashed against bicycle of injured who received grievous injuries. Hence, charges should have been framed under Section 338, I.P.C., instead of under Section 307, I.P.C. impugned order set aside. Arun Kumar v. State of M.P., (1994) 2 Crimes 164 (MP).

When accused fired is hot at victim friend lies at spur of moment infiring his leg with no intention to kill and be suffered long detention as under-trial accused under Court-martial proceedings, sentence of imprisonment reduced to period already undergone. Union of India v. Anand Singh Bisht, 1996 Cri LJ 4435 (SC) ; See also Ashok Kalyan Dass v. State of U.P., 2005 Cr LJ 1009 (All) : 2005 All LJ 130 : 2004(50) All Cri C 373 : 2004(3) All Cri R 2996.

15. Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compou-ndable—Triable by Court of Session.

That you, on or about the.............. day of.............. at.............. did an act, to wit..............with such intention (or knowledge), and under such circumstances, that if by that you had caused the death of A, B, you would have been guilty of murder under Section 302 (and that you thereby caused hurt to the said A, B, by the said act) and thereby committed an offence under Section 307 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct you to be tried on the said charge.

The charge should contain previous accusation. The charge under one section and the conviction under another was held to be bad. AIR 1960 MP 11 : 1960 Cr LJ 79 : 1958 Jab LJ 634.

Where the accused with intention to cause death of deceased, gave three axe blows on him while co accused caused an injury from blunt side of axe and no material was on record for framing a charge under Section 307, IPC against co-accused. Charge framed under Section 307 against co-accused was set aside. Prabhu Dayal v. State of MP, 2004 Cr LJ 2990 (MP) : 2004(1) MPHT 30 : 2004(2) MPLJ 81.

Specific charges—Non-mentioning of specific Section 149 in charge—Effect of. A careful reading of Charge No. 4 and Charge No. 5 leaves no manner of doubt, since the transaction mentioned in Charge No. 1 has been made integral part thereof, that all the necessary ingredients of Sec. 149 IPC are implicit therein except mentioning of Sec. 149 IPC specifically. The particulars stated in Charge Nos. 4 and 5 are reasonably sufficient to give the appellants adequate notice of Sec. 149 IPC although not specifically mentioned. Is non-mentioning of Sec. 149 in Charge No. 4 and Charge No. 5 a fundamental defect of an incurable illegality that may warrant setting aside the conviction and sentence of the appellants? We do not think so. Non-framing of a charge under Sec. 149 IPC, on the face of the charges framed against the appellants would not vitiate their conviction; more so when the accused have failed to show any prejudice in this regard. The present case is a case where there is mere omission to mention Sec.

149 in Charge Nos. 4 and 5 which at the highest may be considered as an irregularity and since the appellants have failed to show any prejudice, their conviction and sentence is not at all affected. Tenor of cross-examination of PW-1 and PW-3 by the defence also rules out any prejudice to them. The offence, in the established facts and circumstances of the case, under Sec. 302 read with Sec. 149 IPC is implicit and applying the dictum laid down by the Constitution Bench of this Court in Willie (William) Slaney, the omission to mention Sec. 149 IPC specifically in the Charge Nos. 4 and 5 cannot affect their conviction. In no way their conviction is rendered bad as the appellants had assembled together armed with axes and eathapululu (sickle) and were parties to the assault on D-1 and D-2 and others. In a situation such as this it was not obligatory upon the prosecution to prove which specific overt act was done by which of the accused. Anna Reddy Sambasiva Reddy vs. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 2661 : 2009 (3) Crimes 17 (SC) : 2009 (12) SCC 546 : 2009 (5) JT 617 (SC) : 2009 (6) SCR 755 : 2009 (6) Scale 223 : 2009 (4) Supreme 506.

17. Probation.—The legislature has prescribed life imprisonment as maximum punishment for the offence u/S. 307 of IPC. Hence as per provisions relating to Probation of Offenders Act such benefit could not be extended to accused persons as they have been found guilty u/S. 307/34 of IPC. Even otherwise, the alleged offence was committed by the accused against State and the manner in which it was committed in open market, they cannot be extended such benefit otherwise it will give a wrong message to the society at large. Ramesh and others v. State of M.P., 2006 CriLJ 3815 (MP).

Accused caused injury by firing gun with intention to commit murder. Offence under Sections 307/34, I.P.C., made out. There were no extenuating circumstances. Hence, benefit of First Offenders Probation Act cannot be granted. Mohar Singh v. State of U.P., 1995 Cr LJ 649 (Alld).

Conviction under Section 307—No injury received from gun fire—Appellant being under intoxication—No intention or knowledge to cause death was there neither motive nor previous enmity. Hence conviction converted to Section 336. Appellant being aged 54 years and Government servant and only person to maintain his family, probation of good conduct allowed to him. Divakar Mishra v. State of M.P., 1995 Cr LR 184 (MP).

No offence under Section 307 or Sections 307/34, I.P.C., is made out against accused-respondents who were convicted only under Sections 452 and 323/34, I.P.C. Hence, taking into consideration the age antecedents the fact accused had already undergone imprisonment for more than 2-1/2 years and over all circumstance the benefit of probation is granted. Bhan Raj v. Rajesh, (1995) 1 CC Cases 336 (P & H).

18. Conviction.—It was a broad day light incident. The eye-witness account inspires confidence and must be accepted as true. Evidence sufficiently clinched the guilt of the accused. Hence, no illegality in awarding conviction. Ganpal v. State of U.P., 1995 (32) ACC 280 (All).

Because of treatment of husband-wife committed suicide—Conviction under Section 498-A, I.P.C., which was challenged in appeal—Prosecution case proved by dying declaration, statement to police and evidence of deceased's mother and brother. Medical evidence proved that death was due to burns as a result of pouring kerosene and setting fire to herself. Hence conviction for offence under Sections 306 and 498-A.

I.P.C. confirmed. Kishan Bahadur v. State of A.P., (1994) 2 ALT 9 (NRC) : (1994) 1 ALT (Cr) 620 (AP).

Accused tried for attempting to commit murder of his real brother—Conviction under Section 307, I.P.C., and sentenced to R.I. for 5 years which was challenged in appeal. It was held that the court has to see is whether the act irrespective of its result was done with intention or knowledge and under circumstances mentioned in Section 307, I.P.C. An attempt in order to be criminal need not be the penultimate act. It is sufficient in law if there is present an intent coupled with some overt act in execution thereof. Hence, conviction confirmed. Sukhwinder Singh v. State of Himachal Pradesh, (1994) 2 Sim LC 245 (AP).

Offence held under Section 307—Injury caused by dangerous weapon—The upper and middle region of the abdomen injured—offence under Section 307, I.P.C., made out. Conviction was held fully justified. Arjun Thakur v. State, 1994 Cri 3526 (1994) : CLR 234 (Ori).

Conviction under Section 307 is not permissible in absence of medical evidence. Mala Yadav v. State of Bihar, (1994) 1 East Cr C 299 : 1 BLJ 343 (Pat).

Where there was culpable homicide—It will be murder unless it can be brought within mischief of exceptions or ousted from all explanations in Section 302, I.P.C.—Evidence not sufficient to come to conclusion of guilt. Conviction cannot be held sustained. Pati Ram v. State of U.P., (1994) 31 All Cr C 605 (All).

Belated F.I.R. lodged in the case was satisfactorily explained. Practising advocates were not interested witnesses who had corroborated evidence of the complainant. On the other hand evidence of D.W. 1 was unreliable. Yet untenable. Conviction upheld. (1986) 2 Crimes 553 (MP).

There was dispute over irrigation of fields. Panchayat called. Hot words exchange took place. Accused persons attacked other party including panch. Severe injuries caused to them. Accused persons reached spot with pre-planning of attack and assault and thus proved to be aggressors. It was held, that no right of private defence available. Injuries sustained by accused persons insignificant. Prosecution-case proved beyond doubt—Held, conviction upheld. Pyare v. State of U.P., 1995 Cr LJ 2343 (All).

On the day of the occurrence P.W. 17 had found multiple punctured wounds with about 17 entry wounds in the middle part of the hand from the right side blow. The X-rays showed fracture of the right side unla. An attempt to murder, has therefore, to be read ultimate. M.P. Khachai v. State of Gujarat, 1996 Cr LJ 2465 (SC).

In absence of evidence that recovered knife only caused said injury, conviction not justified. Accused acquitted. Rajbir v. State of Haryana, (1995) 3 CC Cases 86 (P & H).

Complainant wife alleging that accused husband regularly beat her and once attempted to kill her and fact of cruelty proved but intention to kill not proved and, therefore, accused convicted for offence of cruelty only. State v. Regulagadda Anandarao, 1996 Cri LJ 4503 (AP).

Where victim sustained 11 injuries inflicted by four accused persons, which were not serious in nature then conviction of accused under Section 307 r/w Section 34 of IPC just and proper. Girija Shankar v. State of UP, AIR 2004 SC 1808 : 2004(3) SCC 793 2004(1) Supreme 876 : 2004 Cr LJ 1388 : 2004(1) Crimes 337 (SC).

It is sufficient to justify a conviction under Section 307, if there is present an intent coupled with some overt act in execution thereof and as such it is not essential that bodily injury capable of causing death should have been inflicted. R.Prakash v. State of Karnataka, AIR 2004 SC 1812 : 2004 Cr LJ 1391 (SC) : 2004(2) Supreme 78 : 2004(2) Crimes 72 (SC) : 2004(1) JCC 414.

In a case the victim was chased and assaulted but instead of original intended victim some-body else was also assaulted and killed. It was held that all will be held guilty under Section 302/149 but accused assaulting PW1 would also be liable under Section 307. Where accused caused injuries in an attempt to commit murder of a lady whose evidence was quite cogent and reliable the conviction of accused was upheld. Ratan Lal v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 4402 (Uttra) : 2003(2) UC 1351 UTR.

Where Courts below have concurrently found evidence of injured eye-witnesses that accused/appellant inflicted knife stab injury in abdomen of victims to be acceptable therefore conviction and sentence imposed warrants no interference. Nasir Sikander Shaikh v. State of Maharashtra, 2005 (2) Crimes 218 (SC) : AIR 2005 (SC) 2533 : 2005 Cr LJ 2621 : 2005(2) Crimes 218 (SC) : 2005(4) Supreme 49.

Where evidence of complainant, injured and eye-witnesses that accused shot complainant on his right leg was corroborated by medical evidence and gun shot injury found to be fatal, the conviction of accused under Section 307, IPC just and proper. Bipin Bihari v. State of MP, 2005 Cr LJ 2048 (MP) : 2005(1) MPHT 285 : 2005(2) MPLJ 514.

Where accused assaulted victim with knife on his vital part resulting in serious injury in nature therefore conviction warrants no interference. Hari Mohan Mandal v. State of Jharkhand, 2005 (3) East Cr C 57 (SC) : AIR 2004 (SC) 3687 : 2004(1) Crimes 434 : 2004(3) Scale 466 : 2004(2) Supreme 460.

The evidence of victim that the accused dealt blow by knife on his belly while he was sleeping in house of informant was corroborated by other prosecution witness. Doctor examining him proved that injury sustained by him was grievous in nature possibly caused by sharp cutting weapon, conviction held proper. Sarjag Turi v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 2270 (Orissa) : 2003(95) Cut LT 477.

19. Conviction and sentence.—When both Courts below have concurrently found prosecution's evidence regarding involvement of accused in incident to be acceptable then in absence of any material to probablise defence case, concurrent findings required no interference in special leave appeal. Nasir Sikandar Shat v. State of Maharashtra, 2005 (3) East Cr C 1 (SC) : 2005 Cr LJ 2621 (SC) : 2005(2) Crimes 218 : 2005(10) SCC 585 : 2005(4) Supreme 49.

Conviction under Secs. 307/110 instead of under Secs. 302/109—Validity. The High Court on appeal held that so far as conviction of Appellant No. 1 is concerned, he was the person who gave the order and after that a fatal blow was inflicted by Appellant No. 2 on the deceased. He has been rightly convicted under Sec. 302 read with Sec. 109 IPC and so far as Appellant No. 2 is concerned he was convicted under Sec. 302 IPC.

PW-4 is the informant i.e. wife of the deceased and PW-3 is the father of the deceased. From the evidence of PWs. 3 and 4 it is clear that there were physical fights abuses. At the time of abuses except PWs. 3 and 4 nobody else was there. The other persons came there just to stop the fight hearing noise on the road. On a close reading of the evidence is seen that the accused persons were armed. There was really no direct exhortation to kill but the same was to the effect that the deceased and others should not be permitted to run away and should be attacked. On hearing the exhortation accused No. 2 pierced the spear to the chest of the deceased. The evidence of PWs. 3 and 4 are different so as to the manner of exhortation. One says "Maro Sale Chintamani Ko" while the other said "Maro Sale Ko Jaan Se". The words "Jaan Se" appears to be entered later in the records. Jaleshwar Singh vs. State of Bihar, 2009 CrLJ 3995 : 2009 (2) Crimes 383 (SC) : 2009 (7) JT 572 : 2009 (7) Scale 219 : 2009 (8) SCR 130.

There was a dispute between wife of injured and sister of accused in which injured was stabbed by accused due to which he suffered grievous injuries as was proved by documentary evidence as well as evidence of wife of informant. However, since independent witness was not produced and weapon of offence was not produced, the conviction was upheld but sentence was reduced to the period already undergone. Muna Jani v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 3482 (Orissa).

On perusal of the statement of the complainant though he had not stated anything against the co-accused but by his statement for the involvement of the appellant/accused is found to be proved that he is the person who armed with a country-made pistol tried to cause injury to the complainant and also commit robbery by forcibly taken away the motor-cycle belonging to him. Moreover, the prosecution as discussed herein above also proved the seizure of the looted property, the motor-cycle from the possession of the appellant/accused and in such circumstances offence punishable under Section 307 of IPC and 394 read with 397 of the IPC is fully proved by the prosecution against the appellant.

In such circumstances, for the offence of robbery, the minimum sentence provided with the aid of Section 397 of IPC is of seven years and no grounds are available for any reduction of the aforesaid sentence. Hariballabh K. Rawat vs. State of M.P., 2010 (2) CrLJ 2309 (Gwalior).

The accused had attempted to commit murder of own relative while living in adjoining house. They scuffled with each other and inflicted injuries to each other but how quarrel took place was not clearly explained by the prosecution. The accused pleaded right of private defence. It was held that in case where right of private defence is pleaded blows given by accused could not be measured in golden scales. Hence acquittal of accused was justified. State v. Badri Prasad, 2003 Cr LJ 4364 (MP) : 2003(2) MPHT 329.

Where in a case, the accused and the victim who had gone to cinema and were coming back by bicycle, suddenly got down form the bicycle, inflicted injuries on his back and abdomen and pressed his neck. It was held that accused in the circumstances was liable to be convicted under Section 307, IPC. The Court, however, considering the background facts and peculiar features of the case reduced the sentence of 10 years RI to custodial sentence of 5 years R.I. Bappa alias Babu v. State of Maharashtra, 2004 Cr LJ 3877 : AIR 2004 SC 4119 : 2004(3) Crimes 214 (SC) : 2004(6) SCC 485 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 1794 : 2004(5) Supreme 740

According to medical evidence, the accused had caused injuries to the victim which were sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause the death. The conviction of accused under Section 307, IPC was held proper. Vinod Kumar v. State, 2003 Cr LJ (NOC) 189 : 2002 All LJ 2464 : 2002 (45) All Cri C 602 : 2002 (3) All Cri R 2129 : 2002 (4) Crimes 156.

The accused, a notorious goose stabbed the victim who was chit-chatting with friends at a vegetable shop. No one from locality came forward to give evidence. Evidence of friends of victim was trustworthy and the conviction of accused under Section 307, IPC was held proper but keeping in mind that injuries inflicted were simple in nature, sentence of 10 years RI was reduced to 7 years RI. Aravdily Shankar v. State of AP, 2004 Cr LJ 4456 (AP) : 2004(2) ALD (Crl) : 2004(2) Andh LT (Cr) AP 629.

Where grievous injuries were inflicted on vital parts of body of the complainant by lethal weapons causing fracture of skull and all the witness had stated that accused persons attacked with deadly weapons with intention to commit murder. It was held that discharge of accused on the ground that the doctor had not opined that the injuries were sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death was erroneous and that the accused was liable to be convicted of the offence. Sechdeo v. State of Rajasthan, 2004 Cr LJ (NOC) 316 (Raj) : 2004(1) Raj Cri C 125 : 2003(3) Raj LR 790 : 2004(1) WLC 68.

The accused was alleged to have inflicted bodily injury capable of causing death but evidence showed that accused had caused one injury on vital part of body and another on non-vital part of body. Injuries were caused despite the interference by five person. It was held that the accused was liable to be convicted under Section 307. *R. The accused allegedly hurled vulgar abuses against ladies of house of prosecution witness. He then wielded Aruvaal, a sharp-edged weapon and armed at the neck of prosecution witness. A fracture injury was also caused to the other prosecution witnesses. It was held that the conviction of accused under Section 307 was proper. Shankar alias Mysooram v. State, 2004 Cr LJ (NOC) 353 (Mad).

The accused was nursing bad blood due to encroachment on his land by the complainant. The accused went to the house of complainant and the complainant seeing the accused started running. Accused fired at him with country made pistol on his back. It was held that conviction of accused under Section 307 was proper. Babu Ram v. State of UP, 2005 Cr LJ 165 (All) : 2004 All LJ 3665 : 2004(50) All Cri C 93 : 2004(3) All Cri C 93.

There was no evidence on record that the accused had received any injury.

Moreover there was no suggestion made to the prosecution witnesses that they had assaulted the accused as a result of which he had suffered any injury. The Court held that the conviction of accused was proper. Nasir Sikander Sheikh v. State of Maharashtra, 2005 Cr LJ 2621 (SC) : AIR 2005 (SC) 2533 : 2005(10) SCC 858 : 2005(5) Scale 81 : 2005(2) Crimes 218 : 2005(4) Supreme 49.

Conviction under Section 307, IPC on basis of statement recorded either under Sections 161 and 164, Cr PC, in absence of proper identification of accused not proper. Bishnu v. State, 1996 Cri LJ 3572 (Del).

The charge under Section 307/149, I.P.C., in about firing shots on the members of police force in the prosecution of the aforesaid common object. It is astonishing that there is allegation of firing shots by the accused in the prosecution of the aforesaid common object, but prosecution side (Police and Public witnesses) did not receive even a scratch on their bodies by the alleged firing in the prosecution of the common object and the accused—Appellant is said to have himself receive fire-arm injuries by the fires from due side of the police.

In the view of the above discussion, this criminal appeal ought to be allowed and the accused—Appellant deserves to be acquitted. Ram Bharosey v. State, 1996 Cr LJ 2023 (All).

Where there was marpit and both sides were injured—Conviction and sentence of appellants was challenged in appeal. Accused-side has two person as victims and has sustained 22 injuries one of whom died whereas prosecution has 3 victims none of whom died and only one of them was examined as witness. Hence, defence version was more than probable. Appellant acquitted and appeal allowed. Bagoo Ram v. State, 1995 UP Cr R 17 (All).

When investigating officer not examined and injury reports admitted at appellate stage but doctor not examined, conviction not sustainable. Dusadan Bhoi v. State of Orissa, 1996 Cri LJ 3806 (Ori).

Death sentence—Imposition of—When valid. Murder of six members of a family including helpless women and children having been committed in a brutal, diabolic and bristly manner and the crime being one which is enormous in proportion which shocks the conscious of law, the death sentence as awarded in respect of accused Sattan and Guddu was the appropriate sentence and the High Court ought not to have altered it.

Before dealing with the position in law as highlighted by this Court relating to rarest of rare categories where death sentence can be awarded, submissions made by learned Amicus Curiae to show existence of mitigating circumstances need to be noted. It is stated by learned Amicus Curiae that motive is not clearly established. This is contrary to the conclusions of the High Court. In fact, the High Court has treated that an entire family was eliminated and if the evidence of witness is considered reliable and trustworthy, the inadequacy and insufficiency of motive pales into insignificance and recedes behind the curtain. So far as the specific overt acts are concerned, it is to be noted that apart from the accused persons who faced trial, three of these persons, namely, absconding accused were described as accused. Six persons were killed. It is not expected that a lady witnessing such a massacre would note the details. State of Uttar Pradesh vs. Sattan, 2009 (4) SCC 736 : 2009 (2) Crimes 121 (SC) : 2009 (4) JT 347 : 2009 (3) SCR 643 : 2009 (3) Scale 394 : 2009 (2) Supreme 465 : 2009 (2) SLT 641.

Accused gave fist blow on stomach to injured. No grievous injury was found. The knowledge of causing injuries capable of causing death of victim cannot be inferred. Intention to cause death was not there. Hence conviction under Section 307, I.P.C. set aside. Pawan Kumar v. State of Rajasthan, 1995 Cr LR 261 (Raj).

In absence of any injury on vital part of body or endangering life, petitioner liable to be convicted under Section 326, IPC. Tamilselvane v. U.T. of Pondicherry, 1997 (1) Crimes 153 (Mad).

When there is an ample believable evidence about murderous occurrence minor discrepancy in FIR can not adversely affect the conviction. State of Rajasthan v. Anr. @ Hanif and others, 1997 (2) East Cr C 191 (SC).

Where the complicity of accused in the offences charged is proved by two eye-witnesses the fact that informant turned hostile would not adversely affect the conviction. Parmeshwar Prasad Mehta v. State of Bihar, 1997 (2) East Cr C 267 (Pat).

20. Acquittal.—Conviction for offence of attempt to murder—Injury inflicted by axe exposing lung and dangerous to life—Injury below neck and above shoulder on occipital protuberance—Seeing dimension of injury being 2-1/2 x 1-1/2 x 1-1/2, it could not be possible that such injury at such place would make lung visible—Medical report not corroborating prosecution version. Hence, prosecution case not established beyond reasonable doubt—Appeal allowed and conviction set aside. Charna v. State of M.P., 1995 Cr LR 203 (MP).

Conviction on basis of identification for the first time in Court. None of the prosecution witness knew any of the accused-appellants. However, in of the FIR, not only their names but also their parentage and complete addresses were stated. It is, however, not clear as to whether the name of the accused Hemu was recorded in the said FIR or not. the translated version thereof has been placed before us.

Appellants herein admittedly were not known to the police officers. Only Sattey was known to them. Anoop Singh in his deposition categorically admitted that he did not know the assailants previously. After their arrest, no identification parade test was held. Although the first informant as also witnesses in their depositions proceeded on the basis that all the accused had been coming in a Maruti Car and they were heavily armed, no arm was recovered from any of them.

How their names could be taken is beyond anybody's comprehension. Even two persons, namely, Lilu and Vinod were called by their first names. How the Officer In-charge even could ascertain their actual names has not been disclosed. He admitted that apart from Sattey, he had not seen any accused persons on previous occasion. Why despite the same, identification parade was not held has not been explained. Appellants were identified only in Court.

It was contend that identification for the first time in Court is permissible in law. There cannot be any dispute so far as the aforementioned proposition of law is concerned. The said principle, however, should be applied having regard to the facts and circumstances of each case. Courts, as is well known, ordinarily, do not give much credence to identification made in the Court for the first time and that too after a long time.

Witnesses in their depositions admitted that they had not been knowing the accused from before the despite so, no test identification parade was held. The accused persons having been identified for the first time in the Court, it is difficult for any Court to rely upon the same and that too after such a long time.

As indicated hereinbefore, appellants were not known to the police officers; they were not involved in any other case. In fact, so far as the Hemu is concerned, no case at the relevant time was pending against him. Only because Sattey allegedly called them by their names, which appears to be wholly unlikely, they could not have been identified particularly in view of the fact that the incident had taken place in an isolated area and that too on a dark night.

Sattey furthermore could not have been instrumental in murdering Lasker Singh. Lasker Singh died of a firearm injury shot from a service revolver, i.e., at the hands of the police party only. Such a revolver, thus, was not and could not have been used by any of the accused persons. Hem Singh vs. State of Haryana, 2009 (6) SCC 748 : 2009 (7) JT 433 : 2009 (6) Scale 784 : 2009 (7) SCR 888 : 2009 (4) Supreme 338 : 2010 (1) SLT 126.

Appeal against acquittal—F.I.R. was delayed and no proper explanation. No motive established and first aid was also not given—Acquittal was fully justified. State of U.P. v. Udalbhan Singh, 1994 LIC 248 (All).

There cannot be any attempt to murder in absence of intention or knowledge of accused respondent. It is settled law that mere fact that a gun had been used by accused for causing injuries will not necessarily prove the offence of attempt to murder and there can be no presumption that the accused intended to cause death of victim merely because he used firearms to cause him hurt. The intention of accused has committed by him or from other surrounding circumstances. In instant case no case, under Section 307, I.P.C., is made out against accused. Petition liable to be dismissed. Surjan Singh. v. Suraj Pal, (1994) CC Cases 348 (P & H).

Conviction under Section 307—Appeal—Case of free fight—Contradictions in statements regarding site of assault—Complainant claimed to be unarmed. But accused sustained grievous injuries—Claim falsified and injuries on complainant not fatal as opined by doctor. Prosecution case doubtful. Hence, conviction was held non-sustainable. Sher Gir v. State of Punjab, 1994 Cri LJ 38 (P & H).

Suppression of genesis of evidence—Discrepancy and inconsistency. The discrepancies coming on record in the evidence of witnesses in no circumstances can be termed to be minors in nature which in our view, are vital for disbelieving and discrediting the evidence of the eye-witnesses. The High Court discarded the important pieces of evidence on the basis of surmises and conjectures. On the day and time of the incident none of the eye-witness including injured witnesses had seen the appellant travelling on Bus. It is their evidence testimony that there were some more persons present at the bus stand, who took the luggage of the appellant after the same was unloaded from the rooftop of the bus. It has come in the evidence of these witnesses that one person hit PW-Laxman Dass. The Investigating Officer has not cared to find out the identity of those persons who were accompanying the appellant on the scene of occurrence and took his luggage or out of those persons who hit PW-Laxman Dass with a stone. It appears that the prosecution has suppressed the genesis of the evidence.

It is the evidence of Fire Arm Expert, that he examined rifle No. 243 of 302 bore which was deposited with the Scientific Branch of the Forensic Science Laboratory by Constable Ram Chhabile. It is clear from the evidence of the Ballistic Expert that the rifle of, 302 bore was sent to him for scientific analysis and not rifle of 315 bore which allegedly was used by the appellant at the time of commission of the offence and which later on was handed over to H.C. Sukhram Singh, who sealed the same in the Police Station. This discrepancy and inconsistency in regard to the use and recovery of the weapon of offence from the possession of the appellant is very vital to discard the truthfulness of the prosecution case. The prosecution has failed to prove that the same weapon of offence was sent to the Ballistic Expert which allegedly was handed over by PW-Vimal Kumar Tiwari or Shambhu Dayal Chaurasia to Head Constable in the Police Station. The contentions of the learned Counsel appearing for the State that such type of minor discrepancy has to be ignored from consideration cannot be accepted.

It is the case of the prosecution that single bullet was fired by the appellant from rifle of 315 bore which caused injuries to four persons.

Witness Tiwari deposed that on the day of incident the appellant fired one single bullet shot, which first hit Prahlad Babu and then Dhanna Lal and the bullet came out of the body of Dhanna Lal and in the process hit two other persons whom he did not know. It has come in his evidence that he could not tell whether all the injured persons were standing in a queue when they received bullet shot.

A Fire Arms Expert examined rifle and he also scientifically examined three live cartridges and one missed fire round. It is his opinion that two pieces of metal could have been fired from above rifle. He placed on record copy of the test report. In cross-examination this witness stated that he could not definitely point out whether pieces of metals i.e. EB2 and EB3 were the pieces of same bullet which was fired from same rifle. It is his opinion that rifle was of .302 bore and not of .315 bore. He also categorically stated that one bullet could cause only one entry wound to a person. Mahendra Pratap Singh vs. State of Uttar Pradesh, 2009 (11) SCC 334 : 2009 (1) Crimes 424 : 2009 (3) JT 120 : 2009 (2) SCR 1033 : 2009 (3) Scale 122 : 2009 (2) Supreme 175 : 2009 (2) SLT 520 : 2009 (2) JCC 1131.

Where plea of self defence of accused was presented by alleging that he was attacked by complainant party, it was appearing to be true in the absence of explanation from prosecution about injuries sustained by accused. Besides this, there were also medical papers of complainant in primary health centre where he had gone for treatment but there was not mentioned the names of assailant, though it was medico legal case, yet conviction of accused was liable to be set aside. Rahmat v. State of H.P., 1997 Cri LJ 764.

Where genesis of incident averred by prosecution was not established by cogent and convincing evidence then adverse inference has to be drawn against authenticity of prosecution case. Surendra Singh v. State of Bihar, 2005 Cr LJ NOC 52 (Jhar) : AIR 2005 Jhar HCR 98.

Where there were inconsistencies in version of victim and witnesses, the conviction was set aside. Ishwar Singh v. State, 2004 Cr LJ 2774 (MP).

Where injuries caused by accused on eye-witness with sword were simple and not on vital part of body then in absence of any allegation that accused intended to assault him with a view to kill him, conviction of accused under Section 307, IPC not sustainable. Govinda v. State of Orissa, 2005 Cr LJ NOC 43 (Ori) : 2004(29) OCR 71.

Where the case against accused was based on sole testimony of injured and his evidence was afflicted by material contradictions and inherent infirmities and since prosecution, alleging motive of previous enmity failed to prove same, conviction was held not sustainable. Shree Rai v. State of Bihar, 2005 (2) Crimes 504 (Pat).

Where the prosecution failed to connect the accused with alleged offence, conviction was held not proper. Bijay Singh v. State of Jharkhand, 2004 Cr LJ (NOC) 223 (Jhar) : AIR 2004 Jhar HCR 2252 : 2003(3) East Cri C 530.

The injuries caused by kassi were not sufficient to cause the death and accused did not cause further injuries after the deceased had fallen down. It was held that there was no intention or motive to kill and conviction of accused under Section 307 was not proper. However conviction under Section 324/326 was held proper. Raju v. State, 2002 Cr LJ 1720 (Raj).

It was alleged that the accused persons armed with lathis and farsa inflicted injuries to complainant on his hand, head and other parts of the body. There were contradictions in the statement of the eye-witness from about the fact that which injury was caused at which place by which accused. There were material omissions in the testimony of eye-witnesses. The presence of the mother, wife and the brother of the complainant at the place of incident was highly unnatural. The incident had taken place in the field outside the village. Acquittal of accused persons was held proper. State of MP v. Govindsingh, 2005 Cr LJ 3421 (MP) : 2005(3) MPLJ 462 (MP).

Absence of explanation for delay in forwarding FIR to Magistrate and previous enmity and allegation of accused that their names in FIR afterwards, entitle accused to benefit of doubt. Chhotu v. State of Haryana, 1996 Cri LJ 4164 (SC) : 1996(7) JT 346 : 1996(6) Scale 80 : 1996(6) Supreme 380 : 1996(3) Crimes 178 (SC).

Conviction under Section 307, I.P.C., which was challenged in appeal. It was held that the testimony of Doctor, P.W. 12, was not trustworthy as he mentioned that injury was dangerous without examining the patient. Hence, accused entitled to benefit of doubt. Marnu Lal v. State, 1995 JCC 63 (Del).

After the infliction of the injury, he was unable to raise his voice, in those circumstances, it is difficult to appreciate as to how others were attracted to the scene, and they been so attracted, they could have at least, given the number of assailants and if possible, their names too, for they were no strangers but co-villagers of theirs. The identity of the assailants, thus the victim was definitely in a position to go about and he could have made signs and gestures, it not in writing to convey as to who was his actual assailant. Thus, in these circumstances, when there was delay hesitation in conveying to the investigation the names of the appellants, and the investigation took on its own to catentify appellants, it becomes difficult to maintain their conviction. Chandrabhusan v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1995 SC 2406 at 2407 : 1994(5) SCC 479 : 1994(3) Scale 176 : 1994(4) SLR 464.

Both the sides received injuries and there was F.I.R. from both the side. It could not be established that appellants were aggressors. The testimony of witnesses are not helpful in finding out origin of the incident. Hence the appellants are acquitted of charges. Bagoo Ram v. State, (1994) 31 ACC 767 (All).

Now as far as the finding under Section 307, I.P.C. is concerned, it appears that there being three different versions appearing in three different statement made by victim while she was admitted in the hospital, the Additional Sessions Judge felt that it was not possible to rely on her statement made by her in the Court, corroborated by her statement made before the Special Judicial Magistrate that she was tried to be burnt by her husband the Original Accused No. 1. There is one significant fact which needs to be taken into consideration in respect of that. The first version of Sunita was that she had accidentally caught fire due to her saree palloo falling on the gas stove. The second version was that she had tried to burn herself due to ill-treatment metted out to her by her husband, the original accused No. 1, as well as her-in-laws and that she had tried to say that it was accidental because of the threats given by the original accused No. 1 i.e., her husband. The third version is that she was actually tried to be burnt by original accused No. 1 after sprinkling kerosene on her. In the third version her statement in the Court is that he had tried to burn her after sprinkling kerosene with a cigarette lighter and while in her earlier statement recorded by the Special Judicial Magistrate she had stated that she was tried to be burnt by igniting her with the help of gas lighter after sprinkling kerosene on her. In view of this, the Additional Sessions Judge was right in concluding that the prosecution had failed to establish the guilt of the accused under Section 307 of the I.P.C. It is difficult to accept the last version of victim with which she had come out, resiling from the earlier statements. The Additional Sessions Judge has given cogent reasons for the conclusion arrived at in this respect. He has also taken into consideration the fact that as per the Chemical Analyser's report, it is difficult to accept that by a gas lighter which is normally used in the kitchen she could have been ignited alter sprinkling kerosene as the Chemical Analyser has reported that with the electric gas lighter which was found in the kitchen by the Investigating Authority igniting a person on whom the kerosene is alleged to have been sprinkled is not possible. The said fact according to the defence would be a significant fact which would be necessary to be considered while assessing the evidence of Sunita even in respect of the alleged ill-treatment at the hands of the husband and parents-in-laws and brother-in-law. The contention is that having realised the said situation that by gas lighter she could not be ignited after sprinkling kerosene on her she changed her version in the Court and tried to contend that the original accused No. 1 had ignited her with a cigarette lighter and this improvement made by her would necessarily be always required to be kept in mind while assessing her evidence in respect of the allegation of offence under Section 498-A also. There is a force in this contention and the said fact definitely would be required to be considered while assessing her evidence in respect of the allegations made by her in respect of offence under Section 498-A also. On behalf of the defence, it was contended that the Additional Sessions Judge has not considered this aspect at all while assessing the prosecution evidence and particularly that of Sunita and therefore, the entire appreciation of evidence has suffered. Deepak Sunderlal Pardeshi v. State of Maharashtra, (1995) 1 B Cr C 448 at pp. 454, 455 (Bom).

Where the possession of fire-arms and criminal object not proved, conviction and sentence not sustained. Chandra Sen v. State of U.P., 1995 (32) ACC 661 (All).

Charge was for assaulting complainant—Conviction under Section 307/34, I.P.C.—Revision petition was filed out of six injuries caused, only injury No. 1 was grievous. There was no medical evidence to show that injury No. 1 was sufficient in ordinary course of nature to cause death. Hence, conviction and sentence cannot be sustained. Anokhelal v. State of M.P., (1995) 3 CCR 166 (MP).

When none of eye-witnesses supported prosecution story of assaulting wife by accused and dying declaration of wife not reliable, accused entitled to acquittal. Satwa Wakode v. State of Maharashtra, 1996 Cri LJ 4028 (Bom).

Where prosecution evidence from an independent source is absolutely clear, cogent and consistent ; conviction can be based on it notwithstanding injury on accused remained unexplained. D. V. Shanmugham v. State of A.P., 1997 (2) Crimes 41 (SC) : 1997(5) JT 4 : 1997(5) SCC 349 : 1997(3) Scale 638 : 1997(2) CCR 36 (SC) : 1997(4) Supreme 267.

21. F.I.R.—There was delay in filing the F.I.R. and as such anticipatory bail was granted. Under the circumstances anticipatory bail has only to be extended for which application should be made to the court of competent jurisdiction. (1986) 1 Crimes 153.

22. Bail.—In instant case, the applicant and co-accused not only expressed their opinion to kill but they also fired from their guns. Hence it is not a fit case for bail. Rakesh Kumar alias Rakesh v. State of U.P., 1995 UP Cr R 40 (All).

23. Absence of proof of motive.—The accused threw acid on the victim but the fact that the acid was thrown was not disputed. It was urged that his presence at the time of occurrence at the railway station was doubtful. Held, there was no reason to disbelieve the P.W. Conviction was upheld. (1986) 2 Crimes 33 (Del).

Sequence of events in an acquittal case was found natural in an appeal. The accused had used a deadly weapon inflicting injuries to the victim. Evidence against him was categorical. Held. the offence under Section 514, I.P.C., was brought home. (1986) 2 Crimes 542.

A close scrutiny of the evidence of prosecution witnesses as highlighted above do not disclose that prosecution even made any attempt to prove such intention of the accused persons, far less to prove. Evidence of the Doctor as regards proof of ingredients, referring to the nature of injury but upon proper appreciation of the evidence of doctor, we find that no such intention to cause death could be proved by prosecution. Held, the prosecution could establish by clear, cogent and impeachable evidence the necessary ingredients of Sec. 307, I.P.C. against the accused. Narayan Sarkar & Ors. vs State of Tripura, 2010 Cri LJ 986 (Gauhati).

24. Mentally deranged accused.—The respondent, according to prosecution was abnormal in his conduct at the time of occurrence and immediately afterwards. The injured person was speared in the abdomen when he came back with Bidis he was required to purchase. During the trial, he was perfectly normal and nothing abnormal came to the notice subsequent to the occurrence. His plea of insanity was based on treatment undergone earlier for chronic alcoholism, perpherul, neuropathy and hansen's injection. Held, Section 84 cannot be called in aid to protect him as the diseases do not amount to legal insanity. (1986) 1 Crimes 43 (Ori).

25. Motive.—Motive assumes secondary role where evidence of eye-witnesses found truthful. Murarilal Jivaram Sharma v. State of Maharashtra, 1997 (1) Crimes 46 (SC) : 1997 (1) JT 317 : 1996 (9) Scale 451 : 1997 (1) Supreme 258 : 1997 Cr LJ 782.

26. Plea of alibi.—Accused cannot be acquitted merely on the reason that he produced a certificate from his employer to the effect that he was working in the Mill at the relevant time. Once alibi is pleaded by the accused it shall be proved by him. If such certificate is produced before the Court by the accused he must examine some person on behalf of his employer or should examine himself in order to mark the said document. State v. Murugan, 2002 CriLJ 670 (Mad) : 2001(2) Mad LW (Cri) 815.

27. Cruelty and attempt to murder.—Accused husband subjected victim, second wife, to physical and mental torture and attempted to kill her. Evidence of witnesses that accused used to beat victim under influence of liquor.

Initially the defence case was that the victim had herself poured kerosene oil. However, the suggestion was changed during the cross-examination of the victim. I have already mentioned earlier that the victim was given a suggestion that kerosene oil fell on her body accidentally in the midst of scuffle. Strangely, while giving statement under Section 313, Cr.P.C., accused neither pleaded that the victim had herself poured kerosene oil to make out a false case or that the said petroleum product had accidentally fell on her body.

Be that as it may a good number of independent witnesses from the locality have deposed in chorus that the victim came running to the house of P.W. 3 and was found terrified and reported that her husband had attempted to kill her by setting her afire. No prosecution witness was given any suggestion that he or she was giving a tainted testimony due to any enmity or grudge against the accused. At any rate, the suggestion given to the victim that kerosene oil fell on her body in the midst of scuffle is somewhat an admission of the accused and the same can be considered as corroborative evidence under Section 21 of the Evidence Act, 1872.

In the cross-examination, has deposed that she herself was tortured by her step-mother and that she did not have good relation with her. In my considered opinion, this might be the reason for giving a twisted testimony to defend her father. I am also of the view that the defence story of pouring kerosene oil just to teach a lesson to the husband, who was already in an angry mood and physically powerful, is inconceivable. In ordinary course, in such a situation, a battered and mentally week woman would run for cover instead of challenging a physically sound and intoxicated person.

Section 307, I.P.C. relates to the offence of attempted murder. Under this provision of law, if any act is done with such intention or knowledge that the act was likely to cause death, if not prevented or intercepted, it would constitute the offence of attempt to murder. In the case before me, large quantity of kerosene oil, was poured on the body of the victim woman. Had the appellant been successful to ignite the wearing apparels of the victim there would have been every possibility of her death. Hence, conviction of the appellant under Section 307, I.P.C., having based on evidence does not call for interference. Sri Maran Nama vs. State of Tripura, 2010 (2) CriLJ 1594 (Gau).

28. Injuries.—Accused inserted chhuri into abdomen of complainant. Medical opinion that injury was grievous in nature and dangerous to life. Identity of accused as a person causing injury to complainant was established beyond reasonable doubt. It is true that the appellant apparently had no intention to cause death but intention and knowledge are alternative ingredients of Section 307. In other words, the offence of attempt to murder can still be made out even where no intention to cause death has been established but knowledge as to imminently dangerous nature of the act can easily be attributed. As explained by the Apex Court in Sarju Prasad vs. State of Bihar, AIR 1965 SC 843 = 1965 (1) Cri LJ 766, if a vital organ is cut, the offence would fall under Section 307 of the IPC. Ramesh Kumar vs. State of Madhya Pradesh, 2010 (1) Cri LJ 494 (MP).

Murderous assault—Effect of—So far as accused No. 2 is concerned, we are of the opinion that the High Court, although should have dealt with the matter at some more details, but keeping in view the fact that it recorded a judgment of acquittal, it is difficult to opine that another view is not possible. He was arrested 15 days after the occurrence from a railway platform. The fact that he was the driver of the car was sought to be proved by witnesses, however, stated that he was arrested on the same day which was not a fact. PW-11 also could not testify the identity of accused. No identification parade was held, which could have been held, unlike the case of accused No. 1. He was not in the hospital or at some other place. No recovery has been made from him. The evidence of PW-9 is shaky as she stated that she had not seen the tenants, whom the accused used to visit by coming in an Ambassador car. Pantangi Balarama Venkata Ganesh vs. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 3129 : 2009 CrLJ 4144 (SC) : 2009 (10) Scale 69 : 2009 (5) Supreme 506 : 2009 (6) SLT 364 : 2009 (11) SCR 636 : 2009 (3) JCC 2470.

The spleen is a vital and important organ of the body and if it is ruptured or damaged then it is sufficient to cause death of victim in the ordinary course of nature. The same is covered by earlier part of Section 100 of IPC and, therefore, the trial Court has not committed any error in convicting the accused u/S. 307 of the IPC as the victim was survived on account of treatment within time. Ramesh and others v. State of M.P., 2006 CriLJ 3815 (MP).

Simple injuries. It is sufficient to justify a conviction under Sec. 307 if there is present an intent coupled with some overt act in execution thereof. It is not essential that bodily injury capable of causing death should have been inflicted. The Sec. makes a distinction between the act of the accused and its result, if any. The Court has to see whether the act, irrespective of its result, was done with the intention or knowledge and under circumstances mentioned in the Section. Therefore, an accused charged under Sec. 307 IPC cannot be acquitted merely because the injuries inflicted on the victim were in the nature of a simple hurt

In Sarju Prasad v. State of Bihar, AIR 1965 SC 843 it was observed in para 6 that the mere fact that the injury actually inflicted by the accused did not cut any vital organ of the victim, is not by itself sufficient to take the act out of the purview of Sec. 307. Ratan Singh vs State of M.P. & Anr., 2009 AIR SCW 7170 : AIR 2010 SC 597

29. Chances of false implication.—Victim was conscious and coherent to make her statement and made her statement in in which not only she did not mention the name of the appellant but positively stated that she was attacked by an unknown person aged about 20 years. Be it noted that the appellant even at the relevant time was of 50 years and was well known to victim. She did not explain as to and under what circumstances she made the statement nor there is any explanation as to how she omitted the name of the appellant and described somebody else to be the assailant. On the other hand, she went to the extent of stating that she did not know whether the Magistrate had recorded her statement in the house or in the hospital.

The evidence of victim is completely at variance with what has been stated by her in her statement. This vital aspect of the matter has completely escaped the attention of the Courts below which resulted in miscarriage of justice. Enmity between her husband and the appellant may be one possible reason for her to implicate the appellant in the case after deliberations. Gajula Surya Prakasarao vs. State of Andhra Pradesh, 2009 (4) Crimes 199 (SC) : 2009 (13) Scale 656 : 2009 (14) JT 203 : 2009 (8) SLT 546.

30. Mischief of fire and causing injury.—Accused was one of terrorists, who put fire in informant house and caused injuries. Witnesses have turned hostile and they have not supported the prosecution case. The doctor has only proved the injury on the shoulder of the informant. No doubt that the terrorists fired upon him when crossing the river and he could not identify any of the terrorists, in that view of the matter, there is no evidence to hold the appellant for any of the offence charged. Since, Hiralal Uraon, in whose house, the informant was taking shelter and who was present there, has stated that he was not among the terrorists rather he stated that he was his neighbour, residing in the house just beside his house and he was drunk due to Jitiya festival and he was himself assaulted. Held; There is no evidence to hold appellant guilty of any of offences charged. Charges against appellant have not been proved beyond reasonable doubts. Lalsahay Uraon vs. State of Jharkhand, 2010 (3) CriLJ 3351 (Jhar).

Sec. 308. Attempt to commit culpable homicide.—Whoever does any act with such intention or knowledge and under such circumstances that, if he by that act caused death, he would be guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both ; and, if hurt is caused to any person by such act, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven-years, or with fine, or with both.

7. Compromise 1978
8. Intention 1978

1. Scope.—"Similar attempts may be made to commit culpable homicide in any of the mitigated forms which prevent that offence from amounting to murder. Here as in the proceeding section, the attempt must be carried to the point of completion, so far as the criminal is concerned ; but the complete effect is frustrated by accident or otherwise".—Morgan and Macpherson. A well merited rebuke cannot be described as a grave and sudden provocation, 1937 MWN 637. A number of head injuries with underlying fractures of the skull bone is sufficient to bring the case within this section for if injured men died, the accused would have been convicted under Section 304. AIR 1961 Raj 24. It should follow that ingredient of an attempt to commit culpable homicide amounting to murder should be the same as the ingredient of an offence to commit that offence under Section 511. AIR 1961 SC 1782.

Accused, in a sudden fight inflicted blow with iron pipe in spur of moment. There was no preplan or premeditation. Conviction under Section 308, IPC was held not sustainable. Velu alias Javelu v. State, 2004 Cr LJ 3783 (Mad) : 2004 Mad LJ (Cri) 988.

The accused during course of scuffle took out his revolver and fired at deceased hitting the shot on the thigh of another person who was standing nearby. He, therefore, repeated firing which thereafter hit the deceased. It was held that gunshots fired by accused could not be said to be the result of grave and sudden provocation but were fired in course of sudden quarrel. As such Exception 4 and not Exception I to Section 300 would apply. It was hence considered justified to convict the accused under Section 308. His conviction for causing death of deceased was also altered from under Section 304 Part I to one under Section 304 Part-II. Sukhdev Singh v. State of Delhi, 2003 Cr LJ 4315 (SC) : AIR 2003 (SC) 3714 : 2003(7) SCC 399 : 2003(6) Supreme 286 : 2003(4) Crimes 50 (SC) : 2003 SCC (Cr) 1649.

2. Sentence.—Where the offender acted with malice throughout full penalty allotted by law should be imposed. 141 Ind Cas 392 : 34 Cr LJ 147 : 1932 Cr C 810 : 26 SLR 302 : AIR 1932 Sind 207.

When there was causing of simple injuries with blunt object—Injuries was caused on exchange of hot words between parties and evidence of prosecution witness regarding weapon of offence found inconsistent with their statements to police as well as with medical evidence. Hence, provision of Section 308 not applicable and sentence reduced to period already undergone. Ranjit Singh v. State, (1995) 3 CC Cases 39 (Del).

From the medical report and supplementary medical report, it is clear that injury was inflicted on the left side head i.e. 7 cm above left eye-brow. There was a facture of left parital bone and according to doctor the bone of the head was found fractured. As per Section 323 IPC, whoever, except in the case provided for by Section 334, voluntarily causes hurt, shall be punished with the imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both. In the light of the evidence of the doctors' medical report, Section 323 is not at all applicable as argued by learned Counsel for the appellant.

In view of strong medical evidence in the form of oral and documentary, the injuries sustained by the injured comes under 'Seventhly' of Section 320 i.e. fracture or dislocation of a bone. Voluntarily causing hurt by dangerous weapons or means has been explained in Section 324 and punishment for voluntarily causing grievous hurt is with imprisonment which may extend to seven years and shall also be liable to fine. The trial Court as well as the High Court, taking note of the enmity and intention of the accused and nature of injuries, evidence of both oral and documentary and medical evidence, concluded and awarded punishment under Section 308, IPC.

In view of the materials placed by prosecution, analysed by the trial Court and approved by the High Court, we are not inclined to reduce the sentence. Court has already pointed out about the proof regarding enmity, intention and causing grievous hurt. Jameel vs. State of U.P., 2010 (2) CrLJ 2106 (SC).

A number of accused person were charged under Section 308, read with Section 34. Common intention was however, not proved and who inflicted the fatal injury was not known. Held, that in these circumstances no one could be convicted under Section 308 or even under Section 325. 1957 All WR (HC) 149 : 1957 All LJ 308. While holding the accused responsible for their individual acts, it is not open to the Sessions Judge to have considered the cumulative effect of the head injuries and to have held these two accused responsible for offence under Section 308. AIR 1961 Raj 24 : ILR (1960) 10 Raj 1200 : (1961) 1 Cr LJ 155. Where there are a number of injuries including three serious head injuries with underlying fractures of the skull bone, it could be considered sufficient to bring the case of the accused under Section 308, because the injured had died, they could have been easily convicted under Section 304, I.P.C. AIR 1961 Raj 24 : ILR (1960) 10 Raj 1200 : 1961 (1) Cr LJ 155.

3. Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not Bailable—Not compou-ndable—Triable by Court of Session.

It was not proper for lower court to proceed further without disposing of the application presented by revisionist for not framing charge. Direction issued to decide application first and then proceed for trial. Nisar Ahmad v. State of U.P., 1995 UP Cr R 16 (All).

4. Charge.—The charge should not thus :

I (name and office of Session Judges, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows—

That you, on or about the................day of.................. at............... did an act, to wit....................with such intention (or knowledge), and under such circumstances that, if by that act you had caused the death of A, B you would have been guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder (and that you caused hurt to said A, B by the said act), and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 308 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried by me on the above charge.

5. Conviction.—In a case of murder based on circumstantial evidence conviction is not proper where guilt of the accused is not proved beyond reasonable doubt. Mala v. State of Rajasthan, 1995 Cr LJ 1266 (Raj).

6. Acquittal.—When number of persons witnessed the scene of occurrence and witnesses were found to be interested witness. There were contradictions in version, prosecution case was not established and it was held that prosecution case doubtful. Jote Ram v. State, (1994) 54 DLT 648 (Del).

7. Compromise.—The fact of compromise cannot be considered in awarding a sentence under this provision. 1986 Cr LJ 1280.

8. Intention.—The evidence in the case showed that the accused did not intend to cause death or such bodily injury as is sufficient in ordinary course of nature to cause death. Held, such a case would fall under Section 308 I.P.C. 1986 Cr LJ 1280 (MP).

The date, time and place of occurrence is amply established by the prosecution evidence on record. It was a broad day light, occurrence which took place at the field of injured which he was ploughing. The injury report in respect of injured indicated that he was given repeated assaults and inflicted incised wound in his head and numerous blunt weapon injuries on his right arm, right side of back, right thigh, right leg and ankle, left leg and right ankle which resulted in fracture of his frontal bone; fracture of medical mallolus and fracture of fibula in his right leg and fracture of shaft tibia and fibula in the left leg. It showed clearly that it was not a case of hit and run and further that it could not be believed for a moment that all these injuries were inflicted on his body by just one assailant, particularly when the defence had itself tried to bring on record the existence of a Khuluwa in hands of injured at the time of occurrence. Obviously, the occurrence was a one sided affair in which the injured was surrounded and assaulted by a plurality of assailants. The defence did not make any suggestion at the trial in the cross-examination of even a single prosecution witness that accused snatched any khuluwa from the injured and used it for assaulting the injured. It was also not claimed that any plot was in actual physical possession of the accused. It was also not claimed by the accused that they assaulted and injured because he had encroached upon their land. Nor was there any plea taken by them at the trial that accused assaulted or threatened to assaulte them and apprehending danger to themselves they assaulted and injured him. The accused had no right of private defence of person or property available to them which they may be said to have exercised. On an appraisal of the evidence on record the only inference was that the accused assaulted injured with khuluwa and other accused assaulted him with lathis and intentionally inflicted the various simple and grievous injuries found on his body in medical examination. Considering the number, location and nature of the injuries inflicted on the injured, It was held that is any case those injuries were inflicted with the intention of causing such bodily injuries as were likely to cause death or with the intention that they were likely by such act to cause death and the victim having survived the offence under Section 308 read with section 34. I.P.C. must be held to have been committed by each one of them. State of U.P. v. Ramesh, 2000 Cri LJ 1354 (All).

From the medical report and supplementary medical report, it is clear that injury was inflicted on the left side head i.e. 7 cm above left eye-brow. There was a facture of left parital bone and according to doctor the bone of the head was found fractured. As per Section 323 IPC, whoever, except in the case provided for by Section 334, voluntarily causes hurt, shall be punished with the imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both. In the light of the evidence of the doctors' medical report, Section 323 is not at all applicable as argued by learned Counsel for the appellant.

1. Amendment.—The words within quotations have been substituted by the Indian Penal Code Amendment Act, 1882 (8 of 1882), Section 7.

2. Principle.—The same principle which forbids one to take the life of another prohibits equally the taking of his own life. Therefore, suicide like any other felonious homicide is at common law felony. Bishop's Cr. Law, Section 1187. In New York as in this country, an actual suicide is no offence, but it is a felony punishable by imprisonment to attempt it unsuccessfully. Ibid. The punishment which can be inflicted for actual suicide is to forfeit the property of the deceased, but in that case no punishment is inflicted on the guilt but on his innocent heirs. According to the Laws of England, at attempt to commit fels-de se is not an attempt to commit murder within the statute, 24 and 25 Vict., C. 100, Section 15, but is a misdemeanour at common law. R.

v. Burgess, 32 LJC 55. The question for the jury is whether the accused did intend to take his own life, and it is a material factor to determine whether the accused really meant to kill himself. R. v. Doody, 6 Cox 463. A lenient sentence should be given where on account of ill-treatment the woman jumped into a well. 26 PLR 581.

Where there is punishment for attempt to commit suicide. It provides punishment again to person who has suffered from agony and would be undergoing ignominy because of failure to commit suicide. Suicide or attempt to commit it causes no harm to others. It can not be said against religion, morality or public policy—Held, it is cruel and irrational permission and thus being void in violation of Article 21. P. Rathinam v. Union of India, 1994 SCC (Cri) 740.

Proceedings was initiated against petitioner under Section 309, I.P.C. and validity of Section 309, I.P.C. assailed and contending that same is violative of Article 14 of the Constitution. It was held that the act of suicide cannot be said to be against religion, morality and public policy and attempted suicide has no baneful effect on society. It is cruel and irrational provision and it may result in punishing a person again—Proceedings quashed. P. Rathinam, Nagbhusan Patnaik v. Union of India, AIR 1994 (SC) 1844 : (1995) 1 LW (Cr) 209 (SC) : 1994(3) JT 392 : 1994 (3) SCC 394 : 1994 CrLJ 1605 : 1994 (2) Crimes 228.

3. Scope.—"Any act which is a part execution of the criminal design, is sufficient to constitute abetment under this section. But the act is a beginning of the act of self-murder, or such an approach to it manifestly shows that there is a present intention to commit the crime".—Morgan and Macpherson. A deaf and a dumb person may be guilty under this section. 25 Bom LR 43. If accused attempts to commit suicide but causes death of child undelivered, she is not guilty under Section 307. 20 Cr LJ 395 : 17 ALJ 478 : 50 Ind Cas 1003. The law confers on the Court a very wide discretion in the matter of punishment under this section. 35 PLR 439 : 1934 Cr C 805 : AIR 1934 Lah 514. "Attempt" in this section involves conscious efforts. AIR 1940 All 486 : 42 Cr LJ 146.

The offence itself is not punishable when completed because the offender has gone out of the jurisdiction of all Courts here on earth. The attempt is only made punishable.

Where there was attempt to commit suicide. Act of attempt to suicide having no baneful effect on society—As such attempt causes no harm to others—Provision is held to be cruel and irrational. Hence, section deserves to be effaced from statute book to humanise penal laws. It violated Article 21 of Constitution. P. Rathinam v. Union of India, 1994 Cri LJ 1605 (SC) : (1994) 2 Crimes 228 : 1994 SCC (Cr) 740 : (1994) 2 East Cr C 101 : (1994) 3 SCC 394 : AIR 1994 SC 1844.

When attempt to commit suicide took place more than 11 years ago and accused suffering from schizophrenia, criminal case initiated against him deserve to be quashed. State of Maharashtra v. Maruti Shripati Dubal, 1996 Cr LJ 4457 (SC) : AIR 1997 (SC) 411 : 1996(6) SCC 42 : 1996(6) Scale 343 : 1996(6) Supreme 643.

In death of hanging opinion of doctor that strangulation "might be" homicidal in nature, does not necessarily exclude alternative situation of suicide. Digambar Gope v. State of W.B., 1997 Cri LJ 2072 (Cal).

4. What is Suicide ?—The word suicide is not defined in the IPC : One must, therefore, look at the dictionary meaning of the word. As per New Webster's Dictionary of the English language, Deluxe Encyclopedia Edition, the word "suicide" appearing at page 980 means :

"One who intentionally takes his own life; the intentional taking of one's own life destruction of one's own interests or prospects v.i. suicided, suiciding. To commit suicide to kill (oneself)".

In the Concise Oxford Dictionary, 9th Edn, at page 1393, the word "suicide" is stated to mean as under :

"n and n.l.a. the intentional killing of oneself; be a person who commits suicide; 2.a. self destructive action or course (political suicide) 3. Designating a highly dangerous or deliberately suicidal operation etc. (a suicidal mission) intarcommit suicide."

In the Halsbury's Laws of England, fourth edn., ninth volume, page 686, paragraph 1124, the word "suicide" has been dealt with in the following words :

"A finding of suicide must be based on evidence of intention. Every act of self destruction is, in common language, described by the word "suicide" provided, it is the intentional act of a party knowing the probable consequence of what he is about. Suicide is never to be presumed. Intention is the essential legal ingredient."

The word 'Suicide' in plain English language would mean a person voluntarily putting an end to his life. It is obvious on a plain reading of the definition of 'Suicide' that the cause and circumstances leading one to take such a decision are wholly irrelevant for deciding the question as to whether the death was a suicide or not. A person who is frustrated or defeated in life, or considers himself to be frustrated or defeated in life, may on the spur of the moment or after proper deliberation, come to the conclusion that he needs to put an end to his life. On the other hand, a person who is otherwise happy and claims to be successful in life, and had led a contented life, may also take a conscious decision of putting an end to one's life. Such a decision may be taken on a full consideration of the relevant facts. Such a decision is state to have been based in one's own interest with a view to avoid any pain, or misery, or suffering in old age, to himself or one's dependents. Nevertheless, on a plain meaning of the word 'Suicide' it is difficult to say that the decision taken to voluntarily put an end to one's life, in the latter case where a person claims to be successful in life and happy, is not suicide. It cannot be accepted that voluntary termination of one's life is not suicide as understood in ordinary English language in the absence of any specific definition in the IPC. If that be so, voluntary termination of one's life for whatever reason, assuming that it is by persons like the petitioners, who say they are successful in life, and had led a contented life, and claim that their mission in life is ended, would nevertheless amount to suicide within the meaning of Sections 306 and 309 of the IPC. No distinction can be made between suicide committed by a person who is either frustrated or defeated in life. The question as to whether suicide was committed impulsively or whether it was committed after prolonged deliberation is wholly irrelevant. Similarly, the decision taken by persons like the petitioners to voluntarily put an end to one's life on the footing that one has led a successful life and the mission of his life was completed, would amount to suicide. C. A. Thomas Master v. Union of India, 2000 Cri LJ 3729 (SC).

5. Proof.—Death of wife caused by burning. It is also pertinent to note here that none of the prosecution witnesses in their testimonies stated about the possibility of the deceased committing suicide. It is also significant to refer to the opinion of doctor, who in his deposition stated that if a person pours kerosene on himself or herself over his or her head, it would spread over the back also. The presence of kerosene on the body of the deceased is established from the deposition of Doctor who, in the post-mortem report of the deceased, recorded an observation that the scalp hair of the deceased smelt of kerosene. Thus, Court is of the considered opinion that if it were a case of suicide by the deceased by pouring kerosene over her head, the kerosene oil would have certainly run down on the chest as well as on the back side of the body and the fire would have spread all over the body causing burn injuries both on the front as well as on the back side of the body. But that is not the case here. The post-mortem report revealed that there were no burn injuries on the back side of the chest, abdomen and right foot of the deceased. The body of the deceased was found to be in a lying position with a fresh injury mark on the left side of her forehead. A possible inference which can be drawn is that after hitting the deceased on her forehead, the appellant made her lie down on the floor inside the bathroom and thereafter poured kerosene oil on the body of the deceased, which on account of lying position of the body could be poured only on the front part of her body. As such, when the deceased was burnt, there were no burn injuries found on the back side of the body of the deceased. Jayabalan vs. U.T. of Pondicherry, 2010 (2) CrLJ 2234 (SC).

6. Conviction.—Pertaining to the conviction for the offence punishable under Section 306, IPC, suffice would it be to state that a charge of abetment to succeed would require the proof of some participative acts to facilitate the suicide by the person committing the suicide. There is no evidence that the appellant gave the sulphas tablets to deceased. There is no evidence that he facilitated or helped deceased in what she did.

Thus, the finding returned by the learned Trial Judge holding the appellant guilty for the offence punishable under Section 306, IPC is set aside. Ashok Rai vs State, 2010 Cri LJ 1105 (Delhi).

7. Delay in lodging FIR.—During investigation mother (PW-1) of deceased had not stated that he had seen the accused standing near the dead body of the deceased or that on hearing her cries her son Venkanna who has not been examined came there and informed the incident to the police by phone. She had also not stated that the accused had told her that he had cut the throat of the deceased with a knife which is available in the house. Interestingly, there was no effort made to match the blood group of the deceased with the blood found on the M.O.1. If the aforesaid aspects are considered, the inevitable conclusion is that the appeal is without merit, deserves dismissal which we direct.

The trial Court placed reliance on the evidence of mother (PW-1) of the deceased and recorded conviction. The High Court found that the evidence of PW-1 on whose evidence the conviction was recorded does not inspire confidence. It was also noted that the report was given to the police officer on telephone as admitted by the brother of the deceased at about 4.00 a.m. The same does not appear to have been recorded in writing and on the other hand the police officer claimed to have come to the place of occurrence and recorded the statement of the mother and converted it into the FIR. The High Court noted that it was not explained by the Investigating Officer as to why the telephonic message was not reduced into writing.

With reference to the evidence of PW-1 the High Court noted that she stated that her son had informed the police. It is not known as to what the son of PW-1 told the police i.e. whether he told about the details of the crime or that some crime had taken place. If it is former then the message was required to be reduced in writing. The police officer who received the telephonic message is PW-10. According to him he received a telephonic message that some murder had taken place. He categorically admitted that he did not reduce the information into writing. Added to that the High Court noted that the FIR reached the police station after about 7 hours. In the FIR it was noted the injuries which were of very serious nature on the person of the accused were not explained. It did not accept the stand taken that the accused tried to commit suicide. State of Andhra Pradesh vs. V.V. Panduranga Rao, 2009 CrLJ 2972 : 2009 (2) Crimes 425 (SC) : 2009 (7) JT 570 : 2009 (6) Scale 684 : 2009 (7) SCR 421.

8. Abetment of unsuccessful attempt to commit suicide.—Merely because S. 306 opens with the words "if any person commits suicide" it cannot be held that in a case of unsuccessful suicide there is no attempt to abet the commission of suicide. The abetment becomes complete only when suicide is committed and Section 306, IPC principally would come into operation only when suicide successfully takes place. The content and character of an offence of attempt to commit suicide is qualitatively different from the attempt to abet the commission of suicide. Suicide and its attempt on the one hand and abetment of commission of suicide and its attempt on the other are treated differently by law and, therefore, the one who abet the commission of an unsuccessful attempt to commit suicide cannot be held to be punishable merely under Section 309 r/w. 116, IPC, to implement the scheme of law he has got to be held to be punishable under Section 306 r/w. 511, IPC. Berin P. Varghese and Ors. v. State of Kerala, 2008 CriLJ 1759 (Ker).

9. Procedure.—Cognizable–Warrant–Bailable–Not compoundable–Triable by Magistrate.

1. Miscarriage.—"Miscarriage is the expulsion of the child or foetus from the mother's womb at any period of pregnancy before the term of gestation is completed. The offence defined in this section can only be committed where the woman is in fact pregnant. For although there may be a guilty intention and attempt to commit it on the person of a woman believed to be, but who really is not pregnant—The offence, as here defined seems to require that the woman should be with child'.—Morgan and Macpherson. The Indian Law Commissioners observe ; "with respect to the law on the subject of abortion, we think it necessary to say only that we entertain strong apprehension that this or any other law on that subject may, in this country, be abused to the vilest purposes. The charge of abortion is one which, even where it is not substantiated, often leaves a stain on the honour of families. The powers of bringing a false accusation of this description is, therefore a formidable engine in the hands of unprincipled men. This part of the law will, unless great care be taken, produce few convictions, but much misery and terror to respectable families and a large harvest of profit to the vilest of society. We trust that it may be in our power in the Code of Criminal Procedure to lay down rules ; which may prevent such an abuse. Should we not be able to do so, we are inclined to think that it would be our duty to advise. His Lordship in Council rather to suffer abortion, where the mother is party to the offence, to remain wholly unpunished, than to repress it by provisions which would occasion more suffering to the innocent than to the guilty".

The term "miscarriage" is not defined in the Code. In its popular sense, it is synonymous with abortion, and consist in the expulsion of the embryo or, foetus, i.e., the immature product of conception. The state of which pregnancy has advanced and the form which the ovum or embryo may have assumed are immaterial. This section requires proof that the woman is "with child" but it is enough if the fact of pregnancy and the intentional expulsion of the immature contents to the uterus are established. The words 'with child' means pregnant, and it is not necessary to show that "quickening" i.e., perception by mother of the movement of the foetus has taken place, or that the embryo has assumed a foetal form. 9 M 269 : 1 Weir 331. A foetus not bigger than a man's finger, but having the shape of a child, is a child, within the meaning of Section 312, 5 CPLR Cr 21. The offence defined in Section 312 can only be committed when a woman is in fact pregnant. 15 WR Cr 4. Where a child was full grown, a conviction under Section 312, Penal Code, was set aside, and one under Section 511 for attempt to bring about miscarriage was maintained. 19 WR Cr 32. Intention to commit crime alone, or intention followed by preparation is not sufficient to constitute attempt. Intention followed by preparation and any act towards commission of offence is sufficient to constitute attempt. 37 CWN 1157 : AIR 1933 Cal 893.

A distinction is made in Section 312 between miscarriage to a woman "with child" and "quick with child" as a larger punishment is provided for the former. When the pregnancy has advanced beyond seven months for gestation, acts of doctors and nurses which facilitate or accelerate delivery can not be traced as offence under the section only because the delivery otherwise would have been delayed and particularly when the child is born alive and no injury is caused to the mother of the child. (Vide Modi's Jurisprudence). AIR 1955 Mys 27 : 1955 Cr LJ 372.

In absence of evidence that pregnancy of girl was terminated on instructions of accused he can not be held criminally liable for causing his) miscarriage. Mohd. Sharif v. State of Orissa, 1996 Cri LJ 2826 (Ori).

2. If the woman be quick with child.—Quickening, is the name applied to the peculiar sensations experienced by a woman about the fourth or fifth month of pregnancy. The symptoms are popularly ascribed to the first perception of the movements of the faetus. But quickening is not a constant uniform and well marked distinction of the pregnant State. The phrases 'quick with child" is here used probably merely to denote an advanced stage."—Morgan and Macpherson.

In an offence of causing miscarriage of a child, the date of the allege adultery was of no such significance. Hence, its omission in a complaint is of no consequence. 83 CWN 325.

Explanation.—"According to the explanation, a woman who caused herself to miscarry is within this section. But in awarding punishment, it will not be forgotten that the high caste young widow, who is to hide her shame, may at the risk of life cause herself to miscarry, does not under the circumstances in which she is placed by the institutions of society commit an offence of like criminality with that of the seducer of young girl to married woman who to cover his offence causes such woman to miscarry".—Morgan and Macpherson.

3. Procedure.—Non Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by a Magistrate of the first class.

4. Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows—

That you..........on or about the......... day of... ..at........ voluntarily caused one X. Y. (name of the woman miscarrying) then being with a child to miscarry, such miscarriage not being caused by you in good faith for the purpose of saving the life of said X, Y and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 312 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

5. Sentence.—A lenient sentence should be passed on an accused who was a young woman and was silent party to the commission of the offence at the instance of her parents. 3 DLR (Ajmer 51.

6. The Medical Termination of Pregnancy Act, 1971,—The Medical Termination of Pregnancy Act (No. 34 of 1971) has been passed to provide for the termination of certain pregnancies by registered Medical Practitioners and matters connected therewith on incidental therewith. The Act runs as follows;

(1) Short title, extent and commencement.—(1) This Act may be called the Medical Termination of Pregnancy Act, 1971.

(2) It extends to the whole of India except the State of Jammu and Kashmir.

(3) It shall come into force on such date as the Central Government may by notification in the Official Gazette appoint.

N.B.—The Act came into force on 1.4.1972.

(2) Definitions.—In this Act. unless the context otherwise requires—

(a) "guardian" means a person having the care of the person of a minor or a lunatic ;

(b) "lunatic" has the meaning assigned to it in Section 3 of the Indian Lunacy Act, 1912 ;

(c) "minor" means a person who under the provisions of the Indian Majority Act, 1875 (9 of 1875). is to be deemed not to have attained his majority ;

(d) "registered medical practitioner" means a medical practitioner who possesses any recognized medical qualification as defined in clause of Section 2 of the Indian Medical Council Act, 1956 (102 of 1956), where name has been entered in a State Medical Register and who has such experience or training in gynaecology and obstetrics as may be prescribed by rules made under this Act.

(3) When pregnancies may be terminated by registered medical practitioners. —(1) Notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Penal Code 45 of I860), a registered medical practitioner shall not be guilty of any offence under that Code or under any other law for the time being in force, if any pregnancy is terminated by him in accordance with provisions of this Act.

(2) Subject to the provisions of sub-section (4), a pregnancy may be terminated by a registered medical practitioner.—

(a) where the length of the pregnancy does not exceed twelve weeks, if such medical practitioner is, or

(b) where the length of the pregnancy exceeds twelve weeks, but does not exceed twenty weeks, if not less than two registered medical practitioners are of opinion, formed in good faith, that—

(i) the continuance of the pregnancy would involve a risk to the life of the pregnant woman or of grave injury to her physical or mental health ; or

(ii) there is a substantial risk that if the child were born, it would suffer from such physical or mental abnormalities to be seriously handicapped.

Explanation I.—Where pregnancy is alleged by the pregnant woman to have been caused by rape the anguish caused by such pregnancy shall be presumed to constitute grave injury to the mental health of the pregnant woman.

Explanation II.—Where any pregnancy occurs as a result of failure of any device or method used by any married woman or her husband for the purpose of limiting the number of children, the anguish caused by such unwanted pregnancy may be presumed to constitute a grave injury to the mental health of the pregnant woman.

(3) In determining whether the continuance of a pregnancy would involve such risk of injury to the health as is mentioned in sub-section (2), account may be taken of the pregnant woman's actual or reasonably forceable environment,

(4) (a) No pregnancy of a woman, who has not attained the age of eighteen years, or who, having attained the age of eighteen years, is a lunatic, shall be terminated except with the consent in writing of her guardian.

(b) Save as otherwise provided in Clause (a), no pregnancy shall be terminated except with consent of the pregnant woman.

(4) Place where pregnancy may be terminated.—No termination of pregnancy shall be made in accordance with this Act at any place other than—

(a) a hospital established or maintained by Government, or

(b) a place for the time being approved for the purpose of this Act by Government.

(5) Sections 3 and 4 when not to apply.—(1) The provisions of Section 4, and so much of the provisions of sub-section (2) of Section 3 as relate to the length of the pregnancy and the opinion of not less than two registered medical practitioners, shall not apply to the termination of a pregnancy by a registered medical practitioner in a case where he is of opinion, formed in good faith that the termination of such pregnancy is immediately necessary to save the life of the pregnant woman.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in the Penal Code (45 of 1860), the termination of pregnancy by a person who is not a registered medical practitioner shall be an offence punishable under that Code, and that Code shall, to this extent, stand modified.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this section, so much of the provisions of clause (d) of Section 2 as relate to the provision, by a registered medical practitioner, of experience or training in gynaecology and obstetrics shall not apply.

(6) Power to make rules.—(1) The Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, make rules to carry out the provisions of this Act.

(2) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, rules may provide for all or any of the following matters, namely :—

(a) the experience or training, or both, which a registered medical practitioner shall have if he intends to terminate any pregnancy under this Act ; and

(b) such other matter as are required to be, or may be, provided by rules made under this Act.

(3) Every rule made by the Central Government under this Act shall be laid, as soon as may be after it is made, before each House of Parliament while it is in session for a total period of thirty days which may be comprised in one session or in two successive sessions, and if, before the expiry of the session in which it is so laid or the session immediately following, both Houses agree in making any modification in the rule or both Houses agree that the rule should not be made, the rule shall thereafter have effect only in such modified form or be of no effect, as the case may be ; so, however, that any such modification or annulment shall be without prejudice to the validity of anything previously done under that rule.

(7) Power to make regulations.—(1) The State Government may, by regulations,—

(a) require any such opinion as is referred to in sub-section (2) of Section 3 to be certified by a registered medical practitioner or practitioners concerned, in such form and at such time as may be specified in such regulations, and the preservation or disposal of such certificates ;

(b) require any registered medical practitioner who terminates a pregnancy, to give intimation of such termination and such other information relating to the termination as may be specified in such regulations ;

(c) prohibit the disclosure, except to such persons and for such purposes as may be specified in such regulations, of intimations given or information furnished in pursuance of such regulations.

(2) The internation given and the information furnished in pursuance of regulation made by virtue of clause (b) of sub-section (1) shall be given or furnished, as the case may be, to the Chief Medical Officer of the State.

(3) Any person who wilfully contravenes or wilfully fails to comply with the requirement of any regulation made under sub-section (1) shall be liable to be punished with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees.

(8) Protection of action taken in good faith.—No suit or other legal proceeding shall lie against any registered medical practitioner for any damage caused or likely to be caused by anything which is in good faith done or intended to be done under this Act".

Sec. 313. Causing miscarriage without woman's consent.—Whoever commits the offence defined in the last preceding section without the consent of the woman, whether the woman is quick with child or not shall be punished with imprisonment for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

1. Amendment.—The words "imprisonment for life" were substituted for the words "transportation for life" by Act 26 of 1955, Section 117 and Sch. (with effect from 1.1.1956).

2. Scope—Section penalises voluntary causing of miscarriage of a' woman with child without her consent and person procuring abortion is punishable under the section. Allegation against the accused was that on hearing that she was pregnant he took her to doctor who caused abortion for which she willingly submitted herself. It was not clear whether accused only accompanied the lady at her request and whether he made a request to doctor to have abortion. Held, that offence under Section 313 not made out from allegations. 1987 Cri LJ 1106 (FB) : A1R 1987 Ker 184.

3. Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoun-dable—Triable by Court of Session.

4. Charge.—The charge should run thus :

"I (name and office of the Sessions Judge, etc.,) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows ;

'That on or about the..................day of.............at...............you voluntarily caused AB (the woman who miscarried) then being with child to miscarry without her consent, such miscarriage not being caused by you in good faith for the purpose of saving the life of the said AB, and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 313 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

"And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge".

5. Jurisdiction.—It is not possible to say that the offence under Section 313, I.P.C.; is a continuing one. Section 313, I.P.C.; being a distinct offence, which has no nexus with alleged kidnapping and rape. Hence, the order of discharge against non-applicant for want of territorial jurisdiction is perfectly correct. State of Madhya Pradesh v. (Dr.) (Smt.) C.B. Subba Rao, (1995) 2 CCR 257 (MP).

Sec. 314. Death caused by act done with intent to cause miscarriage.—Whoever, with intent to cause the miscarriage of a woman with child, does any act which causes the death of such woman, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

if act done without woman's consent—and if the act is done without the consent of the woman, shall be punished either with imprisonment for life, or with the punishment above mentioned.

Explanation.—It is not essential to this offence that the offender should know that the act is likely to cause death.

1. Amendment.—The words "imprisonment for life" were substituted for the words "transportation for life" by Act 26 of 1955, Section 177 and Sch. (with effect from 1.1.1956).

2. Scope and applicability—The species of homicide may be committed involuntarily, this is, in the language of the Code, by a person who does not intend to cause or think it likely that he will cause, death by the act which he does. If A intending only to cause miscarriage to Z, involuntarily does an act which causes her death, he is liable to punishment under this section and he is thus liable whether he acts with caution in order to prevent the risk to Zs life, or whether he act rashly or negligently. Even if he takes such precautions and there is no reasonable probability that Zs death will be caused, and if the medicine is rendered deadly by some accident which no human sagacity could foresee, or by some peculiarity Zs constitution, such as there was no ground whatever to expect, A will be liable to punishment under this section for causing death by an act done with intent to cause miscarriage. The consent of the woman freely and intelligently given, is allowed to mitigate the offence. If A kills Z by administering abortives to her with knowledge that those abortives are likely to cause her death, he is guilty of culpable homicide which will be culpable homicide by consent, if Z agreed to run the risk, and murder, if she did not so agree".—Morgan and Macpherson.

A conviction under the Section can not be based on the uncorroborated testimony of accomplice, 74 CWN 378. The conviction of the appellant was set aside inter alia on the ground that the charge of abetment failed when the substantive offence against the principal was not proved. 1970 Cr LJ 511 : AIR 1970 SC 466.

Appellant accused charge under Section 314, I.P.C., for 'terminating pregnancy of a woman by abortion and causing miscarriage and death. There was acquittal by trial Court and High Court found him guilty and imposed 4 years' R.I. and fine of Rs. 5,000/- to be paid to son of deceased woman. Appeal was made to Supreme Court. 3. Procedure...1993

1. Notes—The causing of the death of a child in the mother's womb and before any part of the child has been brought forth is not homicide. See Section 299, Explanation 3.

This section punished offences directed against the life of an unborn child. Any act done with the intention here mentioned, which results in the destruction of the child's life, whether before or after its birth, is made punishable. Suppose a child's life is destroyed by poisons, or bruises which it receives in the womb, it is immaterial whether the child is born alive or afterwards dies by reason of them, or whether they cause it to be born dead. The offence is one which will ordinarily be committed where the woman is in an advanced stage of pregnancy. But the section is not expressly confined to causing the death of quick unborn children. The offence of causing miscarriage consists in procuring the expulsion of the child or foetus, by criminal violence or other means, from the mother's womb before the term of gestation is completed. The offence which the present section punishes is the injury to the child's life—The child may be born in proper time, or if born before due time, the miscarriage may happen by natural causes and not by criminal means.

"Act done in good faith to save the mother's life are excepted. Cases of negligent treatment by doctors and others, where due care and attention have not been used, though not protected by this exception, are not reached by the words of the section, which apply only to acts done with the intention of destroying the child's life".—Morgan and Macpherson.

2. Death of unborn child.—So far as offence punishable under Section 315 of the IPC is concerned, it is rightly observed by the learned Sessions Judge that it was not case of anybody that death had occurred due to some intentional act. Intention is one of the major ingredient of Section 315. Wording of Section 315 of the IPC itself shows that whoever before the birth of any child does any act with the intention of thereby preventing that child from being born alive or causing it to die after its birth, and does by such act prevent that child from being born alive, or causes it to die after its birth, shall, if such act be not caused in good faith for the purpose of saving the life of the mother be punished with imprisonment. In this case the patient was admitted for delivery. During course of delivery there was rupture of uterus which led to bleeding and subsequent death of the patient and the child. So, it is not case of any prosecution witness that the respondent deliberately committed offence punishable under Section 315 of the IPC. State of Maharashtra vs. Dr. Rajendra Ramkishan Jaiswal, 2010 (3) CriLJ 3603 (Bombay) (Aurangabad).

3. Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not Bailable—Not compou-dable—Triable by Court of Session.

4. Charge.—I (name and office of Sessions Judge, etc.,) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :

That you, on or about the.................. day of............. at......... did an act, to wit........to X.Y. before the birth of her child with the intention of thereby preventing the child from being born alive (or causing it to die after its birth) and by that act did prevent that child from being born alive (or caused it to die after its birth) and said act was not done in good faith for the purpose of saving the life of the mother, and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 315 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

Sec. 316. Causing death of quick unborn child by act amounting culpable homicide.—Whoever does any act under such circumstances, th if he thereby caused death he would be guilty of culpable homicide, a does by such act cause the death of a quick unborn child, shall be punish with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to t years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Illustration

A, knowing that he is likely to cause the death of a pregnant woman, does an a which, if it caused the death of the woman, would amount to culpable homicide. T woman is injured but does not die ; but the death of an quick unborn child with whi she is pregnant is thereby caused. A is guilty of the offence defined in this section.

Synopsis

4. Charge 1995

1. Notes.—This section punishes offences against children in the womb where t pregnancy has advanced beyond the stage of quickening, and where the death is caus after quickening and before the birth of the child. Any act or omission of such a natu and done under such circumstances as would amount to the offence of culpab homicide, if the sufferer were a living person, will, if done to a quick unborn chi whose death is caused by it, constitute the offence here punished. If a person strikes pregnant woman and thereby caused the death of her quick unborn child he will guilty of the offence here defined, if the blow was intended by him to cause the woma death or was one which he knew or had reason to believe to be likely to cause it.

"The act done to the woman, if the death of her child is not thereby caused, w probably be punishable as an attempt to commit culpable homicide under t proceedings sections.

"Cases of gross ignorance or rashness in the treatment of a pregnant woman w be punishable under this section, if in these circumstances they would amount to t offence of culpable homicide if the woman's death had been the result".—Morgan a Macpherson.

2. Scope.—When an accused person shoots one with a pistol and thereby caus hurt to which he is liable to conviction under the latter part of Section 307 and h conviction under Section 326 for the same offence is not warranted (obitter) 1953 K LT 340 : 1953 Cr LJ 1551 : AIR 1953 TC 374. Accused sentenced under Section 302 f causing death of pregnant woman. Even if a conviction under Section 314 is n objectionable, separate punishment offends Section 71. Ibid.

Where deceased was carrying pregnancy of about 7 to 8 months. Lady dying due strangulation and baby dying due to asphyxia consequent to strangulation. Henc ingredients of Section 316 of the I.P.C. made out. Mohd. Nizamuddin v. State of Bih (1995) 1 East Cr C 662 (Pat).

The Court is not required to go into the weight of prosecution evidence. The strong suspicion leads the Court to presume the commission of the offence. Evidence of the doctor is to be weighed by trial Court. There were enough matter to frame the charge. Hence no error was committed by the trial Court in framing charge. *Rajabai v. Sec. 317. Exposure and abandonment of child under twelve years, by parent or person having care of it.—Whoever being the father or mother of a child under the age of twelve years, or having the care of such child, shall expose or leave such child in any place with the intention of wholly abandoning such child, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, or with fine, or with both.

Explanation.—This section is not intended to prevent trial of the offender for murder or culpable homicide, as the case may be, if the child die in consequence of the exposure.

1. Notes..1995
2. Being the father or mother..1997
3. Shall expose or leave, etc..1997
4. Procedure..1998
5. Charge..1998

1. Notes.—The offence consists in the desertion by the parent, or other person who has undertaken parental duties, of an infant or child or such tender age that it is not able to provide for and to take care of itself. This offence is complete notwithstanding that no actual danger or risk of danger arises to the child's life. Thus, suppose a mother leaves her illegitimate infant child at a hospital or at some place where it is certain that the child will be seen or cared for, she has committed this offence, if she intended to abandon the child. It is true she has committed the offence under circumstances greatly mitigating it, as compared with a desertion on a barren heath or in an un-frequent place where the consequence of desertion is great danger or risk of danger to life. The explanation shows that a desertion under such circumstances that death is the result of the exposure, may amount to murder or culpable homicide ; and though the death of the child may not ensue, the offence may amount to an attempt punishable under Section 307".—Morgan and Macpherson.

Where a woman immediately after giving birth to an illegitimate child and throwing it into a thorn bush, walked nearly a mile and a half, gave a false account of her condition to her companions, dispensed with any assistance even after she reached home, denied having given birth to a child when questioned by the head man next morning, and never asked after the child's welfare at any time or showed any solicitude on the subject ; Held, that the woman was guilty of the offence under Section 317. UBR 1914 1st Qr 5 : 24 Ind Cas 837 : 15 Cr LJ 525. Where a woman abandoned her newly borm child, but left it in a place which was quite close to the village and also near a public road where in fact, the child was shortly discovered, held. that the mother could not be rightly convicted of an attempt to murder, but should rather be convicted of the offence described in Section 317. AWN 1903, 43. Under Section 317, Penal Code, the only intention required to complete the offence is an intention of wholly abandoning the child. It is not necessary that there should be an intention to abandon the child so as to endanger its life. 1 Weir 331. The manner of exposure or leaving and the consequences likely to ensue from it are not essential ingredients of the offence under the Indian law, though they may often be properly taken into consideration in estimating its gravity and apportioning the sentence. 24 M 662 : 1 Weir 331 ; see also 1970 Cur LJ 332. The real object of Section 317, Penal Code, is the prevention of the abandonment or desertion by a parent of his or her children of tender years in such a manner that children not being able to take care of themselves may run the risk of dying or being injured. 16 WR Cr 12. A mother would be liable to be punished under Section 317, and not under Section 307, Penal Code, although she left her child in a place which was quite close to a village and also near a public road where it was, in fact, shortly discovered. AWN 1933, 43. A newly born child was left by its mother in an enclosure near a road not far from the village, was there discovered by a passer by and shortly after breathed its last. Held, that the mother could not be convicted of murder, the child not having been left on a barren heath or in an unfrequented place, but of an offence under Section 317, Penal Code. 23 PR 1886 Cr ; see also 10 WR Cr 52. But where a mother exposed an infant child, knowing that such abandonment by her was likely to cause its death, and death ensued in consequence thereof, held, that she could properly be convicted of culpable homicide under Section 304 and not under both Section 304 and Section 317. 2 All 349. Accused must be clearly shown to have intended to abandon the child completely. 21 Cr LJ 253 (Nag) : 55 Ind Cas 205. Whoever has custody of the child other than the mother, is liable to conviction ; and if mother. handed it over with such purpose both are guilty under Section 317 and Section 109, 18 Bom LR 834 : 18 Cr LJ 98 : 41 Bom 152 : 37 Ind Cas 306. In case of offence under Section 317 by woman of 18 who is not weak, Section 562, Cr PC, should not be applied. AIR 1935 Pesh 48.

Where the child is exposed alive, if the child is dead or if the person exposing remains with the child till it is dead or if the person exposing murders the child and there leaves its body, a case under Section 317 is not made out but it may fall under Section 302 or Section 304. AIR 1951 Raj 123.

2. Being the father or mother.—"Both are equally bound by ties of duty, and this equally whether the child be born in wedlock or be illegitimate. An infant requiring nature, or a child of tender years, will ordinarily be in the immediate charge of the mother the father's duty being that of providing for both mother and offspring. The person who has the immediate care of the child is the person contemplated. A parent who is absent, but who has provided duty for the maintenance and protection of his child, would not be criminally answerable for its abandonment by the person in whose charge he had left it. The offence consists in the desertion of the child, by a person who is bound by nature to support and protect it, or who has taken on himself that duty, whether by adopting the child, or by way of contract with the parent, or in some other way".—Morgan and Macpherson. The mother of an illegitimate child, aged 6 months, made over the child to a blind woman in whose company she was, and promised to return with food which she said she was going to buy ; she went-off to another village and probably had no intention whatsoever of returning. Held, that she was not guilty of an offence under Section 317, 18 All 364 : AWN 1896, 117. A married woman, who eloped leaving her suckling baby a month and a half old in the house of her husband, was held not to be guilty of an offence under Section 317, Penal Code as she knew that her husband would surely take care of it. 5 PR 1878 Cr. A married woman quarrelled with her husband and left for her parents' home when he had gone out leaving her child six months old in his house. The husband took charge of the crying infant on his return home ; held, that the woman was not guilty of an offence under Section 317, Penal Code. 4 PR 1879 Cr.

3. Shall expose or leave, etc.—"Exposure or leaving the child with the intention of wholly abandoning it is an essential part of the offence".—Morgan and Macpherson. Upon the question of intention, the previous treatment, as well as the circumstances of the particular case, will throw light. Thus previous neglect or ill-treatment of the child may add to the probability of the exposure being with intent wholly to abandon it. In a time of famine, a child may be deserted, not because those who have the care of it intended wholly to abandon it, but from mere destitution and inability to support it. Ibid.

When a woman left her daughter's newly born baby with the sister of her son-in-law, who was then absent from the place, saying that it was her brother's child and the infant died shortly after her departure, held, that the woman was not guilty of an offence under Section 317 and that her daughter had not abetted any such offence. 33 PR 1872 Cr. An accused person who caused the death of her infant child by deliberately starving it, but did not either abandon or part with it, was held to have been wrongly convicted under Section 317, Penal Code, and it was pointed out that the Sessions Judge, in convicting the mother under Section 304, ought to have specified the exception under Section 300, which covered the case. 18 PR 1870 Cr. Where the jury doubted whether a woman had abandoned her child at all, or whether she was the mother of it, although the Sessions Judge had no reasonable doubt from the evidence of those points, it was pointed out that it was his duty in summing up the evidence to lay before the jury all the facts requiring to be examined by them. 1 WR Cr Letters 10. In a case which was one of abandonment of child. the circumstances which were revealed in evidence precluded the idea that appellant intended to do more than abandon her illegitimate child, and even this was done in a way to give the child every chance of being rescued. Held, that under such circumstances, the finding and sentence of the Sessions Judge must be modified. 23 PR 1886 Cr. The exposure as contemplated by Section 317 must be one, by which some danger to the life of the child may ensue. AIR 1951 Raj 121 : 52 Cr LJ 511.

4. Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by a Magistrate of the first class.

5. Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) charge you (name of the accused) as follows :

That on or about the.............day of...........at..........you, being the father (or mother or having the care) of your (or a certain) child named........which was then of the age of........years, exposed (or left) it in a certain place, to wit.......with the intention of wholly abandoning it, and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 317 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

Sec. 318. Concealment of birth by secret disposal of dead body.—Whoever, by secretly burying or otherwise disposing of the dead-body of a child whether such child dies before or after or during its birth, intentionally conceals or endeavours to conceal the birth of such child, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine of with both.

6. Charge 2000

1. Scope.—The offence under this section cannot be committed unless the child had arrived at the stage of maturity, at the time of birth, and that it might have been a living child, 4 MHC App 33 ; 2 CPLR 153 ; 3 Cr LJ 432 ; 1 Bom LR 155 ; 1 Weir 333 : 1 Weir 334 ; Rat Un Cr C 721.

In order to constitute an offence under this section, there must be a secret burial or other disposal of the dead-body. The disposal must clearly be ejusdem generis with the secret burial. The disposal need not necessarily be a final disposal. It is sufficient if the body be temporarily concealed with the intention of removing it elsewhere when opportunity occurs. 13 CPLR Cr 188 ; Rat Un Cr C 961 ; 5 CPLR Cr 29 ; AIR 1935 Cal 489 : 62 Cal 1127 : 158 Ind Cas 761 : 36 Cr LJ 1460. This section is designed to punish a person for intentionally concealing the birth of the child from all and sundry though she will not escape the consequence of her act if she merely discloses the fact of the birth to some confident. AIR 1935 Cal 489. A necessary ingredient of this offence is intentional concealment. 8 CPLR Cr 5 ; 1 NLR 89 ; see also 25 PWR 1913 ; 12 Ind Cas 650 : 1 CPLR 163 Cr ; Rat Un Cr C 775; Rat Un Cr C 607.

'The concealment of the birth of child is not in itself an offence, but only a circumstance of suspicion which may form part of the evidence of an offence. This circumstance the law has thought fit to enact by the definition of a substantive offence. Such enacted, and the temptation to take it away in cases of bastard children.

'The prosecutor must first establish, to the satisfaction of the Court, the fact of the birth of the child. And the secret of burying or other disposal of the dead-body must be proved.

"Whether the father, mother or a stranger, does the act, regard must be had to the doer and the person who orders it be done. Suppose the mother is passive giving no directions, but another near her directs the burial or other disposal it seems she cannot be punished. If there is no act of concealment or disposal of the body after the child is dead, the offence is not committed. A mere denial of its birth is not sufficient".—Morgan and Macpherson. Where the birth took place in the Medical School Hospital and was attended by nurse and others in the hospital who were well aware that she had given birth to twins and it was known to two women whom the nurses endeavoured to persuade to adopt the children and further, it was known to third accused and that there was no evidence that the twins died. Held, that there was no concealment of the birth and that case did not come within Section 319. 62 Cal 1127 : 158 Ind Cas 761 : 36 Cr LJ 1460 : 62 Cr LJ 260 : 39 CWN 990 : 1935 Cr C 881 : AIR 1935 Cal 489 ; 1960 MPLJ (Notes) 227 (intention not given effect to).

Section 318 is designed to punish a person from intentionally concealing the birth of child from the public. 1960 Ker LJ 1497 : 1961 (1) Ker LR 49 ; AIR 1952 MB 124. The section lays down two essential ingredients of the offence. They are as follows ; (1) secret burial or disposal in any manner of the dead-body of a child whether such child died before, during or after its birth, (ii) intention to conceal the birth of such a child by such act 1958 ALJ 703 : 1958 All Cr R 518. Section 318 requires that the child should be dead at the time when participation in its secret burial or disposal should have been taken place. If child is living at the time and the girl merely consented at the instance of the father of the said child being delivered to a third person or otherwise disposed of the offence under Section 318 I.P.C. would not be made out. 1958 ALJ 703 : 1958 All CR 518 : 1955 All WR 761.

The necessary ingredient of the offence is that the accused secretly bury or dispose of the dead-body of the child, if he disposes of a living child. 1973 Raj LW 684.

2. Conceals or endeavours to conceal birth, etc.—"Not the concealment of the fact of pregnancy, or the death, but the birth, i.e., the delivery of a child dead or living is made punishable by this section. There must be, it seems, a disposal in some secret place, whether the place is intended only as a place of temporary deposit or as a place of permanent deposit. Merely putting the body in an open exposed position, as on a bed, would not be such a place. But if it be put in a case, or under a bed, pillow, mattress etc., this will be a sufficient disposal.—Morgan and Macpherson.

3. Evidence.—Where the birth of the child was known to most of the villagers no inference can be drawn that the disposing of the body was with the intention of concealing the birth of a child within the meaning of Section 318. AIR 1952 MB 124

1952 Cr LJ 1187 : BLR 1952 MB 100. When the conduct of the girl in wrongly trying to conceal the birth of the child is capable of a number of explanations which might be the offsprings of innocent intention, the mere fact she subsequently tried to conceal the birth of a child would not be enough to bring the charge home to her. 1958 All Cr R 518 : 1958 ALJ 703 : 1958 All WR (HC) 761 (benefit of doubt).

Where the only allegation against the accused was that he was found with the dead-body of the child at the bus stand and the statement of a class witness and the statement of taxi driver, who was not believed regarding the recovery of the child, it was held that the offence was not made out. 1952 Cr LJ 27 : (1981) 83 Punj LR 412 ; see also 1981 Cr LJ 522 (conviction not sustained on the facts of the case).

4. Section 318 and Section 34.—An accused charged under Section 318 read with Section 34, may be convicted under Section 318 simpliciter where no prejudice is caused to the accused. 1972 All LJ 958.

5. Procedure.—Cognizable–Warrant–Bailable–Not compoundable–Triable by a Magistrate.

6. Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That on or about the..........day of........at........you intentionally concealed (or endeavoured to conceal) the birth of a certain child, to wit........ (the child of A, B) by secretly burying it (or disposing of its dead-body) and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 318 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried by me of the above charge.

OF HURT

Sec. 319. Hurt.—Whoever causes bodily pain, disease or infirmity to any person is said to cause hurt.

Notes.*—"Many of the offence within this division, will also fall under the head of assault. A stab, a blow which fractures a limb, the flinging of boiling water over a person, are assaults, and also acts which cause bodily hurt. But bodily hurt may be caused by many acts which are not assaults. A person, for example, who mixes a deleterious portion and places it on the table of another ; (vide 21 ALJ 844) : a person, who conceals a scythe in the grass on which another is in the habit of walking ; a person, who digs a pit in a public path, intending that another may fall into it;—all these may cause serious hurt, and may be justly punished for causing such hurt. But they cannot, without extreme violence to language, be said to have committed assaults. All bodily hurts, not only those which are serious but also those which are slight, are within the provisions inserted under this division. But a distinction is made between "hurt" and "grievous hurt". It may not be possible to draw a line between the two, with perfect accuracy. But it is better that some such line should be drawn, though rudely, than that offences, some of which approach in enormity to murder, while others are little more than frolics which a good natured man would hardly present, should be classed together. The several penal provisions which are here made for these offences, are intended to mark by corresponding degrees of punishment the different degrees of bodily injury caused. Still more they mark the mischievous intentions with which such injuries have been perpetrated. For it is the intention or knowledge with which the hurt is inflicted that must chiefly be regarded in the award of punishment. Where a wicked intention is shown to the satisfaction of the Judge, the severity of the hurt inflicted is not a circumstances which ought to be mainly considered in apportioning the punishment ; though it is undoubtedly by a circumstance which is important as evidence when the intention is not clearly established.—Morgan and Macpherson. An act which causes death unintentionally is tantamount to "hurt", vide Rat Cr C 673 ; 3 Cal 623 ; 18 WR Cr 29 ; 21 Bom LR 1101 ; 162 PLR 1913 ; 157 PLR 1923 ; 2 All 522, 19 All 295 ; 2 All 776 ; 5 All 507. Hurt need not be caused by direct physical contact between accused and victim. AIR 1944 Sind 19 : 45 Cr LJ 247. Where the accused had common intention to cause hurt with others, he can be convicted of the offence of causing hurt. AIR 1938 Lah 543 : 39 Cr LJ 781 : ILR 1938 Lah 608. The pain caused by a blow across the chest with an umbrella was held not to be of such a trivial character as would come within the meaning of Section 95 of the Penal Code, but to be hurt under Section 319. 24 WR Cr 67. Where an infactuated young man administered dhatura under the impression that it was a love philtre, there is no intention to cause hurt. The offence falls under Section 319 and not under Section 328. 21 ALJ 844 : ILR 4 All 229 Cr. A person can be convicted for grievous hurt only when the effect of the injuries inflicted by him actually lasts for 20 days but not when the sufferer dies before the period expired. 84 Ind Cas 438 : 26 Cr LJ 294 : AIR 1925 Lah 297. Where the accused dazed by a blow, kicked the prostrate man and pressed his head into ground, he was guilty of simple hurt only. AIR 1928 Oudh 282 : 5 OWN 391 : 30 Cr LJ 173 : 13 Ind Cas 481. When though the complainant had to be kept treated in the hospital as indoor patient for 45 days as a result of motor injuries, the medical witnesses stated that after 14 days this complainant could have been discharged and that after the said period he was in a position to attend to his ordinary avocation in life, the criminal act or the act would fall under Section 337 and not under Section 338 as it naturally would have been as the result of 45 days stay in the hospital. AIR 1958 Ker 8 : ILR 1957 Ker 781 : 1958 Cr LJ 33 ; 25 Cut LT 391 : ILR 1959 Cut 662 : (1959) 1 Ori JD 235, sufficient to constitute offence under Section 328 as these was hurt caused within the meaning of Section 319.

Where a person was dragged by the hair and also fisted it was held that part was caused irrespective of the fact whether any visible injury was caused to the victim. AIR 1967 AP 206 : 1967 Cr LJ 840 ; see also (1965) 1 Mys LJ 647.

Sec. 320. Grievous hurt.—The following kinds of hurt only are designated as "grievous" :—

First.—Emasculation.

Thirdly.—Permanent privation of the hearing of either ear.

Fourthly.—Privation of any member of joint.

Fifthly.—Destruction or permanent impairing of the powers of a member or joint.

Sixthly.—Permanent disfiguration of the head or face. Seventhly.— Fracture or dislocation of a bone or tooth.

Eighthly.—Any hurt which endangers life or which causes the sufferer to be during the space of twenty days in severe bodily pain, or unable to follow his ordinary pursuits.

1. Scope.—Allegation of cutting leg and wrist—Offence under Section 320 was made out and covered by Section 320, I.P.C. (fourthly). Ramchandra v. State of M.P., 1995 Cr LR 11 (MP).

2. Hurt or grievous hurt.—In cases of hurt, it is for the Magistrate to classify and to come to a finding of his own, as to whether the hurt was grievous or simple and for this purpose the Magistrate should examine the medical officer to ascertain whether the injuries are of any of the kinds specified in this section. It is not the business of the medical officer to decide whether a wound is grievous hurt or not, but to describe the fact from which the Magistrate will decide. 4 Cr LJ 202.

"Some hurts which are not like those kinds of hurts which are mentioned in the first seven classes, obviously distinguished from a slight hurts, may nevertheless be most serious. Thus a wound may cause intense pain, prolonged disease, or lasting injury to the constitution, although it does not fall within any of these classes. Again a beating which does not mean the suffer or break his bones, may be so cruel as to bring him to the point of death. It is clear that such hurts should be classed with those which are grievous and not with hurts, all traces of which disappear in a few days. Accordingly the 8th clause provides for them. Three circumstances are mentioned in the clause, any one which can make a hurt a grievous hurt of that kind ; (1) if life is endangered by it, or (2) if severe bodily pain is caused for twenty days, or (3) if the sufferer is unable to follow his ordinary pursuits for that length of time. The length of time during which he is in pain or deceased, or incapacitated for pursuing his ordinary avocations, though a defective criterion of the severity of the hurt is the best that can be devised. And it is one which may be employed, not merely in cases where violence has been used, but in cases where hurt has been caused without any assault, as by the administration of drugs, the placing of ropes across a road, etc."—Morgan and Macpherson. Wounds which, though not likely to cause death, must be held to have endangered life within the meaning of Section 320. 7. Evidence.—Trial for offence under Section 320 and there was appreciation c evidence—It proved close relationship of witnesses with injured. All this was found to b not sufficient to discard their evidence. Question of severe scrutiny arises only when i is shown that there was likelihood of an attempt to falsely implicate an accused Bibhisan Barik v. State, 1995 Cr LJ 390 (Ori).

8. Acquittal.—Where there was offence of grievous hurt which was charge unde Section 333. 9. Conviction.—Conviction was under Section 326. Injury inflicted in abdomen o victim with knife of sassor. There was alteration of finding from Section 326 and injure remained in hospital for 20 days is without any severe bodily pain or unable to follow his ordinary pursuits. It was held, that merely remaining in hospital for 20 days no sufficient to attract Section 320 (8). Conviction altered to one under Section 324. Prita Singh v. State, (1995) 2 CC Cases 519 (Delhi).

From the medical report and supplementary medical report, it is clear that injury was inflicted on the left side head i.e. 7 cm above left eye-brow. There was a facture of left parital bone and according to doctor the bone of the head was found fractured. As per Section 323 IPC, whoever, except in the case provided for by Section 334, voluntarily causes hurt, shall be punished with the imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both. In the light of the evidence of the doctors' medical report, Section 323 is not at all applicable as argued by learned Counsel for the appellant.

In view of strong medical evidence in the form of oral and documentary, the injuries sustained by the injured comes under 'Seventhly' of Section 320 i.e. fracture or dislocation of a bone. Voluntarily causing hurt by dangerous weapons or means has been explained in Section 324 and punishment for voluntarily causing grievous hurt is with imprisonment which may extend to seven years and shall also be liable to fine. The trial Court as well as the High Court, taking note of the enmity and intention of the accused and nature of injuries, evidence of both oral and documentary and medical evidence, concluded and awarded punishment under Section 308, IPC.

In view of the materials placed by prosecution, analysed by the trial Court and approved by the High Court, we are not inclined to reduce the sentence. Court has already pointed out about the proof regarding enmity, intention and causing grievous hurt. Jameel vs. State of U.P., 2010 (2) CrLJ 2106 (SC).

11. Attempt to murder.—When complainant party protested against abuses, accused person took out sword and assaulted them causing injuries on various parts of their body. Evidence of witnesses supported prosecution case narrating in detail as to the manner in which victims were assaulted. Although doctors have not specifically stated regarding injuries sustained by victims to be serious in nature. But, fracture or dislocation of a bone or tooth are designated as grievous hurt in view of Sec. 320(7). Mukesh Rathore vs State of Chhattisgarh, 2010 Cri LJ 1289 (Chatt).

1. Scope.—"Both the extent of the hurt and the intention of the offender must be considered. His intention may, in this, as in all other cases, usually be inferred from the act which he has done. It should be observed that the definition now under consideration will include a case in which a person, intending to cause hurt to A, or knowing it to be likely that he will cause such hurt unintentionally, hurt B".—Morgan and Macpherson. Causing bodily pain is the essential element of hurt. 38 Cr LJ 442 : 167 IC 748.

2. Intention.—The intention or knowledge of the accused can only be inferred from the nature and extent of the injury. UBR (1897-1901) Vol. 1, 316. This offence is caused when the blow is intended for another. 2 CLR 304. Causing grievous hurt with the intention to cause such hurt or with the knowledge that such hurt is likely to be caused, constitutes the offence under the section. AIR 1958 Pat 452 : 1958 Cr LJ 1077 (there must be correspondence between the result and the knowledge of the accused).

3. Conviction.—When evidence of ocular witnesses is affirmed by medical evidence, conviction is proper. Rajendra v. State, 1997 Cri LJ 171 (Mad).

Sec. 322. Voluntarily causing grievous hurt.—Whoever voluntarily caused hurt, if the hurt which he intends to cause or knows himself to be likely to cause is grievous hurt, and if the hurt which he causes is grievous hurt, is said "voluntarily to cause grievous hurt".

Explanation.—A person is not said voluntarily to cause grievous hurt except when he both causes grievous hurt and intends or knows himself to be likely to cause grievous hurt. But he is said voluntarily to cause grievous hurt, if intending or knowing himself to be likely to cause grievous hurt of one kind. he actually causes grievous hurt of another kind.

Illustration

A, intending or knowing himself to be likely permanently to disfigure Z's face. gives Z, a blow which does not permanently disfigure *Z*s face, but which causes Z to 4 suffer severe bodily pain for the space of twenty days. A has voluntarily caused grievous hurt.

Synopsis

1. Scope 2006
2. Cases 2007

1. Scope.—The provisions of this section are very precise and incapable of misconstruction. A Magistrate dealing with a charge under this section must decide and consider not only whether grievous hurt has been caused, but, if it has been caused, whether the accused intended or knew himself to be likely to grievous hurt. If he intended or knew himself to be likely to cause simple hurt only, he cannot be convicted under Section 325, 28 Ind Cas 1907. "It is requisite not only that the hurt itself should be grievous, but also that the offender should intend or know himself to be likely to cause a grievous hurt. A man who means only to inflict a slight hurt may, without intending or expecting to do so, cause a hurt which is exceedingly serious. A push which to a man in health is a trifle may, if it happens to be directed against a diseased part of an infirm person, occasion consequences which the offender never contemplated as possible. A blow designed to inflict only pain for a moment, may cause the person struck to lose his footing, to fall from a considerable height and to break a limb. But it would be unjust to punish the offenders in such cases for results which could not reasonably be expected or intended to follow their acts. But if grievous hurt of any kind was contemplated, it is immaterial (as the explanation and illustration show) whether the hurt caused is the hurt contemplated, provided only it is grievous. The result and the intention must to this extent correspond.

The offender's intention may be reasonably proved from his acts. But now, it may be asked, are we to discover what degree of hurt the offender knows himself to be likely to cause ? It is not necessary that there should be any hurt of which it could with truth be said, this and this alone is the degree of hurt which the offender knew himself to be likely to cause. A person who ties a rope across a road by night, may know himself to be likely to cause grievous hurt, even though he thinks it on the whole more probable that he will only cause hurt not grievous. He may contemplate both at the same time. The duty of the Judge in such a case will be, not to seek for direct proof of the precise degree of hurt which the offender thought himself likely to cause, but to draw a conclusion from the nature of the act and the evidence generally as to whether, among other consequences, grievous hurt might not reasonably have been thought likely to ensue from it. If the fair conclusion at which he arrives is that nothing more than simple hurt was probably to be anticipated, then although grievous hurt may unexpectedly have ensued it will be his duty to convict the offender of causing simple hurt only"—Morgan and Macpherson.

The Law Commissioners say. "We agree with Mr. Bacon what we conceive to be his meaning as to the duty of the Judge that is to say, that he is not to trouble himself with seeking for direct proof of what the offender thought was likely to happen, but is to infer it from the nature of his act, taking him to have intended grievous hurt, or at least to have contemplated grievous hurt as likely to occur, when he did what everybody knows is likely to cause grievous hurt, and the more certainly drawing this conclusion where there is evidence of previous enmity against the party who has suffered. If the act was such that nothing more than simple hurt could reasonably be thought likely to ensue from it, then although grievous hurt may unexpectedly have ensued, it would be his duty to convict the offender of simple hurt only.....judging that grievous hurt was not in his contemplation for according to clause 317 (this section) a person can be convicted of grievous hurt only when the result and the intention correspond, or when grievous hurt has been suffered from an act which was intended to cause grievous hurt, though it may be of a different kind". First Report, Section 377.

The requirement of explanation, Section 322, will be satisfied if offender had the knowledge that by his act was likely to cause grievous hurt. 1952 Ker LT 156 : 1953 Cr LJ 706 : AIR 1953 TC 129 ; see also AIR 1958 Pat 452 : 1958 Cr LJ 1077.

2. Cases.—Where B, the accused was much enraged at being turned out of the shop whether he had gone for drink and intended to revenge himself on the man who turned him out, and where B hit that man over the head with a stick, hard enough to fracture his skull. Held, that, in circumstances, B must be presumed to have intended either to cause grievous hurt or known that he was likely to cause it, within the meaning of this section. UBR 1911 4th Qr 105 : 15 Ind Cas 311 : 13 Cr LJ 471. Where a person intends to inflict injury upon one person, but actually inflicts injury upon another, his act constitutes the offence of hurt or grievous hurt, within the meaning of Section 321 or Section 322 of the Penal Code, according to circumstances. 3 Cal 623 : 2 CLR 304. The provisions of Section 322, Penal Code, are very precise and incapable of misconstruction. A Magistrate or Court dealing with a charge of voluntarily causing grievous hurt must consider and decide not only whether grievous hurt has been caused, but, if it has been caused, whether the accused intended or knew himself to be likely to cause grievous hurt. If he intended or knew that himself to be likely to cause simple hurt only, he cannot be convicted under Section 325. UBR (1914), 4th Qr 35 : 28 Ind Cas 1007 : 16 Cr LJ 431. Held, where facts and circumstances are consistent with the guilty of the accused that he was the author of the fatal injury and since the motive is surrounded with mystery, lesser sentence would meet the ends of justice. Neither case of suicide nor of harassment for demand of dowry made out. Held, Sec. 498-A(b) has no application. For bringing in application of Sec. 306 IPC, suicide has to be established. In the instant case, the trial Court and the High Court have categorically held that no suicide has been established. So far as Sec. 498-A(b) is concerned, there must be an evidence of demand of dowry. There is no evidence in that regard adduced by the prosecution. That being so, as rightly contended by learned counsel for the appellant Sec. 498-A(b) has no application.

The crucial question is whether the appellant can be convicted in terms of Sec. 323 IPC. Even if it is so as contended by learned counsel for the respondent, considering the fact that the appellant has already suffered custody of about 6 months, we do not consider it necessary to go into that question. The appeal is allowed. Gopal v. State of Accused persons armed with deadly weapons went to house of victim and inflicted farsa blow on his head and injuring to others.

A close scrutiny of the statements of all the prosecution witnesses reveal that there was a free fight amongst the Complainant Party and the present appellants, during which complainant and his mother sustained injuries and the appellants also sustained injuries, therefore, in such a situation, it would not be a safer course, for the Court to apply the principles of Sections 147, 148 and 149 of IPC to sustain the conviction of the present appellants under Sections 147, 148 and 149 of IPC in view of the specific overt acts of the appellants, however, they can safely be convicted under Section 323 of IPC. Consequently, the present appellants are convicted only under Section 323 of IPC. Babla and Anr. vs. State of Madhya Pradesh, 2010 (3) Cri LJ 3061 (MP) (Gwalior).

A quarrel developed from the influence of liquor where the victim received a bleeding injury. The appellants who belonged to the Scheduled tribe were rebuked by village Rakhi who intervened in the fighting as a result of which he too was given a blow causing a fracture and rendering him unconscious. The appellants then took a lota and assaulted the victim. Evidence showed that he was given a lathi blow and not a lota one. Held, the appellant was guilty of causing grievous hurt to the Rakhi. The appellants were not guilty of giving any blow with lota. The offence fell under Section 335, and not under Section 323, IPC. Grievous hurt was under excitement, grave and sudden provocation. (1986) 1 Crimes 192 (Ori).

2. Sections 323, 302, 320 and 326.—The accused, a boy of 16 years, and the deceased was students in VIth standard. As a result of a boyish quarrel between them, the accused hit the deceased from behind with a granite stone on the right temple near the ear, as a result of which the deceased died some time afterwards in the hospital. First the injury was supposed to be simple, but on post-mortem, it was found that there was a depressed fracture and that the injury was sufficient in the ordinary course of a nature to cause death. Held, that the offence committed was grievous hurt falling under the seventh category of Section 320, IPC, and considering that the granite stone which was used as a weapon of offence was likely to cause death, the offence fell under Section 426, and not under Section 323 or Section 302. AIR 1960 Ker 301 ; 1960 Cr LJ 1213 ; 1960 KLT 430.

3. Sections 323 and 342, IPC.—The victim was allegedly wrongfully confined and beaten ruthlessly with belt and iron rod. The medical evidence showed that complainant suffered simple injuries that could have been caused by blunt object. There was no fracture of bones or lacerated injury. It was held that the offence was not punishable under Sections 327 and 347, IPC and that the charges under Sections 323 and 342 were not improper. D. Chinnagurappa v. K. Gopal Reddy, 2004 Cr LJ 3158 (AP) : 2004(1) ALD (Crl) 796 : 2004(2) Andh LT (Cri) AP 351.

Sufficient material for Conviction. Thus, it is quite clear that eye-witnesses to the occurrence have fully proved the incident and corroborated the statements mentioned in the FIR and there is no inconsistency in the statements of all the three witnesses. There is no material contradiction in the cross examination and the entire facts of the FIR which has been fully supported by the statements of all the three aforesaid witnesses.

From the perusal of the post mortem report and the statement of the doctor it is clearly evident that the injuries on the deceased persons were found to be on the chest which is a vital part of the body and the death was natural as the bullet had hit them. According to the statement of PW-7, the cause of death was the gun shot ante-mortem injury on the vital part of the body and from excessive bleeding and shock. According to the statement of PW-7 at the time of firing of the gun its barrel must have been at a distance of 3 to 6 feet from the dead bodies. As a result of which the deceased Brijesh and Rajesh had suffered injuries from the gun shots fired within 6 feet from the place where they were hit by the bullet and the same caused their instant death.

The defence towards the end of the trial tried to put up a version that the two deceased came there to the petrol pump to commit robbery by hurling bomb and in the process also caused damage to the petrol pump. Unfortunately, however, no proof in support of the said contention could be produced by the defence. There is nothing on record which can even remotely suggest that the act of the accused persons was in exercise of their right of private defence. The investigation, at the place of occurrence soon after the incident did not reveal any remains of bomb or recovery of any firearm from the hands of the deceased or any damage to the petrol-pump. No injury was also found on the bodies of the accused. It is pertinent to mention here that no suggestion regarding recovery of any bomb materials or detection of any signs of damage to the petrol pump by the deceased persons and PW-2, was put by the defence to either PW-10 or PW-11, both of whom were present at the place of occurrence at the time when the showroom of the accused persons was searched and weapons, cartridges and other articles were seized. Thus, the submission of the defence with regard to the alleged exercise of right of private defence by the accused persons being without any basis, the same also fails.

Another submission which has been advanced by the learned Counsel for the accused is that the story of Accused No. 1 and Accused No. 2 locking the PW-2 in the showroom is completely unbelievable. As discussed hereinbefore, on altercation having taken place for petrol, PW-2 was assaulted by the accused persons and forcibly taken to the showroom and locked in there immediately thereafter. On being asked by PW-1 not to do the same, the gun shot was fired at him but he retreated to safety. Thereafter, when both deceased, Rajesh and Brijesh, the two sons of PW-1 reached the spot, two consecutive shots were fired at them which resulted in their death and thereafter again gun shot was fired towards PW-1. This fact is quite clear not only from the evidence of PW-1 but has also been fully corroborated by the evidence of PW-2 and PW-3. It is quite evident from the record that a big crowd gathered at the spot. Under the said circumstances, it was quite natural for the accused persons to keep PW-2 in their custody. Making PW-2 captive, a fact to which PW-11, the SSI who was investigating the case was also a witness, could well protect the accused persons from the crowd which had come to the place of occurrence after hearing the gun shots. Making PW-2 captive could also protect the petrol tank from being damaged by the pressure of the agitated crowd. The injuries were found on the body of PW-2 by the doctor who had examined him soon after the incident at 1.50 pm on the same day.

In view of the aforesaid discussion, facts and circumstances of the case, we are of the considered view that the High Court clearly erred in reversing the order of conviction recorded by the trial Court. Accordingly, we set aside the judgment and order of the High Court and restore the judgment and decision of the trial Court. Raj Narain Singh vs. State of Uttar Pradesh, 2009 (10) SCC 362 : 2009 (12) JT 342 : 2009 (12) Scale 627 : 2009 (14) SCR 755 : 2009 (8) SLT 160.

4. Evidence and proof.—The evidence showed that the injury cannot be attributed to one accused, the conviction under Section 323 cannot be maintained. 1959 Raj LW 35 ; 1956 Madh BLJ 89 ; Madh BLR 1955 Cr 481. Where there is over whelming evidence in support of an assault with sticks by three accused on a person amounting to an offence under Section 323, IPC, much importance cannot be attached either to the fact that the name of one of the accused was not mentioned in the first information report or to the fact that the place of occurrence was mentioned approximately. Non-joining of Independent witnesses—When not fatal. The homicidal nature of death of Jagbandhan and Randhir is also not in dispute. The occurrence started as the accused were said to be cutting soil from the ridge of their field to which Deceased No. 1, Jagbandhan, objected. The deceased Randhir also intervened. All the accused persons then went to the village and came variously armed. They not only assaulted Jagbandhan but after his death they went back to the village and done away with Randhir. Evidence of the informant, Suresh Chand, was supported in material particulars by Mithan, who is an injured eye witness. He was taken to the primary hospital. He was given treatment there.

We do not see any reason to disbelieve the medical evidence that Mithan suffered an injury. If he was an injured witness his presence at the place of occurrence cannot be doubted. Even otherwise his evidence inspires confidence and has rightly been accepted by both the Courts below. Similarly evidence of Ajab Singh also is reliable.

The second part of the prosecution case has been proved witness, who was sitting on the roof of his house. According to him, seeing the accused persons Randhir tried to run away but was surrounded by the accused persons and was murdered. He furthermore stated that the widow of deceased Kishan Devi and Harbai were present there. Presence of Kishan Devi at the place of occurrence was natural. That Dhum Singh had been living near the gher of the deceased is neither denied nor disputed. He otherwise is an independent witness.

It is now a well settled principle of law that only because the witnesses are not independent ones may not by itself be a ground to discard the prosecution case. If the prosecution case has been supported by the witnesses and no cogent reason has been shown to discredit their statements, a judgment of conviction can certainly be based thereupon. Furthermore, as noticed hereinbefore, at least Dhum Singh is an independent witness. He had no animus against the accused. False implication of the accused at his hand had not been suggested, far less established. Satbir Singh vs. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 2163 : 2009 (3) JT 293 : 2009 (3) Scale 439 : 2009 (3) SCR 406 : 2009 (3) SLT 161.

When allegation of assault of Pharsa not finding corroboration with version of doctor who opined that injury was manufactured are if one could take risk, conviction not sustainable. Ramashish Rai v. State of Bihar, (1995) 2 Crimes 457 (Pat).

Neither X-ray report, nor X-ray plate or the concerned doctor examined—Absence of such materials of record, it cannot be said that the injury was grievous in nature and it was held that earlier order recalled in view of the glaring mistake in findings of the court below. Trilochan Dhal v. State, (1995) 8 OCR 57 (Ori).

There was nothing to draw an inference against the prosecution case in which the evidence of P.Ws. 5, 6, 7 and 8 was reliable and could be acted upon and the presence of P.Ws. 5, 7 and 8 at the situs at the time of occurrence was not doubtful. (1986) 2 Crimes 44 (Ori).

Conviction was under Section 323, IPC, revision filed under Sections 397 and 401, Cr PC. It was held that there was no evidence that all the times the victim was assaulted at the instance of the petitioner. The prosecution failed to prove the case against petitioner beyond all reasonable doubts. Hence, petitioners entitled to benefit of doubt. Ramashish Roj v. State of Bihar, (1995) 1 BLJ 399 (Pat).

Trial for offence under Sections 341, 325 and 379/34, IPC, and sentenced order was set aside by Sessions Judge—Revision directed against the same and High Court in revision may decline to interfere with order of acquittal passed by Appellate Court if the same is based on cogent reasons and reasoning of Appellate Court as well as appreciation of evidence appears to be sound. Hence, revision application at instance of informant of criminal case dismissed. Sheo Prasad Singh v. State of Bihar, (1995) 1 PLJR 348 (Pat).

Related witnesses. Full of contradictions. The High Court has also attached unnecessary importance to the fact that one witness stated that the assault continued for 8 to 10 minutes while another said it was around three minutes. The doctor's evidence was discarded on the ground that his testimony was of poor quality and does not inspire confidence. The injury appeared to be manufactured one. The judgment is full of contradictions. As stated above, the High Court at one place noticed that it is improbable that the accused person who was cousin of PW. 4 tried to molest her. In the same breath the High Court in another place has held that the accused persons to molest PW. 4 at a particular moment took her to the Arhar field and this was done with her prior consent. The High Court goes further to say that there was no planning in the act and had appeared to be chance meeting which led to it. The absurdity of the High Court's conclusions can be gauged from the fact that the High Court found it unnatural that two girls of almost of the same age group were walking and as to why one of them would move ahead and the other would come behind is unnatural. The High Court further has held that PW. 3 stated in Court that PW. 4 on her return told him that accused persons has teased her in the field. The High Court found fault with the statement on the ground that he did not tell before the police that the girl did not tell PW. 3 that the accused persons held her hands. So far as the High Court's conclusions that there was non-mention of the source of light in the FIR it needs to be noted that the accused persons were not strangers to the witnesses. They were closely related. State of Uttar Pradesh vs. Sheo Lal, AIR 2009 SC 1912 : 2009 CrLJ 1162 : 2009 (1) Crimes 388 : 2009 (11) SCC 513 : 2009 (3) JT 540 : 2009 (2) SCR 343 : 2009 (2) Scale 582.

5. Headmaster.—A principal or a Headmaster of a school is not liable to be convicted under this section for punishing a student for inflicting moderate and reasonable corporal punishment to a pupil with a view to maintain school discipline. If he does so in good faith, he is protected under Section 88, I.P. Code. AIR 1949 Bom 226 ; 4 DLR (Bom) 43 ; 50 Cr LJ 789.

6. Assault by Master/Supervisor of School.—The law does not give any sanction to a master to commit assault on his servant. (1963) 5 Ori JD 65.

Corporal punishment to child, in present days is not recognized by law. It is an archaic notion that to maintain discipline, child can be punished physically by the teaching staff because of implied consent by the parents or guardian. Now it is recognized social principle that even parents of the child are made to understand the basic human rights of the child and instead of corporal punishment, correctional methods are recognized in law. Apart from mere indiscipline in school, by virtue of Juvenile Justice Act, if the child under the age of 18 commits any crime, and even it convicted, the child for juvenile cannot be subjected to any sentence. Where, therefore, the accused School Supervisor is found guilty of administering slap to deceased student for sitting on his scooter, his conviction u/S. 323 is appropriate and he cannot take a defence that his action is covered by exceptions as mentioned in Ss. 88 and 89. Hasmukhbhai Gokaldas Shah v. State of Gujarat, 2009 CriLJ 2919 (Guj).

7. Right of private defence.—Where a charge is under this section, it is for the accused to show that he had a right of private defence. AIR 1943 Mad 590 ; 44 Cr LJ 783 ; see also AIR 1940 Pat 696 ; 42 Cr LJ 189 ; AIR 1943 Pat 6 ; 44 Cr LJ 172 ; AIR 1969 SC 1259 ; 1979 Cr LJ 1073.

In instant case, there was a sudden fight in which a person was shot at and killed and another two persons were injured. The scrutiny of the prosecution evidence and the attending circumstances wholly demolished the defence version of two accused persons. One injured person filed F.I.R. immediately after the incident and thereafter the two injured persons were sent for medical examination. The Investigating Officer immediately proceeded to the spot and recovered one DBBL gun and one countrymade pistol. Such recovery was made immediately after the lodging of the F.I.R., lending credence to the prosecution version. F.I.R. itself had been lodged with promptitude with no time gap for concoction or deliberation. The injuries found on person of accused were superficial and simple. The fact that they were caused by a person of prosecution side did not mean that aggressor was prosecution side. The accused persons had also.

after their arrest, filed an F.I.R., in which ultimately final report was submitted. The accused did not thereafter file a private complaint. One accused shot dead the deceased and another accused caused firearm injuries to another person. The murder was not premeditated. Thus conviction of one accused under Sec. 304, Part I, Penal Code and another accused under Sec. 323, Penal Code was proper. Since another accused used illicit countrymade pistol, he was also liable to be convicted under Sec. 25 of the Arms Act. Budh Singh and another v. State of U.P., 2005 CriLJ 2005 (Allahabad).

8. Application of the section.—Where the injuries are of a simple nature inflicted with a knife on accused should be convicted under this section. AIR 1942 Pesh 21 (2) ; 43 Cr LJ 595. It is not proper to award one sentence for all the offences, when the accused are convicted of offences under Sections 324, 325 and 326. AIR 1942 Oudh 444 ; 43 Cr LJ 781. The fact that the accused is a student is no mitigation of the offence of causing hurt with a bhala. AIR 1941 Pat 129 ; 42 Cr LJ 361. Where there was no intention to cause such injury as is likely to cause death the offence does not amount to culpable homicide. An accused should be convicted under this section where the injury inflicted by the accused on the head of the deceased was not such as to entail serious consequences to a man of normal health. AIR 1941 Rang 141 ; 42 Cr LJ 591. Where evidence as regards attack is doubtful a conviction under this section is not proper. AIR 1940 Mad 43 ; 41 Cr LJ 337. Where only injury that has been inflicted by the accused is on the right arm, an offence, this section has been committed. AIR 1950 Pepsu 50. Causing hurt to a public servant while he is acting in the discharge of his duties is punishable under Section 332. AIR 1970 Mad 359 ; 1970 Cr LJ 1238. Where the deceased had received two injuries which were simple and were only a remote cause of death, the offence is under Section 323, and not under Section 304. 1983 Cr LJ 229 ; AIR 1983 SC 172 (but contra 1933 (1) Crimes 645).

Applying the principle of appreciation to this case, it is seen that the informant does not complain that the present petitioner aimed the blow to her breast. Rather, she has very categorically stated that the petitioner pressed the Lathi (Katha) on her neck and stood on it. Then the petitioner's wife dragged him. The injury was caused to her breast for the action of the accused persons. It thus, appears that the injury to her breast was caused accidentally. The injury, which was sustained by the injured on her breast has not been attributed particularly to the present petitioner in the sense that she has not stated that due to his assault she sustained the injury. Rather she has stated that due to the assault of the accused persons, she sustained the injury. In this case, this Court comes to the conclusion that applying to the standard laid down by the Apex Court in Rupan Deol Bajaj vs. Kanwar Pal Singh Gill, AIR 1996 SC 309 = 1995 SCC (Cr) 1059, it cannot be held to be an affront to the normal sense of feminine decency. It is further noted that in this case there is no suggestive overtuous regarding sex. Therefore, the offence under Section 354 is not made out. The conviction of the petitioner under Section 354, IPC is not sustainable. As far as offence under Section 323 is concerned, learned trial Court as well as the learned appellate Court has come to a concurrent finding of fact which requires no interference. Kelu Cheran Behera vs. State of Orissa, 2010 (2) CrLJ 2280 (Orissa).

9. Common object and intention.—The common object and intention of the assembly were fully established by the prosecution evidence in the case. The common object of the five assailants were to cause hurt to various persons and grievous hurt to one. Held, that the offences committed were under Sections 323 and 325 and all the assailants were, by virtue of Section 149, guilty of the offence of grievous hurt. 1958 Raj LW 505 ; 1962 Ker LJ 868 ; (1962) 2 Ker LR 466 ; Madh BLR 1955 Cr 162 ; Madh BLJ 1955 HCR 1055 ; see also 1965 (1) Cr LJ 73 ; AIR 1965 Pat 45 ; 1965 BLJR 278 (participation of other accused was not proved and so charges under Sections 147 and 380 must fail). Accused can still be held guilty of the minor offence under Section 323, for individual acts of assault) ; AIR 1976 SC 199 ; 1976 Cr LJ 201 (Section 323 and Section 34). AIR 1976 SC 2623 ; 1976 Cr LJ 1883 ; AIR 1971 SC 335 ; 1972 Cr LJ 288 (there can be no common objects in case of mutual fights) ; AIR 1979 SC 1259 ; 1979 Cr LJ 107 ; AIR 1970 SC 219 ; (no proof of common object and no proof as to who caused the injuries) ; AIR 1983 SC 172 ; 1983 Cr LJ 229 ; AIR 1977 SC 619 ; 1977 Cr LJ 433 (where hurt is in furtherance of the common object of unlawful assembly, proof not necessary that one of members to have struck the victim).

The High Court has noted that from the side of the complainant which includes deceased also, five persons have received in total as many as 15 injuries. The main injury on the head of the deceased has been attributed to A1. Similarly, Gulam Rasul, Jan Mohammad son of Sultan and another Jan Mohammad, have also received wounds on the head. Injury on the head of Gulam Rasul was an incised wound caused by a Farsa. Jan Mohammad son of Sultan had received an incised wound on the head. The other Jan Mohammed had received lacerated wound on the head. The other injuries on the persons of all the other injured persons are in the shape of bruises or lacerated injuries most of which have been caused by lathies.

The prosecution evidence clearly shows that the common object of the unlawful assembly was to commit the murder of Habib and it was not just an assembly at a particular point of time where the accused persons had assembled with Frasa and lathis in order to cause injury on the complainant including Habib-deceased who had gone for filing nomination papers for the Panchayat election.

The High Court found that the purpose of the unlawful assembly was to stop Habib, his brother Gulam Rasul and their supporter from either contesting the election or supporting the persons who filed the nomination. They were all present near the gate of the school where the nomination papers were to be filed. Both the trial Court and High Court have on analyses of the evidence come to hold that all the accused persons had formed an unlawful assembly armed with weapons which were likely to cause death and, therefore, conviction under Sec. 148 IPC and application of Sec. 149, IPC does not suffer from any infirmity.

In the background facts, it is clear that the conviction as done is appropriate. Siri Kishan vs. State of Haryana, 2009 (12) SCC 757 : 2009 (8) JT 305 : 2009 (6) SCR 1184 : 2009 (6) Scale 438.

Absence of Common intention.—The deceased went to his field on hearing the barking of his dog. It was a dark night. There is nothing to show that all the accused persons were waiting for him or had come to assault him with any common intention. According to the prosecution, a dispute arose with regard to laying down of a pipeline three months prior to the date of occurrence. It, however, appears that the matter was settled through the intervention of the panchayat. Allegedly, as noticed hereinbefore, the accused had abused PW-1 at the time of marriage of his nieces in his village.

Nothing has been brought on record to show that there existed any enmity between the deceased and the accused. We have noticed hereinbefore that cause of his injuries was disclosed by the deceased himself. He put his left thumb impression. He did not name the respondents therein. As he had put his left thumb impression, it may be presumed that he was conscious at that time.

According to PW-2, after assaulting Lamber Singh, the accused persons were standing at some distance and all of a sudden Sarwan Singh came and assaulted him. Why the accused who were taken to custody on 01.04.1993 but were shown to have been formally arrested on 02.04.1993 is not known. Both the prosecution witnesses stated that the handle of the gandasi had broken down. Why the broken part of the gandasi was not seized was not disclosed.

If Sarwan Singh and others had any intention to cause the death of Lamber Singh, he could have used his gandasi from the sharp end. In the statement before the medical officer by the deceased, assault by gandasi also had not been mentioned.

It is wholly unlikely that when a large number of villagers, as stated by witnesses had assembled, other circumstances and in particulars assault by Sarwan Singh upon PW-2 would not be testified by any other independent person. In this situation, it is difficult to comprehend as to how a common intention was formed to cause murder of the deceased. State of Himachal Pradesh vs. Nazar Singh, 2009 CrLJ 3984 : 2009 (12) SCC 89 : 2009 (7) SCR 1117 : 2009 (13) JT 415 : 2009 (7) Scale 666.

Prosecution has not brought on records any evidence to show that the accused persons had a common intention to commit the murder of deceased. It has not been shown that even otherwise they were bearing any common grudge against the deceased. Evidently, both the accused and the deceased were customers of the said Wine shop. They might have picked up some quarrel. At the time when the occurrence took place, appellant being an employee of the said shop the question of his coming to the place of occurrence together with the other accused did not arise. The evidence of prosecution witnesses, particulary P.Ws. 1 and 2, on which both the Courts below have relied upon, even if taken at their face value, would merely show that it was the accused who had assaulted the deceased with an iron rod; appellant was said to have only kicked the deceased.

A general statement was made that about a month prior to the incident, when the deceased had gone to Nandi Wine shop, quarrel between him and the accused persons took place. According to PW. 1, at that point of time, accused persons had threatened the deceased. From whom he had heard thereabout has not been disclosed.

Indisputably, P.W. 1's house was situated at about one furlong from the place of occurrence. He came to the place of occurrence in search of his brother. He failed to bring any material on record as to on what basis he arrived at the conclusion that accused persons had formed a common intention.

Ms. Shenoy may also not be correct in contending that all the accused persons ran away together. PW. 2 deposed that they went in different directions. Appellant, according to PW. 1, ran towards the Wine shop. Thus, it is not a case where all the accused came together and ran away together. A bald statement said to have been made by him that the accused while assaulting the deceased had exhorted that they would not leave him till he died, cannot be a ground to hold that the same by itself is demonstrative of the fact that accused No. 3 also had a similar intention. Admittedly, no weapon was recovered at the instance of appellant. He was wholly unarmed. On the basis of the voluntary statement made by the Accused alone, an iron rod was recovered.

We are not concerned herein as to whether the said iron rod was the weapon of assault. Having regard to the quality of evidence that the prosecution had led, in our opinion, it is difficult to come to the conclusion that all the accused persons had a common intention to commit the murder of the deceased.

The prosecution has failed to establish why and how a quarrel had started. The prosecution even has not proved as to why the Accused No. 1 was carrying the iron rod even before the quarrel with the deceased started or as to whether the appellant was aware of this. It has also not been shown that he along with other accused persons came to assault the deceased. Appellant ordinarily was expected to be at his work place only. His presence at the spot, therefore, has sufficiently been explained.

For the aforementioned reasons. we are of the opinion that appellant cannot be held guilty for commission of offence punishable under Sec. 302 read with Sec. 34 of the IPC. The very fact that the appellant was unarmed and must be presumed to have been performing his duties at his place of employment, it cannot be said that he had formed any kind of common intention at the spot to murder the deceased. Some incident might have taken place and he might have formed a common intention to teach a lesson to the deceased. He might be guilty for commission of offence punishable under Sec. 323 of the IPC and not for commission of offence punishable under Sec. 302 read with Sec. 34 of the IPC. He is sentenced to the period already undergone. Nagaraja vs. State of Karnataka, AIR 2009 SC 1522 : 2009 (1) Crimes 278 (SC) : 2009 (1) JT 48 : 2008 (16) Scale 380 : 2008 (17) SCR 1127 : 2009 (1) Supreme 94.

Accused persons carrying various weapons like Axe, handle of Axe and handle hoe came to house of deceased in morning. Accused armed with axe dealt Axe blow on head of deceased, resulting he fell down after sustaining bleeding injuries. Witnesses- family members, when came to intervene were given blows on their heads by accused carrying handles of Axe and hoe. Some other accused kicked, fisted and prevented witnesses from intervening in quarrel. Absence of intention or knowledge. To constitute an offence under Section 307 I.P.C. two ingredients have to be established namely (i) intention or knowledge relating to commission of murder and (ii) the doing of act towards it. For an offence under Section 307 I.P.C. presence of intention or knowledge is material and not the consequence of the actual act done for the purpose of carrying out the intention. In the absence of intention or knowledge there can be no offence of attempt to murder. The injured witnesses have not stated that the accused intended to kill them. The evidence showed that they received simple injuries. In the absence of intention or knowledge which is necessary ingredient of Section 307 I.P.C, the accused cannot be held guilty for the offence under Section 307 I.P.C. The accused appellants having voluntarily caused simple hurt to the witnesses in furtherance of their common intention, they are liable for the offence under Section 323/34 I.P.C. Om Prakash and Ors. v. State of U. P., 2009 CriLJ 1677 (All).

All the four accused were convicted by the learned trial Judge. The High Court, however, having regard to the fact that the other accused had not been named in the FIR and no test identification parade was held thought it fit to extend the benefit of doubt in favour of three of them. That would not mean that on the same analogy, a judgment of acquittal should have been recorded in favour of the appellant also.

Keeping in view the place of occurrence, it will not be hazardous to presume that the incident had taken place within a very short time. P.W. 2 in his evidence stated that three persons came from behind. He might not have been able to remember their names at the time when the FIR was lodged. But, in our opinion, as the offence must have been committed by more than one person and the appellant having been named in the FIR and specific overt act having been attributed to him by P.W. 2 in his deposition, we are of the opinion that no case has been made out to interfere with the impugned judgment. *Subhash Kumar v. 10.Procedure.—Not cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compounda-ble—Triable by any Magistrate and may be tried summarily.

11. Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the.......day of.....at........voluntarily caused hurt to A, B and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 323 of the Penal Code and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

Framing of charge. The deceased was a patient of asthma which could cause asphyxia which was ultimately said to be the cause of death. It is also clear that notwithstanding his serious respiratory problem, the deceased was kept in a windowless room which was full of dust and cobswebs which are known allergens for triggering an asthma attack, which can be fatal, as in this case. The injuries found on the body of the deceased may have been caused during attempts at resuscitation, but all the said circumstances can only be considered during a proper trial and not on the basis of surmises at the time of framing charge where on the strength of the charge sheet only a prima facie satisfaction about the commission of an offence has to be arrived at by the trial Court. Therefore, while rejecting the submissions made that there were no materials on record to frame charge against the accused persons even under Sec. 323/34 IPC, we cannot but observe that on a prima facie view of the matter, there is ground to proceed against the accused persons even under Sec. 304 Part II IPC. The High Court had erred in quashing the charge framed against the accused persons under Sec. 304 Part II and observing that in view of the materials on record only a charge under Sec. 323 could be brought against the accused persons. Indu Jain vs State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 976 : 2009 CrLJ 951: 2008 (15) SCC 341 : 2008 (12) JT 524 : 2008 (14) SCR 1137 : 2008 (15) Scale 168 : 2009 (2) SLT 72.

12. Sentence.—An offence under Section 323, would ordinarily be triable in the ordinary course by a third class Magistrate and the punishment would normally not exceed one month. 1937 MWN 743. But in case of attack of a brutal nature, severest sentence is called for AIR 1938 All 92.

Separate sentence under Sections 323 and 452.—Where a person is convicted for the offences under Section 323 and Section 452, committed on one and the same occasion he can be sentenced separately for each. AIR 1938 Rang 114.

Sections 323, 327 read with Section 109—The victim received injuries from a blunt weapon and the conviction of the accused under Section 323, IPC, was correct. Where a promissory note appeared to be according to part dealings, held conviction under Section 327, read with Section 109, IPC, was not maintainable. Sentence reduced to one already undergone but fine was not disturbed. (1986) 2 Crimes 81 (Raj).

From the medical report and supplementary medical report, it is clear that injury was inflicted on the left side head i.e. 7 cm above left eye-brow. There was a facture of left parital bone and according to doctor the bone of the head was found fractured. As per Section 323 IPC, whoever, except in the case provided for by Section 334, voluntarily causes hurt, shall be punished with the imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both. In the light of the evidence of the doctors' medical report, Section 323 is not at all applicable as argued by learned Counsel for the appellant.

In view of strong medical evidence in the form of oral and documentary, the injuries sustained by the injured comes under 'Seventhly' of Section 320 i.e. fracture or dislocation of a bone. Voluntarily causing hurt by dangerous weapons or means has been explained in Section 324 and punishment for voluntarily causing grievous hurt is with imprisonment which may extend to seven years and shall also be liable to fine. The trial Court as well as the High Court, taking note of the enmity and intention of the accused and nature of injuries, evidence of both oral and documentary and medical evidence, concluded and awarded punishment under Section 308, IPC.

In view of the materials placed by prosecution, analysed by the trial Court and approved by the High Court, we are not inclined to reduce the sentence. Court has already pointed out about the proof regarding enmity, intention and causing grievous hurt. Jameel vs. State of U.P., 2010 (2) CrLJ 2106 (SC).

Accused assaulted the deceased, his uncle, by giving two kick blows, one on his chest and another on his testicles leading to spontaneous death. Conviction, it was found that under Section 323, IPC—Challenged in revision petition—The incident occurred on spur of the moment and there was no premeditation. Conviction under Section 323, IPC, is confirmed. The sentence is, however, reduced to period already undergone. Baiu Dnyanoba Chandere v. State of Maharashtra, 1994 B Cr C 319 (Bom).

Conviction and sentence under Section 323, IPC, there was pendency of trial and appeal for more than 7-1/2 years. Convict already undergone 3 weeks sentence and had already paid fine. Sentence reduced to period already undergone. On behalf of the petitioners it was contended that the petitioners have under went agony during the trial as well as during the proceedings before the appellate court and they have undergone more than three weeks of sentence and that the sentence may be reduced to the period already undergone. He further submitted that the petitioners have already paid the fine imposed by the trial court. Taking on account all these facts as well as the fact that the petitioners had already undergone agony of proceedings in the trial court for more than 7-1/2 years, the substantive sentence of imprisonment under each head is reduced to the period already undergone. Ram Murti v. State of Haryana, (1994) 1 CC Cases 430 at p. 431 : (1994) 1 CCR 13 ; (1994) 1 CC Cases 193 : (1994) Recent Cr R 33 (P & H).

13. Acquittal.—Complaint of offence under Section 322, IPC, there was acquittal and appeal against acquittal was filed. It was held that after perusal of the statement of the witnesses produced by complainant, High Court has no hesitation in saying that Magistrate has properly appreciated the evidence on record and has come to a correct conclusion that complainant has failed to prove the commission of offence under Section 323, IPC. Hence acquittal justified and appeal is dismissed. Rudra Nath Mishra v. State of U.P., 1994 (31) ACC 746 (All).

15. Conviction for substantive offence.—It was not proved that the petitioner caused hurt to P.W. 1. As per the contents of Ext. P. W. 1/A the occurrence was witnessed by Basti Ram and Nisha Devi (P.W.7) Basti Ram has not been produced by the prosecution P.W.7 has not supported the prosecution version. Lekh Ram (P.W. 6) has been examined by the prosecution as an eye-witnesses of the occurrence though not mentioned as such in the F.I.R. In his examination-in-chief he has not supported the prosecution version and denied having seen the occurrence. When cross-examined by the public prosecutor he stated that the petitioner hit P.W. 1 with stone but when cross-examined by the petitioner he stated that he has not seen anyone hitting with the stone. Thus, the self contradictory and self destroying version of this witness is utterly an acceptable as eye account of the occurrence. Therefore, the conviction and sentence passed by the court below will be liable to be set aside. Som Dutt v. State of H.P. 2002 Cri LJ 1059 (H.P.) : 2002(3) All Cri LR 201.

20. Non–Explanation of injuries.—In case of Laxmi Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 1976 SC 2263 : 1976 Cri LJ 1736, the Hon'ble Supreme Court has held as follows at page 1741 of Cri (LJ).

"In these circumstances, therefore, it was the bounded duty of the prosecution to give a reasonable explanation that the injuries sustained by the accused Darshan Singh in the course of occurrence. Not only the prosecution has given no explanation, but some of the witnesses have made a clear statement that they did not see any injuries on the person of the accused. Indeed, if the eyewitness could not have given such graphic details regarding the assault on the two deceased and Dasain Singh and yet they deliberately suppressed the injuries on the person of the accused, this is a most important circumstance to discredit the entire prosecution.

In the case of State of Gujarat v. Bai Fatima, AIR 1975 SC 1478 : 1975 Cri LJ 1079 the Hon'ble Apex Court held as follows:

> "The omission on the part of the prosecution to explain the injuries on the person of the accused assumes much greater importance where the evidence consists of interested or inmical witnesses or where the defence gives a versio which competes, in probability with that of the prosecution. In the instant case when it is held, as it must be, that the appellant Dasrath Singh received serious injuries which have not been explained by the prosecution, then it will be difficult for the court to rely on the evidence of PWs 1 to 4 and 6, mere particularly, when some of these witnesses have lied by stating that they did not see any injuries on the person of the accused."

In the case of Ramesh v. State of U.P., 1991 Cri LJ 2976 the Hon'ble Supreme Court held as follows (at page 2980 of Cri LJ) :

> "The above circumstances clearly indicate that the incution has not come with clean hands and had also"

Non-explanation of injuries by the prosecution will not affect prosecution case where injuries sustained by the accused are minor and superficial or where the evidence is so clear and cogent so independent and disinterested, so probable, consistent and creditworthy, that it outweighs the effect of the omission on the part of prosecution to explain the injuries.

When the prosecution comes with a definite case that the offence has been committed by the accused and proves its case beyond any reasonable doubt, it becomes hardly necessary for the prosecution to again explain how and under what circumstances injuries have been inflicted on the person of the accused. It is more so when the injuries are simple or superficial in nature. In the case at hand, triffle and superficial injuries on accused are of little assistance to them to throw doubt on veracity of prosecution case, particularly, when the accused who claimed to have sustained injuries has been acquitted. Siri Kishan vs. State of Haryana, 2009 (6) SCR 1184 : 2009 (12) SCC 757 : 2009 (8) JT 305 : 2009 (6) Scale 438.

21. Voluntary causing heart.—The allegation against the applicant was that he and accused Gopal assaulted the victim only with kicks and fists. In the medical examination only two blunt object injuries in the form of lacerated wound and contusion were found on the person of injured which most likely were caused by Lathi alleged to have been used by the deceased co-accused. The incident was of the year 1989. There is nothing on the record to indicate that the applicant in revision has any bad antecedents or criminal history. After a lapse of more than 12 years, socioeconomic conditions of the applicant must have undergone radical changes. To send him to jail to serve our imprisonment of year after this long gap would be doing great injustice to the applicant. Order of Appellate Court was passed on 30.6.2001 and since then the applicant in revision is in jail. Learned Counsel for the applicant further submitted that the applicant in revision shall not treat the same as enhancement of sentence. Bhirug Revisionist v. State of U.P. 2002 Cri LJ 271 : 2001 All LJ 2337 : 2001(43) All Cri C 268 : 2001(2) All Cri r 1404 : 2002(1) Rec Cri R 51.

Voluntarily causing hurt and mischief by fire. Appellants rebuked and assaulted informant's wife with slaps and fists and also have threatening that they will cause fire to his house. Witnesses supported case of informant so far as assault is concerned.

From the evidences available, it appears that although the prosecution has proved the case under Section 323 of the IPC, i.e. the assault caused to the informant's wife on the date of occurrence and as such, the appellants, conviction under Section 323, IPC is confirmed.

However, there is no evidence beyond reasonable doubt to prove that three accused persons had gone to the house of the informant in the night to cause mischief by putting 'gaushala chappar' on fire, since no seizure list has been proved nor any villager who came on hulla, Satan Mahara and Arjun Mahara, named in the FIR were brought by the prosecution in the Court to prove that any fire was put on the roof of the informant's 'gaushala'. In that view of the matter, prosecution has failed to prove the charge u/S. 436 of the I.P.C. beyond reasonable doubt. Accordingly, they are acquitted from the charge u/S. 436 of the I.P.C and their conviction on that count is set aside. Kalru Rai & Ors. vs. State of Jharkhand, 2010 (3) CriLJ 3509 (Jhar).

22. Principles of Unlawful assembly—Applicability.—Accused persons armed with deadly weapons went to house of victim and inflicted farsa blow on his head and injuring to others.

A close scrutiny of the statements of all the prosecution witnesses reveal that there was a free fight amongst the Complainant Party and the present appellants, during which complainant and his mother sustained injuries and the appellants also sustained injuries, therefore, in such a situation, it would not be a safer course, for the Court to apply the principles of Sections 147, 148 and 149 of IPC to sustain the conviction of the present appellants under Sections 147, 148 and 149 of IPC in view of the specific overt acts of the appellants, however, they can safely be convicted under Section 323 of IPC. Consequently, the present appellants are convicted only under Section 323 of IPC. Babla and Anr. vs. State of Madhya Pradesh, 2010 (3) Cri LJ 3061 (MP) (Gwalior).

There was no common object and in any event the present appellant was not a member of any unlawful assembly. Having held so, the High Court ought not to have altered the conviction as recorded by the trial Court. Accordingly, the appeal is allowed. The order of the trial Court vis-a-vis the present appellant is restored and that of the High Court vis-a-vis the present appellant stands quashed. If the appellant has served the sentence as imposed by the trial Court, the bail bonds executed for giving effect to order dated 08.01.2008 shall stand discharged. Otherwise, the appellant shall surrender forthwith to serve the remainder of sentence. Komal vs. State of Madhya Pradesh. AIR 2009 SC 1958 : 2009 (1) Crimes 373 : 2009 (11) SCC 55 : 2009 (2) Scale 479 : 2009 (1) SCR 1142 : 2009 (2) Supreme 25 : 2009 (2) SLT 480.

Specific role of each accused. If all the witnesses could not attribute specific roles to each of the accused, the same in our considered view, is natural. If seven persons armed with various weapons attack a person, the witnesses who were sanding at some distance may not be able to attribute specific role to each of the accused persons. Satbir Singh vs. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 2163 : 2009 (3) JT 293 : 2009 (3) Scale 439 : 2009 (3) SCR 406 : 2009 (3) SLT 161.

When it has been proved beyond any shadow of doubt that the respondents formed an unlawful assembly and the respondent-party was prepared for a fight, it must follow its intention to fight and cause injuries to the other party. No overt act by each member of the assembly is necessary to attract Section 149, I. P. C. Where a concerted attack is made on the victims by a large number of persons it is often difficult to determine the actual part played by each offender. But on that account for an offence committed by a member of the unlawful assembly in the prosecution of the common object or for an offence which was known to be likely to be committed in prosecution of the common object, persons proved to be members cannot escape the consequences arising from the doing of that act which amounts to an offence. It cannot be said that any one of the respondents was present at the spot innocently. It can also not be said that some of the members of the unlawful assembly went beyond the common object and committed crime graver than the assembly had in its object. Therefore, the acquittal of the accused persons on account that the specific role was not attributed cannot be said to be justified. State of M.P. v. Habib Khan and others, 2007 CriLJ 2505 (MP).

23. Outraging modesty of woman and hurt.—Applying the principle of appreciation to this case, it is seen that the informant does not complain that the present petitioner aimed the blow to her breast. Rather, she has very categorically stated that the petitioner pressed the Lathi (Katha) on her neck and stood on it. Then the petitioner's wife dragged him. The injury was caused to her breast for the action of the accused persons. It thus, appears that the injury to her breast was caused accidentally. The injury, which was sustained by the injured on her breast has not been attributed particularly to the present petitioner in the sense that she has not stated that due to his assault she sustained the injury. Rather she has stated that due to the assault of the accused persons, she sustained the injury. In this case, this Court comes to the conclusion that applying to the standard laid down by the Apex Court in Rupan Deol Bajaj vs. Kanwar Pal Singh Gill, AIR 1996 SC 309 = 1995 SCC (Cr) 1059. it cannot be held to be an affront to the normal sense of feminine decency. It is further noted that in this case there is no suggestive overtuous regarding sex. Therefore, the offence under Section 354 is not made out. The conviction of the petitioner under Section 354, IPC is not sustainable. As far as offence under Section 323 is concerned, learned trial Court as well as the learned appellate Court has come to a concurrent finding of fact which requires no interference. Kelu Cheran Behera vs. State of Orissa, 2010 (2) CrLJ 2280 (Orissa).

Although FIR itself does not disclose offences under Sections 323 and 354, IPC against the revisionist, the Investigating Agency proceeded with the investigation on the very date of lodging of inordinately delayed FIR and examined all the five witnesses on the very date of initiation of the P.S. case in question under Sections 323, 354, 309 and 34, IPC. On completion of investigation the charge-sheet was, however, submitted on 09.05.2002 in a very mechanical fashion. On perusal of the DB the perfunctory nature of investigation is manifestly clear. Further, it is also a clear case of sheer non-application of mind on the part of the I.O. Rather, he has neglected to scrutinize the materials brought on record in its proper perspective prior to formation of his opinion that a prima facie charge under Sections 323, 354, 309 and 34, IPC has been well established. None of the five witnesses examined by him stated anything implicating the revisionist as the molester of the alleged victim and there was also nothing in the statements to suggest that the de facto complainant was assaulted by the revisionist. In fact, the de-facto complainant herself has also not levelled any allegation of molestation or assault against the revisionist within the four corners of the FIR.

In such a factual scenario, Court has no hesitation in holding that contents of the FIR even taken at their at face value accepting in its entirety do not constitute prima facie offences under Sections 354 and 323, IPC against the accused revisionist. Court is also to hold further that the evidence collected in support of allegations made in the FIR also do not make out any case under Sections 354, 323 and 34, IPC against the accused revisionist. In submission of charge-sheet claiming that offences under Sections 354 and 323, IPC have been established prima facie against the accused is of no consequence since evidence and materials so collected by the I.O. were not properly appreciated by the I.O. for the reasons best known to him.

Therefore, viewing the entire matter on the anvil of the viability of the persecution case, this Court convinced to hold that it is a baseless case of a mala fide and malicious prosecution and as such continuance of this criminal proceeding would be a sheer abuse of the process of the Court. So, Court of the clear opinion that it is a fit case where the entire proceeding including the charge-sheet should be quashed so far as it relates to the accused revisionist in exercise of the power under Section 482, Criminal Procedure Code. Biplab Kumar Chatterjee vs. State, 2010 (3) CrLJ 2638 (Cal).

24. Death of complainant.—Admittedly, complainant had died after recording of his pre-charge statement. Not only the respondents had the right as well as the opportunity to cross-examine him, they did actually cross-examine him. Therefore, the statement of complainant recorded at pre-charge stage is relevant in view of the provisions contained in Section 33 of the Evidence Act.

The learned Metropolitan Magistrate has not taken the pre-charge statement of complainant into consideration. In view of the mandate of Section 33 of the Evidence Act, it was obligatory for him to take the statement of late complainant into consideration before passing judgment on the merit of the case. Failure of the learned Metropolitan Magistrate to take the statement of complainant into consideration has resulted in failure of justice and, therefore, the order passed by him cannot be sustained. Surjit Kaur vs D. S. Kapoor & Ors., 2010 Cri LJ 1008 (Delhi).

25. FIR.—Non-naming of one or few of accused persons in FIR or in dying declaration, when not fatal. Prosecution case that the accused persons committed criminal trespass into the school and tried to give lesion in the classes and some outsider accused persons being armed with iron rod, spear etc. started assaulting the clerk of the school.

Eighteen persons faced trial out of which were acquitted by the trial Court and the High Court. Names of some of the appellants were not mentioned in the FIR or the dying declarations.

The law is fairly well settled that FIR is not supposed to be an encyclopaedia of the entire events and cannot contain the minutes details of the events. When essentially material facts are disclosed in the FIR that is sufficient. FIR is not substantive evidence and cannot be used for contradicting testimony of the eye witnesses except that may be used for the purpose of contradicting maker of the report. Though the importance of naming the accused persons in the FIR cannot be ignored, but names of the accused persons have to be named at the earliest possible opportunity. The question is whether a person was impleaded by way of afterthought or not must be judged having regard to the entire factual scenario in each case. Therefore, non naming of one or few of the accused persons in the FIR is no reason to dis-believe the testimony of crucial witnesses. The evidence of witness is clear and cogent. Kirender Sarkar vs. State of Assam, AIR 2009 SC 2513 : 2009 CrLJ 3727 : 2009 (12) SCC 342 : 2009 (6) JT 114 : 2009 (6) SCR 1133 : 2009 (6) Scale 589.

Delay in dispatch of FIR to Magistrate—Effect of. High Court firstly dealt with the authenticity of the First Information Report. The High Court has noted that PW. 1 allegedly gave First Information Statement. The original of the statement showed that the last page which contained the signature was torn out. The Sessions Judge after seeing the last page of Ext. P1 FI statement observed as follows :

> "The First Information Statement is shown to the witness. It is seen that the place of which the signature of the informant was there torn off. That portion of the paper is seen torn and removed. From the manner in which is torn away, it is clear that it was not separated due to wear and tear, but that portion alone is deliberately removed. The FIS is handed over to the witness."

The High Court made comparison of the document with other documents and found that document was suspicious. Added to that it was noted that the FIR purportedly recorded on 27.10.1993 at 11.00 p.m. It is accepted that Ilaka Magistrate received it on 28.10.1993 at 8.05 p.m. The High Court found that there was unexplained delay in receipt of the occurrence report by the Magistrate.

Thus, the High Court found that not only the document appeared to be suspicious but in addition there was considerable delay in sending it to Ilaka Magistrate. Added to the aforesaid aspects, the noticeable variation in the evidence of PWs. 1 and 3 have been highlighted by the High Court. The role played by PWs. 1 and 3 while the deceased was being assaulted have been analyzed in great detail. The High Court has noticed that even if the prosecution version about the role of A. 1 is accepted to be true, since the genesis of the incident has not been established, it will be unsafe to record his conviction. The High Court has noticed that crime was not committed in the manner as suggested by the prosecution and the genesis of the incident is not established. State of Kerala vs. Anilachandran, AIR 2009 SC 1866 : 2009 (2) Crimes 225 (SC) : 2009 (5) JT 613 : 2009 (6) SCR 152 : 2009 (5) Scale 675.

26. Cognizance of offences.—Informant a member of the Scheduled Caste community alleged that he was accosted in way by number of accused persons including petitioners and was brought in a room where he was intimidated, assaulted, insulted and was abused. Accused persons alleged to have intimidated and abused informant in a room and not within public view. Cognizance taken under provisions of SCST Act is quite bad. Parties have compromised hence order taking cognizance of offences is liable to be quashed. Girinath Singh & Ors vs State of Jharkhand & Ors., 2010 (4) CriLJ 4006 (Jhar).

1. Scope.—Accused was sentenced under Section 324, for having inflicted incised wound by knife on the victim. Victim was attacked by the accused when he refused to accompany him for cutting hands and legs of some other person. On his refusal to accompany him, accused took out knife and started causing injuries one after another. Held, that all was done because the injured refused to be a criminal and resisted the direction of the accused. That aggravated the seriousness of offence. In such cases, reduction of the sentence would be a misplaced leniency bordering on abetment of offence. 1987 Cri LJ 1399 (Raj).

In instant case, there are minor contradictions and they do not effect the prosecution case and cannot belief the prosecution case. Ram Janam Gareri v. State, 1995 (32) ACC 5 (All).

2. An instrument, etc.—The expression "an instrument, which used as a weapon of offence, is likely to cause death" in this section should be construed with reference to the nature of the instrument, and not the manner of its use. UBR (1897-1901) Vol. I, 311l : see also AIR 1944 Sind 83 : 45 Cr LJ 598. In a case under this section the charge should follow the wording of the section. UBR (1897-1901) Vol. I, 318.

Trial for offences under Section 324, IPC where injury was caused by a sharp edged weapon having cut tender muscle nerves. It was held to be a simple injury. State of Karnataka v. Siddegowda, 1995 SCC (Cr) 931 (SC).

3. Section 334.—This section applies to the case of a person who causes hurt on grave and sudden provocation to the persons giving the provocation. 1 BHCR 17, Section 334, provides for a lighter punishment for the offence of voluntarily causing hurt on grave and sudden provocation. AIR 1981 All 189 ; 19 Cr LJ 371.

4. Object.—The object of this section is to make a simple hurt more grave and liable to more severe punishment. 7 MHCR App 11. "The means used to inflict the hurt indicate great malignity. A blow with the fist may give as much pain and cause as lasting injury as cutting with knife or branding with a hot iron. But in most cases, the offender who has used a knife or a hot iron is a far worse and more dangerous member of society than he who has only used his first. The hurt actually inflicted may not, according to the classification of hurts, be a grievous hurt. Yet, on account of the mode in which it is inflicted, it deserves to be punished more severely than many grievous hurts. The administering of deleterious or stupefying drugs with the view to commit an offence is made punishable by a subsequent section (vide Section 328). The mere administering of any such deleterious thing, where the object or intention is not apparent, may be an offence within this section".—Morgan and Macpherson. Causing hurt on grave and sudden provocation is not an offence under this section. 1 BHCR 17, but a charge and finding a case of causing hurt under this section, need not contain a negation that the hurt was caused on grave and sudden provocation. 4 MHCR App 5. Husbands have no right whatever to chastise their wives, even with small canes or bamboos. LBR (1872-1892). 421. A husband, causing hurt to his wife in order to constrain her to obey a demand of his to return to his house, will not be guilty of an offence under Section 320, which apparently refers to some demand in respect of property. In this case, as the husband slightly cut his wife with an instrument of stabbing or cutting, it was held that he was guilty under Section 324, Penal Code. 11 M 257 : 1 Weir 336. An accused cannot be convicted under this section where a charge of affray has been framed against him. 4 LBR 237 ; 7 Cr LJ 398. A person convicted both under Sections 324 and 148, IPC, can be sentenced only under one or the other of the two sections. 35 PLR 587 : AIR 1934 Lah 614. In order to bring the offence under Section 307, home to accused, the prosecution must establish that his intention was one of the three kinds mentioned in Section 300. AIR 1965 SC 843 ; 1965 (1) Cr LJ 766.

The prosecution must prove that the accused caused voluntarily hurt and that such hurt was caused by means of an instrument referred to in the section. AIR 1979 SC 1570 : 1979 Cr LJ 1125.

In case of no medical evidence or expert evidence to show the nature of weapons, it must be held that the prosecution failed to prove the case under Section 324. 1977 Cr LJ 98 ; 1970 Cr LJ 1235 : AIR 1970 Pat 322 (if grievous injury is caused by tooth bite, he will be guilty under Sec. 326).

A conviction under the section is not proper where the injuries were caused in exercise of self defence. 1977 SC Cr R 27.

5. Common object.—Where the common object of unlawful assembly armed with deadly weapons was to cause grievous injuries with sharp edged and blunt weapons, it was held that the conviction under Sections 324 and 323, both read with Section 149 cannot be sustained. AIR 1957 Punj 278 : 1957 Cr LJ 1307. Where the course of conduct adopted by the accused clearly showed that they were actuated by the common object of inflicting about nine injuries on the father and so of causing death to the deceased. It was not necessary for the prosecution to prove that a particular accused caused a particular injury either to the deceased or to his father, and was so guilty under Section 324. Since the offence was under Sections 303 and 324, read with Section 149, of the IPC, it would be enough for the prosecution to prove that a result of the assault carried out in the field by the member of the unlawful assembly grievous hurt was caused to the father and his son's death was intentionally caused. AIR 1956 Bom 183 : 1956 Cr LJ 389.

The accused inflicted several injuries. No proof that all the injuries were caused by either of the two accused. It was held that each of them committed offence under Section 324, IPC at the most individually. 1982 RLW 547 ; AIR 1971 SC 335 : 1971 Cr LJ 288 ; 1982 Cr LJ 1346. See also 1978 Cr LJ 1303 (delay in lodging FIR was held to be inconsequential). On the evidence, it is not possible to infer common intention as mentioned in Section 34, or common object as mentioned in Section 149, each of the accused will be responsible for his individual acts. AIR 1975 SC 12 : 1975 Cr LJ 32 ; AIR 1977 SC 705 : 1977 Cr LJ 347.

6. Common intention.—Where the accused party members of one family barged into the house of the complainant, manhandled her inside and dragged her out and beat her repeatedly, it was held that the said act of accused persons made out a case of common intention against them in committing offence. State of Maharastra v. Jagmohan Singh Kuldip Singh, AIR 2004 SC 4412 : 2004 Cr LJ 4254 (SC) : 2004(3) Crimes 319 (SC) : 2004 SCC (Cri) 2003 : 2004(6) Supreme 287.

7. "Instrument".—The expression "an instrument" which used as a weapon offence is likely to cause death" should be construed with reference to the nature of the instrument and not the manner of its use. What has to be established by the prosecution is that the accused voluntarily caused hurt and then such hurt was caused by means of an instrument referred to in the section. Anwarul Haque v. State of M.P., 2005 Cr LJ 2602 (SC) : 2005(2) Crimes 159 : 2005(10) SCC 581 : 2005 SCC Cri 1629 : 2005(3) Supreme 618.

8. Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable when permission is given by Court—Triable by any Magistrate. The charge should run thus:—

I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

"That on or about the.....day of.........at.......you voluntarily caused hurt to A, B by means of.......which is an instrument for shooting, stabbing, or cutting, or which used as weapon of offence is likely to cause death, etc., and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 324, of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

"And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge."

For legality of charge under Section 302, read with Section 34, but conviction of one accused only under Sections 304 and 324, and acquittal of others. 1957 Cr LJ 270.

9. Acquittal.—Acquittal was maintained. The statement of injured corroborates with medical report and FIR in respect of A-3. High Court convicted A-3 under Section 324, IPC. Jagmer Singh v. Laheri, 1995 JIC 700 (All).

Mischief of fire and causing injury—Accused was one of terrorists, who put fire in informant house and caused injuries. Witnesses have turned hostile and they have not supported the prosecution case. The doctor has only proved the injury on the shoulder of the informant. No doubt that the terrorists fired upon him when crossing the river and he could not identify any of the terrorists, in that view of the matter, there is no evidence to hold the appellant for any of the offence charged. Since, Hiralal Uraon, in whose house, the informant was taking shelter and who was present there, has stated that he was not among the terrorists rather he stated that he was his neighbour, residing in the house just beside his house and he was drunk due to Jitiya festival and he was himself assaulted. Held; There is no evidence to hold appellant guilty of any of offences charged. Charges against appellant have not been proved beyond reasonable doubts. Lalsahay Uraon vs. State of Jharkhand, 2010 (3) CriLJ 3351 (Jhar).

Suppression of genesis of evidence—Discrepancy and inconsistency. The discrepancies coming on record in the evidence of witnesses in no circumstances can be termed to be minors in nature which in our view, are vital for disbelieving and discrediting the evidence of the eye-witnesses. The High Court discarded the important pieces of evidence on the basis of surmises and conjectures. On the day and time of the incident none of the eye-witness including injured witnesses had seen the appellant travelling on Bus. It is their evidence testimony that there were some more persons present at the bus stand, who took the luggage of the appellant after the same was unloaded from the rooftop of the bus. It has come in the evidence of these witnesses that one person hit PW-Laxman Dass. The Investigating Officer has not cared to find out the identity of those persons who were accompanying the appellant on the scene of occurrence and took his luggage or out of those persons who hit PW-Laxman Dass with a stone. It appears that the prosecution has suppressed the genesis of the evidence.

It is the evidence of Fire Arm Expert, that he examined rifle No. 243 of 302 bore which was deposited with the Scientific Branch of the Forensic Science Laboratory by Constable Ram Chhabile. It is clear from the evidence of the Ballistic Expert that the rifle of, 302 bore was sent to him for scientific analysis and not rifle of 315 bore which allegedly was used by the appellant at the time of commission of the offence and which later on was handed over to H.C. Sukhram Singh, who sealed the same in the Police Station. This discrepancy and inconsistency in regard to the use and recovery of the weapon of offence from the possession of the appellant is very vital to discard the truthfulness of the prosecution case. The prosecution has failed to prove that the same weapon of offence was sent to the Ballistic Expert which allegedly was handed over by PW-Vimal Kumar Tiwari or Shambhu Dayal Chaurasia to Head Constable in the Police Station. The contentions of the learned Counsel appearing for the State that such type of minor discrepancy has to be ignored from consideration cannot be accepted.

It is the case of the prosecution that single bullet was fired by the appellant from rifle of 315 bore which caused injuries to four persons.

Witness Tiwari deposed that on the day of incident the appellant fired one single bullet shot, which first hit Prahlad Babu and then Dhanna Lal and the bullet came out of the body of Dhanna Lal and in the process hit two other persons whom he did not know. It has come in his evidence that he could not tell whether all the injured persons were standing in a queue when they received bullet shot.

A Fire Arms Expert examined rifle and he also scientifically examined three live cartridges and one missed fire round. It is his opinion that two pieces of metal could have been fired from above rifle. He placed on record copy of the test report. In cross examination this witness stated that he could not definitely point out whether pieces of metals i.e. EB2 and EB3 were the pieces of same bullet which was fired from same rifle. It is his opinion that rifle was of .302 bore and not of .315 bore. He also categorically stated that one bullet could cause only one entry wound to a person. Mahendra Pratap Singh vs. State of Uttar Pradesh, 2009 (11) SCC 334 : 2009 (1) Crimes 424 : 2009 (3) JT 120 : 2009 (2) SCR 1033 : 2009 (3) Scale 122 : 2009 (2) Supreme 175 : 2009 (2) SLT 520 : 2009 (2) JCC 1131.

Doubts as to weapon of offence.—There was clear concession by learned Counsel for the accused that in the light of the report given there could be not doubt that deceased had died of gun shot wounds as wads and pellets have been recovered from her body. The High Court unfortunately did not consider the relevance of this concession. The High Court observed that the concession had been made rightly, but it further said that there was doubt about the weapon used on deceased. Even if that be so, there was no scope for directing acquittal of the accused persons in respect of murder.

Further question of testimony of three injured eye witnesses the trial Court noticed that their statements were flawless and nothing has come out in their cross examination on the basis of which any doubt could be created about their veracity. The place was a secluded one. The incident took place on the turning of the passage. The incident continued sufficiently for a long time which was clear from the fact that many shots were fired, firstly by both accused resulting in the death of deceased and injuries to some of the witnesses. The High Court discarded the credible evidence of the eye witnesses on mere surmises and conjectures. State of Punjab vs. Atma Singh, 2009 (7) JT 450 : 2009 (4) Supreme 298 : 2009 (7) Scale 689 : 2009 (8) SCR 549 : 2009 (2) Crimes 442 (SC).

The FIR was lodged by victim within few hours. The medical report supported the evidence of victim. The evidence of witnesses were corroborating and trustworthy. The presence of accused with alleged weapon on the spot was proved. The acquittal of co-accused is no ground, for acquittal of accused. Hence conviction sustained. Tribhuwan Singh v. State of U.P., 1995 All LJ 598 (All).

Trial for offence under Section 324, IPC, infliction of injury by accused was established. It was held that the mere absence of the name of such accused in the statement of the injured shall not vitiate the conviction. State of A.P. v. Madhav Raju Venkateswamy, (1995) 2 East Cr C 699 (SC).

Though several persons received injuries in incident but prosecution case was suffering from grave infirmities. Where evidence of injured witness were not reliable and one of injured in incident was found appearing as defence witness in trial and he did not name any of accused as culprit ; it was held that conviction is liable to be set aside. Santosh Kumar v. State, 1997 Cri LJ 984 (All).

Where in a case, the evidence of eye-witnesses was inconsistent with averments in Fardebeyan and punctured wound on hand was of simple in nature and may be caused by any pointed weapon or may be self inflicted, it was held that in view of personal enmity between parties over partition of property, false implication of accused could not be ruled out and, therefore, the accused was entitled to be acquitted. Nirmal Kumar Mehta v. State of Bihar, 2004 Cr LJ (NOC) 66 (Jhar) : Air 2004 Jhar HCR 840 : 2003(3) East Cri C 197.

Very finding of aunused wound and the opinion of doctor that it was caused by sharp-cutting weapon created a doubt over prosecution stay that the accused had caused Bhala injury to the injured witnesses. Place of occurrence as alleged by the prosecution was not proved and the injuries on accused were also not explained. In view of above conviction was held not sustainable. Parmanand Singh v. State of Bihar, 2004 Cr LJ 4430 (Pat) : 2004(3) BLJ Pat 614 : 2004 (3) East Cri C 231.

The wife who was going with co-accused with whom she was alleged to have illicit relationship, allegedly sprinkled acid on person of her husband. Held, there was no occasion for them to carry bottle of acid, because they were not going in search of husband. The circumstances showed that actually it was husband, who out of annoyance on the conduct of his wife, did the occurrence and tried to create evidence in his favour. Hence conviction of his wife and co-accused was not proper. Emlen Henry v. State of Bihar, 2004 Cr LJ (NOC) 11 : AIR 2004 Jhar HCR 165 : 2004(1) DMC 227 : 2003(2) East Cri C 653 : 2003(3) JCR JHA 249.

10. Conviction.—Conviction under Section 324, IPC—Revision petition was filed for the same. It was held that it was a very close range shot and there was no difficulty in identifying the accused as there was electric light. Hence solitary statement is sufficient for recording conviction. As accused is sole bread earner for family the sentence already undergone would meet ends of justice. Raghuvir v. State of U.P., 1995 (32) ACC 283 (All).

Reliance of Dying declaration. This Court has critically examined dying declaration made by the deceased and the surrounding circumstances. There is no doubt whatsoever the statement made by the deceased was on her own volition. It was voluntarily made without any coercion or tutoring of anyone. The statement is natural and coherently made by the deceased in a fit state of mind. There is nothing on record to doubt the evidence of PW-2 who recorded the dying declaration and evidence of duty doctor (PW-13) who certified that the deceased was in fit state of mind to make her statement. Except PW-2 and PW-13 no other individual was present when she made the statement. We do not find any reason whatsoever not to accept the dying declaration.

The deceased in clear and categorical terms stated that she poured kerosene on herself and it was the appellant who lit the match stick resulting in fire and causing 60% burns which ultimately led to her death. The appellant instead of preventing the deceased pouring kerosene upon herself hit the match stick resulting in fire and causing burns. The appellant knew very well that the body of the deceased was drenched with kerosene yet he indulged in the cruel act of lighting the match stick. In the circumstances, we find it difficult to accept the submission that the contents of dying declaration do not disclose the commission of any offence by the appellant. Can it be said that the appellant was not aware that his act was likely cause serious burn injuries to the deceased. The appellant was in fact charged for the offences punishable under Secs. 498-A and 302 IPC. We do not know what view the Court would have taken had there been an appeal by the State as against the acquittal of the appellant under Sec. 302 IPC? Suffice it to say that the High Court took a very lenient view in convicting the appellant for the offence punishable under Sec. 304 Part I IPC and sentencing him to undergo rigorous imprisonment only for a period of seven years. For the aforesaid reasons we confirm the conviction of the appellant for the offence punishable under Sec. 304 Part I of IPC and the sentence awarded by the High Court.

The learned Sessions Judge upon appreciation of the evidence available on record held that prosecution established its case beyond doubt that the appellant lit the match stick when the deceased herself poured kerosene on her body. However, the learned Sessions Judge came to the conclusion that the appellant hade no intention to kill his wife. In the result, the learned Sessions Judge held that in the circumstances it cannot be said that the appellant was having any knowledge that the burn injuries were likely to cause the death of the deceased. But his act would certainly cause hurt to a person and accordingly found the appellant guilty under Sec. 324 IPC. We must express our anguish about the manner in which the learned Sessions Judge has dealt with the matter. Ongole Ravikanth vs. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 2129 : 2009 CrLJ 3944 : 2009 (8) JT 88 : 2009 (8) Scale 824 : 2009 (10) SCR 155 : 2009 (5) SLT 137.

When accused assaulted with axe and injury found to be simple, conviction altered from Section 326 to one under Section 324, IPC. Sheo Dularey v. State, 1997 Cri LJ 269 (Alld).

Trial for offence under Section 324, IPC, there was conviction of the accused. Appeal against the same was filed, oral evidence corroborated by the Medical evidence. Hence conviction not to be interfered with. Sarja Singh v. State of Punjab, (1995) 2 SLJ 1148 (P & H).

The evidence of mother of injured a relative of accused implicating accused. Further statement of Doctor that injuries caused to victim are possible by knife used by accused found credible. Hence conviction confirmed. Madhab Digai v. State, 1995 Cr LJ 1206 (Ori).

Conviction for offences under Section 324, IPC, appeal against the same was filed on reappraisal of evidence on record, the appellate court finding no infirmity in the order of conviction.—Appeal was liable to be dismissed. Om Prakash v. State, 1995 JIC 337 (All).

When evidence of injured witness not reliable and one injured appeared as defence witness who did not name any of accused as culprits, conviction not sustainable. Santosh Kumar v. State, 1997 Cri LJ 984 (Alld).

Conviction for offence under Sections 324 and 324/34, IPC. Revision petition was filed. Petitioner No. 3 inflicted injury with a knife only after victim was caught hold by other two petitioners. Hence there was physical and actual participation of all three petitioners in the assault. Conviction recorded by Court below therefore, calls for no interference. Basco Laurence Fernandes v. State, (1994) 2 Crimes 441 (Bom) : 1994 Cr LR (Mah) 304 (Bom).

The accused was alleged to have caused injuries by sharp cutting weapon at a time when civil litigation between parties was going on regarding land which provided motive to appellant to commit crime. The testimony of eye-witnesses showed that it was moonlight and every thing was clearly visible. The conviction under Section 324/325 was held proper. Bijendra Singh v. State, 2004 Cr LJ 1892 (All) : 2004 All LJ 1019 : 2004(48) All Cri C 544 : 2004(2) All Cri R 1519 : 2004(3) Rec Cri R 193.

In a Karnataka case, the accused persons allegedly pulled down victim from Court and dragged him for a distance of about 20 to 25 feet and assaulted him. Medical evidence supported the alleged assault. It was held that merely because there were no injuries on the back of victim, it could not be said that his evidence was false but, however, it could be said that he had exaggerated a little and, taking into account relatively minor nature of injuries sustained by victim, the accused persons were liable to be convicted for offence under Sections 323 and 324, IPC. State v. Dyarappa Bhimsha Koulagi, 2004 Cr LJ (NOC) 196 (Kant) : AIR 2004 Kant HCR 1326 : 2004(2) Kant LJ 502.

In a Karnataka case, the accused was alleged to have assaulted complainant with stone. The testimony of complainant was quite reliable. The evidence of witnesses, who were won over and did not support prosecution case, was not the least reliable. Accused was, therefore, held liable to be convicted under Section 324. State of Karnataka v. Manakya, 2004 Cr LJ 1966 : AIR 2004 Kant HCR 1282 : 2004(2) KCCR Kar 873 : 2004(3) Kant LJ 161.

Where there was trial of accused with 3 other accused and conviction of appellant under Sections 324 and 326, and acquittal of others. Revision petition challenging of the same was filed. At the trial, several independent witnesses were cited but the prosecution has however failed to examine these and examined only those witnesses who were closely related to injured. The prosecution has failed to bring home the guilt of the appellant. Conviction and sentence set aside. Ramdas Kondaji Pekhale v. State of Maharashtra, (1994) 1 Mah LR 428 (Bom).

In the absence of clear materials in this case, it was difficult to come to a conclusion from the mere ipse dixit of the two doctors that grievous injury had been caused. In short, it was held that the offence committed was one under Section 324 and not under Section 307 or Section 326, IPC. Abhi Ram Mukhi v. State of Orissa, 1996 Cr LJ 2341 (Ori).

When accused was convicted under Section 324, IPC. Accused also received several injuries. But no FIR lodged by him. Simply because accused was injured, it cannot be inferred that incident took place in manner as alleged by him as accused inflicted sword injuries to victim—Accused arrested on spot and known to witnesses. Guilt of accused appellant proved beyond reasonable doubt and his conviction thus upheld. (Criminal Trial). Mahesh v. State of U.P., (1994) 31 All Cr C 658 (All).

In the absence of any cogent materials to hold that the injury was grievous in nature, it must be held that the injury was simple in nature and accordingly the conviction of petitioner was altered to one under Section 324, IPC, Akhi v. State of Orissa, 1996 Cr LJ 2352 (Ori).

Though it was allegation against the accused person that he hurt complainant : yet injuries caused to the body of injured person were found to be simple and not grirveous in nature. Hence conviction of accused person was altered from one under Section 326 to one under Section 324. Sheo Dularey v. State, 1997 Cr LJ 269 (Alld).

The members of unlawful assembly indulged in criminal activity in which deceased was done to death and eye-witness was injured as three persons had assaulted him with a sharp weapon. It was held that person assaulting and injuring the eye-witness could not be convicted of murder under Section 302/149 but they could be convicted under Section 324/149. Rajendra Shantaram Todankar v. State of Maharashtra, 2003 Cr LJ 1277 (SC) : AIR 2003 (SC) 1110 : 2003(1) Crimes 346 : 2003(2) SCC 257 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 506.

The injuries to the victim were caused by the accused with sharp edged weapon and FIR was lodged promptly within two hours after the occurrence and medical report supported prosecution versions as to injuries and version of eye-witness was reliable. The conviction of accused was held proper but sentence was reduced. Sheo Nath v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 1318 (All) : 2003 All LJ 514 : 2003(46) All Cri C 301 : 2003(2) CCR 43 : 2003(1) A Cri R 258.

Where the accused had caused injury to victim by blunt side of spade it was held that in the absence of intention to make an attempt on the life of victim, the conviction of accused under Section 324 was held proper. *Haris Chandra Jain v. In a quarrel the accused gave one blow to victim in college and second in the road. The victim died of enlarged document, it was held that the offence hurt and not grievous hurt made out. Sushil Kumar Rai v. State, 2004 Cr LJ 3536 (All) : 2004(49) All Cr LC 291 : 2004(2) All Cri R 1813.

The police squad was attacked when they tried to surround the accused in a hut. He pelted bottles and glasses and tried to give heavy blow on head of PSI with a chopper but it was warded off. It was held that the conviction of accused for offences punishable under Sections 224, 332 and 307 was proper. Jamil Ahmad v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 3663 (Bom).

Where in a Jharkhand case, the accused assaulted the complainant and the complainant sustained bleeding injuries which were simple in nature. Medical evidence showed that the injuries could not have been caused due to fall as suggested by defence. The complainant had no reason to implicate accused. Testimony of complainant was found reliable though not corroborated by any witness who turned hostile. It was held that finding of guilt and conviction under Section 323, IPC was not proper. Mahesh Rajbhar v. State of Bihar, 2004 Cr LJ (NOC) 139 (Jhar) ; See also Anwarul Haw v. State of U.P., 2005 Cr LJ 2602 (SC) : 2005(2) Crimes 159 : 20058(5) JT 9 : 2005(10) SCC 581 : 2005(4) Scale 442 : 2005(3) Supreme 618 : 2005(2) Raj Cri C 437.

11. Sentence.—Conviction of `V' converted under Section 324, but was sentenced to undergo one year RI—Revision petition for reduction of sentence was filed and it was held that the accused being an old person and incident taking place more than 8 years ago, he should be released on the sentence already undergone. Vijay Singh v. State of U.P., 1995 JIC 602 (All).

Alteration in Sentence—Conviction from Sec. 302 to Sec. 326 IPC—Scope. The informant on whose evidence trial Court and the High Court placed reliance had categorically stated that it was accused Rakesh who had attacked the deceased with a sword, and he was not sure as to how the other two accused persons including the present appellant attacked the deceased. The evidence of witness shows that the accused Jitu@Jitender had given a blow on the belly. The Doctor found no injury on the belly, but same was on the back side. In this scenario, it would be difficult to uphold the conviction of the appellant for offence punishable under Sec. 302 IPC. Accordingly, the conviction of the appellant is altered to Sec. 326 IPC. We find it strange that though the evidence of PW. 8 was accepted, no conviction was recorded so far as the present appellant is concerned for the assaults made by him on Bhagirath. There are several disturbing factors. Strongly, the State has not questioned the conviction of Rakesh for offence punishable under Sec. 324 IPC and non recording of any conviction insofar as the present appellant is concerned in respect of injuries inflicted by him on Bhagirath PW. 8. Jitu vs. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 1337 : 2009 CrLJ 1884 : 2009 (2) Crimes 143 (SC) : 2009 (3) JT 602 : 2009 (3) Scale 534 : 2009 (3) SCR 1158 : 2009 (2) Supreme 387.

Accused was convicted under Section 324, which was challenged in appeal and held that the solitary statement of complainant was sufficient for recording conviction as shot was fired from very close range in electric light. However, the accused had already undergone about two months imprisonment and was not a previous convict and the incident happened in heat of moment, no useful purpose would be served by sending him to jail again hence, it is modified to the extent already undergone. Raghubir v. State of U.P., 1995 UP Cr R 12 (All).

Keeping in view the nature of the offence and the nature of weapon used, which was a pen-knife and the background of the case, and in view of the conviction under Section 324, IPC, it was thought fit and proper to reduce the sentence of imprisonment to the period already undergone and to impose a fine of rupees one thousand, in default, to suffer further imprisonment for two months. Akhi v. State of Orissa, 1996 Cr LJ 2352 (Ori).

Where the accused was convicted under Sections 324 and 326, IPC for throwing acid on victim girl, it was held that as the accused was not a student to show any leniency, sentence of RI for 5 years under Section 326 with fine of Rs. 25,000 would be appropriate. Sangeeta Kumari v. State of Jharkhand, 2004 Cr LJ 1734 (Jhar).

No misuse of bail facility, not in jail even for 3 month though sentenced to one year imprisonment and well settled in life, are no mitigating circumstances to reduce sentence. Ved Prakash v. State of Haryana, 1996 Cri LJ 4156 (SC) : AIR 1996 SC 2795 : 1996(6) Scale 78 : 1996(6) Supreme 371 : 1996(3) Crimes 194 (SC).

Death sentence—Imposition of—When valid. Murder of six members of a family including helpless women and children having been committed in a brutal, diabolic and bristly manner and the crime being one which is enormous in proportion which shocks the conscious of law, the death sentence as awarded in respect of accused Sattan and Guddu was the appropriate sentence and the High Court ought not to have altered it.

Before dealing with the position in law as highlighted by this Court relating to rarest of rare categories where death sentence can be awarded, submissions made by learned Amicus Curiae to show existence of mitigating circumstances need to be noted. It is stated by learned Amicus Curiae that motive is not clearly established. This is contrary to the conclusions of the High Court. In fact, the High Court has treated that an entire family was eliminated and if the evidence of witness is considered reliable and trustworthy, the inadequacy and insufficiency of motive pales into insignificance and recedes behind the curtain. So far as the specific overt acts are concerned, it is to be noted that apart from the accused persons who faced trial, three of these persons, namely, absconding accused were described as accused. Six persons were killed. It is not expected that a lady witnessing such a massacre would note the details. State of Uttar Pradesh vs. Sattan, 2009 (4) SCC 736 : 2009 (2) Crimes 121 (SC) : 2009 (4) JT 347 : 2009 (3) SCR 643 : 2009 (3) Scale 394 : 2009 (2) Supreme 465 : 2009 (2) SLT 641.

12. Probation.—Accused convicted for causing intentional injury, hence benefit of the provisions of the Probation of Offenders Act should not be extended in routine manner. Chintamani Mohapatra v. State of Orissa, (1995) 4 Crimes 348 (Ori).

Petitioners not precious convict and only one head injury was made benefit of probation was granted, Bakhtawar Singh v. State of Punjab, [1994) 2 CC Cases 207 : 1944 (2) SLJ 1122 (P & H).

13. Evidence.—Originally the appellant was tried for offence under Section 302, IPC. Additional Sessions Judge does not seem to have made any efforts to state realities which were presented by circumstances but has chosen to blindly follow evidence of the two eye-witnesses. Hence he has erroneously acquitted the appellant. Accused of the offence under Section 302, IPC. Amar alias Amarendra v. State of Maharashtra, (1995) 2 CCR 163 (Bom).

Evidence showing that appellant accused alongwith others went to spot and attacked deceased and caused his death and also caused injuries on injured. The Injuries sustained by PW 2 were simple, but at the same time, it should hot be forgotten that though the injuries caused by the accused were simple, they have acted actually with an intention to cause his death. It is quite evident that all of them went to the spot with Veecharuval and attacked the deceased and caused his death.

It is not in controversy that one deceased died due to homicidal violence and following the inquest made by the Investigating Officer, the dead body was subjected to post-mortem and all the accused stood charged for the offences referred to above and on trial, accused 1 and 3 were found guilty of murder. Thangaraj vs. State, 2010 (3) CriLJ 3409 (Mad).

Where there were burn injuries caused by pouring kerosene oil and lighting it—Conviction was held by trial Court—Acquittal by High Court—State appeal was filed—Medical evidence corroborating evidence of prosecutrix and there was nothing to show false implication of accused. Her evidence found reliable and truthful. Non-examination of any neighbour not material—Hence conviction by trial Court restored. State of Karnataka v. Ganapathy, 1994 SCC (Cri) 1165 (SC).

Reliability of Eye-witness. PW. 2 Suresh Kumar at the time of occurrence was studying in the school. He is the friend of Raj Kumar, who is the brother of PW. 1. According to him, on the date of occurrence, PW. 2 and his friend Raj Kumar accompanied PW. 1 and the deceased to go to river for taking bath. On the way, the occurrence had taken place. He could state about the occurrence only. He did not refer about the other happenings with reference to the motive as spoken to by PW. 1. At the time of deposition, he was studying B.A. in Nesamani Christian College. He clearly corroborated the evidence of PW. 1 with reference to the overt acts attributed to each of the accused. Nothing has been elicited from PW. 2 that he had anything to speak falsehood against the accused. As a matter of fact, when the victim was taken in a car to hospital, he also accompanied him. When Exh. P1 complaint was given to PW. 11 Head Constable, PW. 2 attested the said complaint. In Exh. P1 also the name of PW. 2 is mentioned. PW. 2 was examined at the hospital during the course of inquest by PW. 14. Therefore, there is no reason to reject the evidence of PW. 2. Vijaykumar vs. State, 2009 (12) SCC 629 : 2009 CrLJ 3056 : 2009 (7) JT 36 : 2009 (6) SCR 919 : 2009 (6) Scale 364 : 2009 (8) SLT 27.

Independent eye-witness—Reliability. The most important witness in this case is PW. 3 Vanaja, whose house is situated very near to the place of occurrence. According to her she came out of the house and when she was proceeding towards Southern side for taking water, she saw that the accused came and attacked Johnson and while PW. 1 intervened, he was also attacked. Admittedly, she is not related to the deceased family.

There is nothing to indicate that PW. 3 was having any animosity to speak falsehood against the accused. The reading of her deposition would make it clear that she is very natural and reliable witness. It is clear that the occurrence had taken place just opposite to her house and from that place, the blood stained earth was seized under Exh. P9 mahazar attested by her husband PW. 6 Gopalakrishnan on the very same day. She also stated that she had finished her S.S.L.C. and after her marriage, she was living with her husband Gopalakrishnan near the place of occurrence. On coming to know that the victim who was taken to hospital died, she went to the hospital to see the dead body. She gave the reason as to why she went to hospital immediately by stating that : "The person who does not know any thing was killed so I went to Kuhithurai Hospital to see Johnson."

In the light of the above position, it is to be emphatically stated that the evidence of Vanaja, who is an educated, independent, not related and whose house is situated opposite to the place of occurrence would inspire confidence that what all she stated before the Court is cogent and credible. Vijaykumar vs. State, 2009 (12) SCC 629 : 2009 CrLJ 3056 : 2009 (7) JT 36 : 2009 (6) SCR 919 : 2009 (6) Scale 364 : 2009 (8) SLT 27.

In a case where intention of the accused is not to kill. Section 307, IPC, will not be attracted. It will be a case covered by Section 324, IPC. In Section 307, the gauging of the intention of the accused will be necessary. 1988 (1) Crimes 276 (All).

Relationship of witness with the injured may be a ground to make close scrutiny of evidence but not to discard the evidence. In the instant case, it was held that minor variation in noting time of occurrence in injury report and FIR did not amount to false case having been made against the accused and that the offence under Section 324, IPC was made out. State of Orissa v. Kanta Mohapatra, 2005 Cr LJ 3361 (Orissa) : 2005(31) OCR 102 (Ori).

Considering that only a single shot was fired and that the fire only resulted in an entry wound with one pellet which fell down from it and five pellets which entered in the body but did not go deep enough to damage the spinal cord nor injured any other internal organs of the body, the court held that the act was not done with an intention or knowledge and under such circumstances that if he by that act caused death, he would be guilty of culpable homicide amounting or not amounting to murder. The accused was held to have committed an offence under section 324 IPC. Rohtas v. State of U.P., 2000 Cri LJ 89 (All).

The accused was guilty of causing incised wound by knife and was sentenced under Section 324. Victim was attacked by the accused when he refused to accompany him for cutting hands and feet of some other person. Other witnesses had turned hostile and the case depended upon the testimony of the victim and the medical evidence. Held, that the case was one where injured's statement was of sterling worth and supported by medical evidence and deserved to be believed in too. In the result, appeal failed and dismissed. 1987 Cri LJ 1399 (Raj).

The doctor did not tender evidence that the injury was grievous nor did the court held it so. Injury report showed it to be a simple injury. Conviction was therefore alleged from one under Sections 327 to 324, IPC, and sentence reduced from 3 years to one already undergone. Quantum of fine was however maintained. (1986) 2 Crimes 81 (Raj).

When oral evidence is corroborated by medical evidence, conviction upheld. Sarja Singh v. State of Punjab, (1995) 2 SLJ 1148 (P & H).

One injured witness was declared hostile and another did not appear in witness-box. The prosecution witness disowned the entire story. Hence order passed by Sessions Judge was perverse and cannot be sustained. Conviction and sentence set aside. Raghubir v. State of U.P., 1995 (32) ACC 162 (All).

Unless the injured person is present in the court and identified by doctor no document could be brought on record. In absence of injured person figuring as witness, it is impermissible to record conviction. Hence, acquittal. Siddapuram Siva Ready v. State of A.P., (1995) 1 ALT (Cr) 71 (AP).

14. Jurisdiction.—When petitioners was convicted for offences under Section 324, IPC and sentenced to 6 months simple imprisonment with fine. There was no material to justify use of undue leniency in favour of appellant No. 3. After a detailed reference to the evidence it cannot be said to be perverse or made in improper exercise of his jurisdiction there seems to be no case for interference on the part of High Court. Bosce Laurence Fernandes v. State, (1994) 2 Crimes 441 (Bom) : 1994 Cr LR (Mah) 304 (Bom).

15. Complaint.—The complaint is maintainable as offences mentioned in complaint were cognizable. However, impugned order is set aside as the trial court did not record any preliminary evidence after entertaining it. The trial court should first record it and then make up its mind, whether it is a fit case for summoning the accused. The complainant shall appear in trial court. Gurmukh Singh v. Jaswant Singh, (1994) 2 Recent CR 717 (P & H).

16. Voluntarily causing hurt.—When assault was pre-determined, benefit of probation cannot be granted. Shyama Pradhan v. State, 1996 Cri LJ 2936 (Ori).

Discovery statement of accused and recovery of revolver pursuant thereto are important circumstances and pointer to guilt of accused. Ved Parkash v. State of Haryana, 1996 Cri LJ 4156 (SC) : AIR 1996 SC 2795 : 1996(6) Scale 78 : 1996(6) Supreme 371 : 1996(3) Crimes 194 (SC).

Attempt to murder or voluntarily causing hurt.—Appellant caused injury on head of informant by Sabal. There was evidence of witnesses and independent witness.

It appears that the prosecution case is in support of the evidence of informant and independent witness and also the evidences of PWs. 1 and 4. The I.O. and the doctor have not been examined in this case and no injury report proved in the trial Court. It is difficult to say that the injury caused to the informant is grievous in nature and dangerous to his life.

In that view of the matter, conviction of the appellant under Section 307 of the Indian Penal Code is bad in law and the same is converted under Section 324 of the Indian Penal Code.

Since, the evidence is that the accused assaulted the informant by Sabal, which is dangerous weapon. Accordingly, the sentence of R.I. for four years under Section 307 of the Indian Penal Code is altered to the sentence for two years under Section 324 of the Indian Penal Code. It appears from the record that the appellant was not granted bail. After that, the appellant has filed this appeal and he remained in custody for more than the conviction passed by the trial Court or by this Court. In that view of the matter, trial Court is directed to release this appellant forthwith, if not wanted in any other case. Patrik Kindo vs. State of Bihar (Now Jharkhand), 2010 (3) Cri LJ 2961 (Jhar).

In absence of essential element of voluntarily causing grievous hurt, case falls under Section 324, and not under Section 326. Golak Chandra Nayak and another v. State of Orissa and others, 1993 Cri LJ 274 (Ori).

17. Free fight.—In free fight between two groups resulting in death of one person, fatal injury can not attributed to any one. Amrik Singh v. State of Punjab, 1993 Cri LJ 2857 (SC) : 1994 Supp(1) SCC 320 : 1994 SCC (Cr) 387.

18. Private defence.—Accused entered office room of deceased, threw chilly powder into his eyes, picked up an iron hammer as well as a brick lying there and assaulted deceased in presence of complainant, a worker engaged by deceased. Trial Court finding evidence cogent, credible, recorded conviction of appellant. The question in such a case would be a question of assessing the true effect of the prosecution evidence, and not a question of the accused discharging any burden. Where the right of private defence is pleaded, the defence must be a reasonable and probable version satisfying the Court that the harm caused by the accused was necessary for either warding off the attack or for forestalling the further reasonable apprehension from the side of the accused. The burden of establishing the plea of self-defence is on the accused and the burden stands discharged by showing preponderance of probabilities in favour of that plea on the basis of the material on record.

When the factual scenario is examined in the background of the principles set out above, the inevitable conclusion is that the appeal is without merit, deserves dismissal which we direct. Arun vs. State of Maharashtra, 2009 CrLJ 2065 : 2009(2) Crimes 6(SC) : 2009(4) SCC 615 : 2009(3) Scale 803 : 2009(4) JT 78 : 2009(3) SLT 220.

19. Doubts as to weapon of offence.—There was clear concession by learned Counsel for the accused that in the light of the report given there could be not doubt that deceased had died of gun shot wounds as wads and pellets have been recovered from her body. The High Court unfortunately did not consider the relevance of this concession. The High Court observed that the concession had been made rightly, but it further said that there was doubt about the weapon used. Even if that be so, there was no scope for directing acquittal of the accused persons in respect of murder.

Coming to the question of testimony of three injured eye witnesses the trial Court noticed that their statements were flawless and nothing has come out in their cross examination on the basis of which any doubt could be created about their veracity. The place was a secluded one. The incident took place on the turning of the passage. The incident continued sufficiently for a long time which was clear from the fact that many shots were fired, firstly by Lal Singh then by his son Dial Singh resulting in the death of Major Singh and his mother Dalip Kaur and injuries to some of the witnesses. The High Court discarded the credible evidence of the eye witnesses on mere surmises and conjectures. State of Punjab vs. Atma Singh, 2009 (7) JT 450 : 2009 (4) Supreme 298 : 2009 (7) Scale 689 : 2009 (8) SCR 549 : 2009 (2) Crimes 442 (SC).

20. Determination of Co-accused—Similarity of cases.—The High Court did not accept the stand of the prosecution regarding applicability of Sec. 304 Part II read with Sec. 149 IPC. It was held that in respect of the respective acts committed by each one of them the matter is required to be considered. From the post mortem certificate it was noticed that the first injury was caused by main accused with aruval on the neck and the corresponding injury caused the death. At the same time, other accused have attacked the deceased and contributed corresponding injuries. Therefore, it was held that main accused had to be convicted in terms of Sec. 302 IPC. So far as others are concerned the acts attracted Sec. 304 Part II IPC.

Appellant has submitted that while others were convicted for offence punishable under Sec. 304 Part II, IPC he alone has been convicted under Sec. 302 IPC. According to him, there is a parity between the co-accused persons. The High Court has indicated the reasons for which the appellant's case was treated differently. The trial Court and the High Court have noted that the appellant had given a fatal blow on the neck with aruval and the injury caused by such act proved fatal. Therefore, there is no substance in the plea of the appellant that he stood on similar footing as that of co-accused persons. Jagebar Ali vs. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 2009 SC 1774 : 2009 CrLJ 1711 : 2009 (1) Crimes 237(SC) : 2009 (11) SCC 108 : 2009 (2) JT 17 : 2009 (1) Scale 674 : 2009 (1) SCR 407.

21. FIR.—Delay in dispatch of FIR to Magistrate—Effect of. High Court firstly dealt with the authenticity of the First Information Report. The High Court has noted that PW. 1 allegedly gave First Information Statement. The original of the statement showed that the last page which contained the signature was torn out. The Sessions Judge after seeing the last page of Ext. P1 FI statement observed as follows :

> "The First Information Statement is shown to the witness. It is seen that the place of which the signature of the informant was there torn off. That portion of the paper is seen torn and removed. From the manner in which is torn away, it is clear that it was not separated due to wear and tear, but that portion alone is deliberately removed. The FIS is handed over to the witness."

The High Court made comparison of the document with other documents and found that document was suspicious. Added to that it was noted that the FIR purportedly recorded on 27.10.1993 at 11.00 p.m. It is accepted that Ilaka Magistrate received it on 28.10.1993 at 8.05 p.m. The High Court found that there was unexplained delay in receipt of the occurrence report by the Magistrate.

Thus, the High Court found that not only the document appeared to be suspicious but in addition there was considerable delay in sending it to Ilaka Magistrate. Added to the aforesaid aspects, the noticeable variation in the evidence of PWs. 1 and 3 have been highlighted by the High Court. The role played by PWs. 1 and 3 while the deceased was being assaulted have been analyzed in great detail. The High Court has noticed that even if the prosecution version about the role of A. 1 is accepted to be true, since the genesis of the incident has not been established, it will be unsafe to record his conviction. The High Court has noticed that crime was not committed in the manner as suggested by the prosecution and the genesis of the incident is not established. State of Kerala vs. Anilachandran, AIR 2009 SC 1866 : 2009 (2) Crimes 225 (SC) : 2009 (5) JT 613 : 2009 (6) SCR 152 : 2009 (5) Scale 675.

22. Unlawful assembly.—To prove specific role of each of accused is not tenable.—When it has been proved beyond any shadow of doubt that the respondents formed an unlawful assembly and the respondent-party was prepared for a fight, it must follow its intention to fight and cause injuries to the other party. No overt act by each member of the assembly is necessary to attract Section 149, IPC Where a concerted attack is made on the victims by a large number of persons it is often difficult to determine the actual part played by each offender. But on that account for an offence committed by a member of the unlawful assembly in the prosecution of the common object or for an offence which was known to be likely to be committed in prosecution of the common object, persons proved to be members cannot escape the consequences arising from the doing of that act which amounts to an offence. It cannot be said that any one of the respondents was present at the spot innocently. It can also not be said that some of the members of the unlawful assembly went beyond the common object and committed crime graver than the assembly had in its object. Therefore, the acquittal of the accused persons on account that the specific role was not attributed cannot be said to be justified. State of M.P. v. Habib Khan and others, 2007 CriLJ 2505 (MP).

1. Number of accused.—Where a number of accused intended to beat the complainant but grievous hurt was inflicted, held, that it must be proved before any one could be convicted under this section that the common object was the intention to cause grievous hurt or the knowledge that any one of them might be likely to cause grievous hurt in the course of the beating which they intended to give to the complainant. 15 Cr LJ 192 ; 5 WR Cr 12 : 6 PR 1901 Cr ; 83 Ind Cas 589 ; AIR 1923 Lah 35; AIR 1949 All 582 ; 50 Cr LJ 878. The question whether a number of persons who joined in the commission of an offence had a common intention or not is a question of fact and not of law. AIR 1949 All 582. But a conviction of all the accused under this section is not maintainable in the absence of evidence to show which of the accused actually caused the grievous hurt even though there was a pre-arranged plan to give a beating. 49 Cr LJ 995 ; AIR 1949 All 77. the following questions were referred to the Full Bench, namely "(2)(a), If a person is attacked by several persons numbering less than 5 and grievous hurt is caused, and it is not known who caused the grievous hurt, can all of them be convicted of causing grievous hurt, with the aid of Section 34, Penal Code ? 2 (b). If a person is attacked by several persons numbering less than 5 and grievous hurt is caused, and it is known which of them caused grievous hurt, can all of them be convicted of grievous hurt with the aid of Section 34". The Full Bench answered the question in the following words ; "We also answer two parts (a) and (b) of the second questions in the affirmative and hold that all of them under part (a) and others under part (b) can be convicted of causing grievous hurt with the aid of Section 34. Penal Code. Provided, the criminal act was done in furtherance of the common intention of all". But see AIR 1947 All 408 ; 48 Cr LJ 858 ; AIR 1946 All 153 ; 47 Cr LJ 532, which were noticed and distinguished in the Full Bench case above referred to Wanchoo, J. ; also referred and distinguished the case reported in AIR 1949 All 77 ; 49 Cr LJ 595. Where several persons tacitly agree to beat a certain person with lathis and grievous hurt is caused to him, every one of the assailants is supposed to intend the probable consequences of his act, and it is a legitimate inference from their conduct that they intended to cause grievous hurt and not merely simple hurt. 163 Ind Cas 848:

37 Cr LJ 864 ; 1936 A Cr C 89 ; 1936 ALJ 462 ; 1936 Cr C 601 ; AIR 1936 All 437 ; see also 161 Ind Cas 344 ; 37 Cr LJ 428 ; AIR 1936 Lah 28 ; 1977 Cr LJ 1092 (no evidence of any intention on the part of the appellants either to cause the death or cause such injuries which they knew to likely cause death but the appellants had the common intention to cause grievous injury with lathi and the khunt, the accused can be convicted under Section 325 read with Section 34) ; see also AIR 1976 SC 1537 ; 1976 Cr LJ 1154.

2. Voluntarily causes grievous hurt.—No doubt a person is said, "voluntarily to cause grievous hurt" when not only is the hurt which is caused grievous but also he intends to cause or knows himself likely to cause grievous hurt. A person who forcibly thrusts a lathi into rectum of another must at least know that he is likely thereby to cause grievous hurt to the victim as the rectum is a very tender part of the human body, even if it be supposed for a moment that he did not thereby intend to cause grievous hurt. 157 Ind Cas 370 ; 36 Cr LJ 1151 ; 1935 OWN 902 ; 1935 Cr C 1130 ; AIR 1935 Oudh 469. It is an essential ingredient of the offence under Section 325, Penal Code, that either grievous hurt should be intended to be caused or the offender should have knowledge that the hurt caused was likely to be grievous. 1963 (1) Cr LJ 762 ; AIR 1963 HP 18.

It will appear from Section 325, read with Section 322, IPC that the essential ingredients of offence voluntarily causing grievous hurt are three in number : (1) grievous hurt as described in Section 320 must first be cause (2) the offender intended or knew himself to be likely to cause grievous hurt (3) the hurt was caused voluntarily. AIR 1958 Pat 452 ; 1958 BLJR 88 ; 1958 Cr LJ 1077.

Voluntarily causing grievous hurt and criminal tresspass—The proved facts of the case in the instant case clearly disclose that the act committed by the accused falls within the category's defined under Section 320(7), IPC. Weapon used in the instant case is a dao but blunt side of the dao was used and not the edging side. Considering all these aspects of the matter, I hold that the prosecution has been able to prove the case against the accused Safian Ali and that the provisions of Section 325 of the IPC would be attracted. As regards the other accused person, the prosecution could not establish the case against them by clear, cogent and unimpeachable evidence so as to take a different view from what have been arrived at by the learned trial Judge and their acquittal stands confirmed.

In view of the above discussions, the accused Safian is convicted under Section 305, IPC. It is further proved that the accused Safian Ali trespassed into the house of the informant with intent to assault P.W. 2 and/or to annoy the informant and her family members and ultimately attacked P.W. 2 and caused grievous injury and as such the accused has also committed offence punishable under Section 447, Cr.P.C. State of Assam vs. Md. Azad Ali & Ors., 2010 (2) CriLJ 1584 (Gau).

An assault with whatever intention caused by as many as 11 persons out of whom 8 have been convicted cannot be allowed to 90 scot free if a single injury is found to be grievous on a vital part. So far as section 325 is concerned, absence of any specific role attributed to any person as author of that injury will have no effect on the same. It can specially be gathered from the manner of assault and number and nature of injuries that they could have at least intention to cause grievous hurt. One head injury and two injuries on the mouth on another victim assaulted into fracture of his parital bone breaking of his tooth and the other in the fracture of elbow. In these circumstances, the conviction under section 325, read with section 149, 147, IPC, was held proper . Uma Shanker Bharti v. State of U.P., 2001 Cri LJ 362 (All.)

3. Scope.—To establish an offence under this section, it is necessary to prove that the grievous hurt, as described in Section 320, has been caused by the accused and was caused voluntarily. 12 WR Cr 25 ; 21 PR 1889 Cr ; 23 WR Cr 65. A disability for 20 days constitutes grievous hurt. 1 WR Cr 9. When there is neither intention, knowledge nor likelihood that the injury inflicted in an assault will or can cause death, the offence is not culpable homicide not amounting to murder, but "voluntarily causing" grievous hurt. 2 WR Cr 39 ; 5 CPLR Cr 41 ; Rat Un Cr C 558 ; 12 Ind Cas 296 ; 12 Cr LJ 528 ; (1911) 2 MWN 1888. For an offence under this section, it is not only essential that grievous hurt was caused but also that the person causing it either intended to cause or knew that he was likely to cause it. 44 CWN 453.

When one man takes away the life of another, he should prove circumstances, if any, justifying his doing so. Even if the act is done in exercise of the right of private defence, it lies upon him to show that he did not exceed that right. 8 CWN 714 ; 1 Cr LJ 708. The right of private defence cannot be successfully invoked by men who voluntarily and deliberately engage in fighting with their enemies for the sake of fighting, as opposed to the case where men are reluctantly forced to use violence in order to protect themselves from violence offered to them. 17 Bom LR 888 ; 3 Bom Cr C 100. Where a person has sexual intercourse with a girl of little over twelve years of age, with her consent and thereby causes grievous hurt to her, he commits an offence under Section 325, IPC, and is not protected by Section 80, or Section 88, of the same Code. 12 CPLR Cr 11 ; see also 18 Cal 49. On a finding that the accused charged with murder had no intention of killing the deceased or perhaps of badly injuring him, held, that the accused could not be convicted of murder or culpable homicide not amounting to murder and that, as there was not present in the mind of the accused anything more than a knowledge that he was likely to cause a grievous hurt, the accused was guilty only of an offence under Section 325. 18 PR 1893 Cr ; see also 18 CWN 1279 ; 15 Cr LJ 709 ; 26 Ind Cas 157 ; 1892 AWN 105 ; 30 All 538 ; 1908 AWN 243; 4 MLT 402 ; 8 Cr LJ 383 ; UBR (1897-1901) Vol. I 293 ; Rat Un Cr C 398 ; AWN 1881, 172. Where in a case of robbery attended with death, there was no intention to cause death or such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, the proper conviction would be for voluntarily causing grievous hurt in committing robbery and not for voluntarily causing hurt in committing robbery. 6 WR Cr 16 ; ILR 1945 Mad 73. The conviction of an accused person, who emasculated himself under Section 309, Penal Code, was held to be illegal and that he could not be convicted of causing grievous hurt to himself under Section 325. 22 PR 1878 Cr. Where for the purpose of facilitating robbery, dhatura was administered by two persons to certain travellers in consequence of which one of the travellers died and others were made seriously ill, it was held that in respect of the traveller who died, the offence committed was that punishable under Section 325, of the Code. 1908 AWN 1243 ; 30 All 568 ; 8 Cr LJ 383 ; 4 MLJ 402. The offence of voluntarily causing grievous hurt cannot legally be compounded. 1 Bom 147. An accused person charged with the offence of grievous hurt should be committed for trial to the Sessions Court. 1 BHC 101. The mere fact that the accused who has been convicted of grievous hurt, is a man of bad character would not justify an enhanced punishment. 49 PR 1873 Cr. Where the accused gave a blow to the deceased which caused his death, without any intention to kill, or to inflict bodily injury likely to cause death, or with the knowledge that the death must be the probable result, he was neither guilty of murder nor of an offence under Section 304-A, but was merely guilty of voluntarily causing grievous hurt. 3 All 776 ; AWN 1881, 133 : 6 Ind Jour 264. Where the conviction is for causing grievous hurt, the record must show under which of the categories of "grievous hurt" specified in Section 320, Penal Code, the offence falls. 1 WR Cr Letters 5. When accused persons are acquitted of rioting, they cannot be properly convicted of grievous hurt under Section 325, by the application of Section 149, of the Penal Code, when it is not found that those persons, or anyone of them were members of an unlawful assembly. 27 Cal 566 ; 4 CWN 546. A resistance to the execution of an illegal warrant does not render persons liable to conviction under Section 147, but when the right of resistance is exceeded and a severe injury, not called for, is inflicted, the person who inflicts such injury may be convicted under Section 325, 29 Cal 244 ; 6 CWN 164. Where the accused armed with sticks (the size of which is not known) gave blows which fell on the temple of the deceased in consequence of which he died four days after, it must be inferred that the accused did not intend to cause death but only grievous hurt, and a conviction for this offence only can be sustained. Where there were three persons on the side of the appellants and only two on the side of the deceased, who accidentally received injuries on the head it was not clear from whom, and subsequently, died, the presumption is that the appellants were the first to attack and were not acting in self-defence. Accused took a boy away and by practising magic on him caused several injuries on his body the most serious of which was an incised wound on back of neck. But subsequently he bandaged the injuries and took him back. Held, that though there was good reasons for believing the accused intended actually to kill the boy, yet as subsequently changed his mind, he was entitled to benefit of doubt and that the conviction should be altered from of attempted murder to the less serious offence of causing grievous hurt, which he undoubtedly committed. In order to sustain a conviction under this section, it must be shown that not only grievous hurt defined in Section 320, has been caused but also that the accused intended or knew himself to be likely to cause grievous hurt. 1978 Cr LJ 1485 ; 1980

Cut LR (Cr) 237. 4. Sections 325 and 34—Common Intention.—If a person is attacked by several persons numbering less than five persons and grievous hurt, it is not known who caused the grievous hurt, all of them can be committed with the aid of Section 34, 52 Cr LJ 131 ; AIR 1951 All 21 ; 1950 ALJ 884 ; AIR 1952 Kut 4.

Petitioner who was holding iron rod in his hand and other accused inflicted blow causing injuries on head of informant and his son. The injuries sustained by the victim, at the hands of the petitioners could not be denied as the factum of occurrence was corroborated by several witnesses as has been referred in the order impugned recorded by the learned Additional Sessions Judge. It was not the case of the prosecution that the accused persons had administered poison, rather the petitioner inflicted blow with iron rod on his head in furtherance of common intention with the co-accused causing injuries having got bearing in the injury report as well as in the post-mortem report of the deceased. However, the learned Counsel is silent as to the finding of pesticide in the stomach of the deceased in the viscera report furnished by the Forensic Science Laboratory which gives altogether a different circumstances as to the cause of death.

No offence in the given situation is made out under Section 302 or 307 of the Indian Penal Code against any of the petitioners and at best, it could be under Section 325 of the Indian Penal Code as the materials prima facie suggest without much more discussion and without prejudice to the merit of the case. As regards complicity of the petitioner Rupa Devi in the alleged offence is concerned, her earlier version before the police suggests that it was Dhananjay Kumhar who was aggressor and, therefore, prima facie, charge under Section 325/34 of the Indian Penal Code cannot be, in my view, directed against her and I find material sufficient to consider her case for discharge and accordingly she is discharged in Baghmara. For the reasons stated above, I find prima facie materials to proceed against other two petitioners for the charge under Section 325/34 of the Indian Penal Code. Anup Kumhar and Ors. vs. State of Jharkhand, 2010 (3) Cri LJ 2963 (Jhar).

If two or more persons join together and in furthence of common intention to cause grievous hurt attack another and cause grievous hurt all of them can be convicted under this section read with Section 34, irrespective of the identity of the person who caused the grievous hurt. AIR 1976 SC 1537 ; 1967 Cr LJ 1154 ; see AIR 1968 SC 728 ; AIR 1972 SC 2056 ; AIR 1979 SC 1434 ; 1979 Cr LJ 1092 (common object to take forcible possession and no common object to cause death) ; 1979 Cr LJ 892 (offence held under Section 325 read with Section 34, when no common intention to cause death) ; 1979 Cr LJ 7 : AIR 1978 SC 1759 ; AIR 1975 SC 1506 : 1975 Cr LJ 1322 ; AIR 1968 SC 728.

When the accused was mentioned as one of the assailants of the deceased in the FIR but the grievous hurts found on the person of the deceased was not attributed to him, the conviction under Section 325 can not be sustained. 52 Cr LJ 209 ; AIR 1951 Assam 48. Where a person is assaulted with sticks and other weapons by about 16 persons, the fact that the prosecution witnesses, otherwise completely reliable, are unable to specify the site of the impact of an accused's blow with an axe, in the commission of the attack perpeted by so many person, is not a valid reason at all to reject their evidence that the accused did give the blow. ILR 1962 AP 313 ; 1936 (2) Cr LJ 70.

The records clearly show that no charge was framed in terms of Sec. 34 so far as the appellant is concerned. This position is fairly conceded by learned Counsel for the respondent. It is also accepted that except witness who stated that the appellant assaulted the deceased with a stick, the other purported eye witnesses stated that the appellant had given fist blow. Considering the evidence of witnesses as brought on record the appropriate conviction would be in terms of Sec. 325 IPC and not Sec. 302 IPC. Shaikh Karimullah vs. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 171 : 2009 CrLJ 1551 : 2009 (1) Crimes 313 (SC) : 2009 (11) SCC 371 : 2009 (2) JT 263 : 2009 (1) SCR 953 : 2009 (2) Scale 254.

Although there is a difference between common object (Section 149), and common intention (Section 34), both sections deal with a combination of persons who become punishable as sharers in an offence, and a charge under Section 149, IPC, is not impediment to conviction by the application of Section 34, if the evidence discloses the commission of the offence in furtherance of the common intention at all. The commission to mention Section 34, in the charge does not affect the case unless prejudice is shown to have resulted in consequence thereof. AIR 1959 SC 672 Rel on ; AIR 1955 SC 204 and AIR 1956 SC 116 ref. 1961 (1) Cr LJ 625 (it was a case of conviction of the accused under Section 325, read with Section 34, IPC). The main object of the appellants was to demolish the obstruction caused by the complainant on the path way leading to the well, they could not be held to have been inspired by any unlawful object. 1979 Cr LJ 398.

Appeal against conviction where there was lathi injury—FIR lodged by injured—Several injuries were shown offence under Section 325 made out. State of U.P. v. Kishori Lal, 99 JIC 205 (All).

The revisionist were armed with lathies and their intention was to cause grievous and simple injuries. Hence their conviction under Sections 325/34, IPC, was rightly recorded. Chhotey Lal alias Dulla v. State of U.P., 1995 (32) ACC 340 (All).

Only one of the accused inflicted fatal blow in lathiwise manner on the head of the deceased and other accused did not even attempt to cause any injury to the deceased, the accused who caused the grievous injury to the deceased would be liable for grievous hurt and not of murder. Ram Sarup v. State of Haryana, (1995) 1 CC Cases 379 (P & H).

Out of four accused, only one accused was armed with sharpedged weapon and while the remaining three were armed with lathies only one accused wound on right side of head had been sustained by the deceased. The fatal injury was of a lathi. Despite the fact that one of the accused was armed with a sharpedged weapon only one sharpedged weapon injury was inflicted on the person of deceased. The remaining three accused raised lathi blows on the deceased and "S". It was also not specified as to who had struck the fatal lathi blow on the head of deceased. However, all the accused were acting in concert with the previous meeting of minds. To say in legal words, all the four assaulted deceased and "S" in furtherance of their common intention. Taking all these facts and circumstances together, it appeared that the common intention of all the four accused-appellants was only to cause grievous hurt, as otherwise they could have inflicted much more injuries on vital parts of deceased and "S". It was held that under the facts and circumstances of the case, it would be just and proper to hold that common intention of the four accused was only to cause grievous hurt punishable under Section 325, I.P.C. Satpal v. State of U.P., 2000 Cri LJ 3355 (All).

In the case of Parusuraman v. State of Tamil Nadu, 1991 (28) ACC (SC) 604; AIR 1993 SC 141, seven persons were tried for the murder.

Their participation in the occurrence was proved beyond doubt. The deceased had sustained 13 external injuries out of which 11 were on lower legs and arms. It was found that they had no intention to kill and the offence was found to be covered under Section 325, I.P.C.

5. Sections 325, 323.—Quarrel between accused and deceased took place suddenly without any previous motive. It was not a case of prosecution that the deceased was made to fall down and then heavy blows from legs or some other substance were caused on abdomen. Held, the possibility that lever and spleen of deceased were enlarged could not be easily ruled out. The offence of hurt and not grievous hurt was made out. Shashi Kamal Rai v. State of UP, 2004 Cr LJ 3536 (All) : 2004(49) All Cri C 291 : 2004(2) All Cri R 1813.

6. Evidence and Proof.—Where a person is assaulted with sticks and other weapons by about 10 persons, the fact that the prosecution witness, otherwise completely reliable are unable to specify the site of the impact of an accused's blow with an axe, in the confusion of the attack perpetrated by so many persons, is not a valid reason at all to reject their evidence that the accused did give the blow. ILR 1962 Andh Pra 313.

Eye-witnesses stated that accused persons came to deceased's house laced with lathies in the day time before noon and inflicted lathi blows on his head resulting into his death. Death of deceased was cumulative effect of head injuries which by itself were not sufficient to cause death. Intention to kill, cannot be attributed to the accused. Accused persons could be held guilty under Sec. 325 read with Sec. 34 and not under Sec. 302 read with Sec. 34. Nasaru & Anr vs State of Rajasthan, 2010 (4) CriLJ 4016 (Raj).

Where the medical officer in his evidence has clearly stated that there was "fracture of the metacarpal bone of the right hand confirmed by "X-ray examination" he may be presumed to know what amounts to "fracture" and though the extent of the fracture is not indicated in his evidence, yet it may be reasonably inferred that it was not a superficial cut on the bone, but the breaking of the bone itself. 23 Cut LJ 146.

7. Sentence.—This section makes it clear that there must be a sentence of imprisonment, whether fine is imposed or not. AIR 1942 Mad 550 : 44 Cr LJ 65. In matter of petty character sentence of fine without imprisonment though irregular is adequate and High Court will not interfere in revision. 142 Ind Cas 624 : 14 PLT 71 : 34 Cr LJ 407 : AIR 1933 Pat 179 : but see 50 Cr LJ 322 : AIR 1949 All 213. A sentence of the only under Section 325, IPC, for causing grievous hurt is no doubt illegal. But where the fine has been paid and more than five months have elapsed since the case was settled, the High Court will not pass a sentence of imprisonment on a reference by the District Magistrate for enhancement of sentence. 38 PLR 229. In case of grievous hurt, but not serious character, committed under misguided zeal of helping employer, held, sentence of three years' rigorous imprisonment is sufficient. 10 OWN 482 : 1933 Cr C 596 : AIR 1933 Oudh 269 : see also AIR 1934 Lah 111 : 35 Cr LJ 1456. Where on the ground that the parties are close relations lenient view may be taken in the matter of sentence. Hence sentence reduced to period already undergone. Major Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 1 CC Cases 303 (P & H).

Charge of causing grievous injuries to complainant by calling him from house and assaulting him hence convicted under Section 325/34, and sentenced to RI for 1 year. Petition was challenged. It was 12th lunar night hence, it was easy to recognise a known person. Daughter and wife of injured were eye-witness whose presence at the scene of occurrence was natural. The identification of the appellants cannot be doubtful, A-3 deserves benefit of doubt and conviction and sentence of 4 years imprisonment A-1 was liable to be upheld, A-2 was 24 years of age and was nephew of A-1 and appears to have acted on behest of A-1. Therefore his sentence reduced to period already undergone. Rama v. State of M.P., (1994) 2 Crimes 497 (MP).

While others were acquitted the petitioner was convicted and sentenced under Section 325, and 325/34, IPC and revision petition by complainant for enhancement of compensation and against acquittal of appellant for charge under Section 307, IPC. What is it transpires that only one injury was given on head of PW and other two injuries were located on the right shoulder and left leg from reverse side of Kulhari and the blow was not repeated by the accused, the trial court was right in acquitting the appellants on this account. It is also a fit case where substantive sentence awarded to the appellant should be treated as already undergone. Samukh Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 3 CC Cases 30 (P&H).

Provisions of Section 325, are mandatory and the Court is bound to award a sentence of imprisonment to the accused convicted under the section. It may in addition award a sentence to fine also. The discretion of the Court is limited to a decision on the question of quantum of the sentence. AIR 1960 Ker 147 : ILR 1959 Ker 1258 : 1960 Cr LJ 592. In awarding sentence the Court should take into account the weapon used. the manner in which the offence was committed and the consequences that had ensued. AIR 1956 Madh B 269 : 1956 Cr LJ 1408 : 1956 Madh BLJ 905. Where there is clear finding that the injury caused was a very serious one, there is no question of reduction in the sentence. Allegation of causing injury by the petitioners. Accused married with petitioner's daughter against his will. No previous convict but chances of reconciliation, benefit of probation was granted on paying Rs. 5,000/- entitled to be released. Harjit Singh v. State of Haryana, (1994) 1 CC Cases 269 (P & H).

Tried for offences punishable under Sections 147, 323/149, and 307/149, IPC. Convicted and sentenced under the same. Appeal before High Court was filed and conviction altered by High Court to under Sections 147, 323/149, IPC and sentenced them to one year nine months RI respectively and under Sections 325/149, IPC for 1½ years RI. Appeal to Supreme Court was made. PW 5 is an injured witness and his presence at the scene of occurrence cannot be doubted. While the Courts below have relied on the evidence of the eye-witnesses and accepted the prosecution case, the High Court, however, having regard to the nature of the injuries came to the conclusion that no case under Sections 307/149, IPC, was made out and accordingly while upholding the convictions under Sections 147, 323/149, and 325/149, IPC. The occurrence is said to have taken place in the year 1976. Some of the appellants are more than 76 years of age and one of them has also died. In this context it must also be noted that some of the accused persons also received injuries. Having regard to all these circumstances, it is not a fit case where the appellants should be sent back to jail. In the result, while their convictions are affirmed the sentence is reduced to the period already undergone. However, the court imposes a fine of Rs. 200/- on each of the appellants in default of which they will be sentenced to one month's rigorous imprisonment. Ayub v. State of U.P., 1994 All LJ 305 at p. 306 : 1994 Cr LJ 1219 (SC).

Injuries caused to the complainant' injured persons by blunt weapons by appellants hence convicted and sentenced—Revision petition was filed which was challenged of. It was held that the guilt of the accused is established from evidence of eye-witnesses and medical evidence. Finding is upheld. The appellants were aged 17 to 22 years and remained in jail for two to three months. Hence, sentence is reduced to period already undergone. Romesh Kumar v. State of Punjab, (1995) 3 CC Cases 105 (P & H).

Where there was punishment of imprisonment, it was held that as punishment prescribed is substantive sentence and also fine, court awarding sentence must impose sentence as prescribed which is mandatory. Dhandapani v. Dhandapani, 1995 MLJ (Cr) 406 (Mad).

The incident is 15 years old and accused remained in custody. In view of age of appellants and other circumstances the sentence is reduced to period already undergone and fine is enhanced. Pooran son of Bansi v. State of Rajasthan, (1995) 2 RCD 317 (Raj).

The accused allegedly caused grievous hurt to injured persons. The Court after considering evidence altered conviction of appellant from Section 325 to Section 323, IPC. As regards sentence the Court held that as the said offence was the first offence of accused, the parties were related to each other, they had settled the dispute outside and good relations prevailed between them now, the accused were entitled to be released on probation of good conduct. Budhan Pandit v. State of Bihar, 2004 Cr LJ (NOC) 179 (Jhar).

Where the incident had occurred more than 26 year ago and the accused were now more than 60 years of age, sentence of imprisonment for 5 years was reduced to 2 years and he was held liable to pay fine of Rs. 15000/-. Abhilakh Singh v. State of UP, 2006 Cr LJ 1419 (All).

The accused appellants along with number of others armed with hockey sticks, iron chains, etc. attacked the aged defenceless persons indiscriminately including women and children completely turning the happy marriage occasion to one of mourning. On the facts, the High Court was justified in enhancing the sentence and there is no case for interference on any account. Rakesh Singh v. State of M.P., 1996 Cr LJ 2311 (SC).

When accused was punished for 6 months imprisonment and fine incident is 18 years old, sentence reduced to period already undergone. Bhoop Singh v. State of Rajasthan, 1996 Cri LJ 3790 (Raj).

8. Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable. when permission is given by Court—Triable by any Magistrate.

There is a clear indication in the Criminal Procedure Code. that a-person can be charged with an auxiliary offence when he stands charged with the main offence itself. There a person can be charged with an auxiliary offence under Section 367, Penal Code, where he stands charged with the main offence itself under Section 325 and Section 326, Penal Code. AIR 1962 AP 267 : (1962) 1 An WR 125 : 1962 MLJ (Cr) 148 : (1962) 1 Andh LT 203 : 1962 (2) Cr LJ 28.

Where permission is granted to compound the offence the effect is that the accused is acquitted of the charge. AIR 1980 SC 1200 : AIR 1981 SC 1775. Where several persons are charged with being members of an unlawful assembly whose common object is to cause grievous hurt and grievous hurt is caused by some of them but rioting is not proved the accused can not be convicted under Section 325. in the absence of a separate charge. AIR 1955 SC 274 : 1955 Cr LJ 921.

An offence which law declares to be non-compoundable even with the permission of the Court cannot be compounded at all. The offence under Section 326, IPC, is admittedly non-compoundable and hence the Court cannot permit the same to be compounded. However, considering the fact that parties have come to a settlement and the victims have no grievance now and considering the further fact that first appellant has already undergone a period of imprisonment of about six months, a lenient view can be taken and the sentence can be reduced to the period which he had already undergone. "Ram Lal v. State of Jammu and Kashmir, 1999 Cri LJ 1342 (SC) : AIR 1999 (SC) 895 : 1999(2) SCC 213 : 1999(1) JT 147 . 1999(1) Scale 162 . 1999(1) Supreme 216.

In Y. Suresh Babu v. State of A.P., (1987) 2JT (SC) 361 non-compoundable offences were allowed to be compounded. It was specifically observed that the said case "shall not be treated as a precedent."

Mahesh Chand v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1988 SC 2111 offence under Section 307, IPC was permitted to be compounded with the following observations:

"We gave our anxious consideration to the case and also the plea put forward for seekling permission to compound the offence. After examining the nature of the case and circumstances under which the offence was committed. It may be proper that the trial court shall permit them to compound the offence."

In Mahesh Chand, AIR 1988 SC 2111 Suresh Babu Case (Supra) attention of the Hon'ble Court was not drown to the aforesaid legal prohibition hence these decisions were rendered per incuriam.

9. Abetment.—A case under this section can be proceeded with even after the death of the complainant. AIR 1943 Pat 379 : 45 Cr LJ 331.

10. Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :

That you, on or about the.........day of.........at........voluntarily caused grievous hurt to A. B and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 325 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge by the said Court.

11. Probation.—Accused's statutory right to plead for reduction of sentence. Held, accused was rightly dealt with. 1987 Cr LR (MP) 113.

Where there was blows of gandasi and lathi inflicted on complainant by petitioners, hence, convicted under Section 323, IPC and released on probation under Section 4(1), of Probation of Offenders Act. Revision petition was filed. The ocular testimony was fully corroborated by medical evidence. Hence the order of the court below convicting petitioners and releasing them on probation calls of no interference. Sher Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 2 Crimes 162 (P & H).

Conduct was good hence benefit of probation was given. Girdhari v. State of Haryana, (1994) 3 CC Cases 546 (P & H).

When an appeal was dismissed by session judge—Revision petition to High Court.—Considering the nature of injuries on person of complainant attributed to petitioner and his co-accused since acquitted and the fact of his antecedents and family background and the agony of trial for 3 years undergone the petitioner is released on probation. Dalip Singh v. State of Haryana, (1994) 3 CC Cases 239 (P&H).

To be a student is no reasons by itself for showing leniency to a culprit. Section 6 of the Probation of Offenders Act, however, provides to give benefit of Section 3 or Section 4 of the said Act to a person who is below 21 years of age at the time of commission of an offence if such offence is not punishable with life imprisonment. These provisions, no doubt, are of mandatory nature. However, the court is not to give the benefit of probation if it is not warranted in view of the circumstances of the case, nature of the offence and the character of the accused. Om Prakash v. State of H.P., 2000 Cri LJ 2675 (HP) : 2000(2) Shim LC 22 : 2000(3) Rec CR R 735 (HP).

12. Grievous hurt.—Medical evidence corroborating evidence of injured witnesses suffering grievous injuries in nature, conviction proper. Wachittar Singh v. State of Punjab, 1995 Cr LJ 1614 (P & H).

When accused pushed victim who fell down, suffered head injury and became unconscious and his relatives arranged for immediate medical aid to him and thereafter FIR lodged by his wife, delay caused could not raise any doubt or suspicion. State of Karnataka v. Diwakara Bhat, 1997 Cri LJ 226 (SC) : 1996(1) SCC 148 : 1996(7) Scale 97 : 1996(8) JT 457 : 1996(7) Supreme 348.

When death of deceased was caused due to grievous injuries on his body, conviction altered from Section 326 to Section 325, IPC. M.A. Taide v. State of Maharashtra, 1996 Cri LJ 4025 (Bom).

The doctor who examined the injured not examined. On the question as to whether in the absence of the doctor in the present case a conviction is impossible. Since there is sufficient evidence on record to establish the charges and more importantly since the defence has not disputed the wound certificates or insisted upon the presence of the doctor, that the non-examination cannot be treated as a fatal infirmity to the prosecution. On the state of the present record, the evidence clearly makes out that accused nos. 1 and 6 in furtherance of their common intention inflicted the injuries on P.Ws 1 and 2. They are therefore liable to be convicted of the offences punishable under Sections 325, 323 read with section 34 IPC. State v. Sheku alias Shekhara Poojary and Others, 2002 Cri LJ 2148 (Kant.) : AIR 2002 Kant HCR 1278 : 2002(5) Kant LJ 25.

13. Causing Grievous Hurt.—Accused were rightly convicted under Section 325 IPC. Faced with this position, learned counsel for the appellants submitted that the ippellants are first offenders. They were less than 21 years old at the date of commission of the offence. There was no serious attribution to them. It was due to the ack of care on the part of the injured that the injuries assumed that proportion. It was submitted that it was otherwise petty case of giving of fist blows, leg blows and slaps. It vas submitted that it was otherwise petty case of giving of fist blow, leg blow and slaps. t was submitted that keeping in view that the appellants have been writing under the incertainties of this criminal case since the year 1990 and it was the year of 2001 and he attribution to them is not of a grave and serious nature, they should be released on probation of good conduct under Section 4 of the Probation of Offender Act, 1958. Therefore such submission of the learned counsel should be given weight and accepted. n consequence, the sentence of imprisonment and that of fine is set aside. Instead, hey are ordered to be released on probation of good conduct under Section 4 of the probation of offenders Act, 1958 on their furnishing personal bond in the sum of Rs. 10000/- each together with surety bond of the like amount for a period of 3 years. Rajesh Kumar and Others v. State of Haryana 2002 Cri LJ 756 : 2002(1) Rec Cri R 108.

14. Acquittal.—Accused was convicted for offence under Section 325, IPC hence Appeal was filed.—Incident of assault and complaint was made but oral evidence of complainant not adequately corresponding with medical evidence. Material contradictions exist in his initial and supplementary statement. Hence evidence tendered by complainant not trustworthy. Conviction set aside and appellant was acquitted. Bhaiyyaji v. State of Maharashtra, (1994) 2 Crimes 87 : 1994 Cr LR (Mah) 227 (Bom).

Appeal against acquittal.—The proved facts of the case in the instant case clearly disclose that the act committed by the accused falls within the category's defined under Section 320(7), IPC. Weapon used in the instant case is a dao but blunt side of the dao was used and not the edging side. Considering all these aspects of the matter, I hold that the prosecution has been able to prove the case against the accused Safian Ali and that the provisions of Section 325 of the IPC would be attracted. As regards the other accused person, the prosecution could not establish the case against them by clear, cogent and unimpeachable evidence so as to take a different view from what have been arrived at by the learned trial Judge and their acquittal stands confirmed.

In view of the above discussions, the accused Safian is convicted under Section 305, IPC. It is further proved that the accused Safian Ali trespassed into the house of the informant with intent to assault P.W. 2 and/or to annoy the informant and her family members and ultimately attacked P.W. 2 and caused grievous injury and as such the accused has also committed offence punishable under Section 447, Cr.P.C. State of Assam vs. Md. Azad Ali & Ors., 2010 (2) CriLJ 1584 (Gau).

Where injuries were to both sides. No evidence was there as to who was aggressor—Injuries to one accused remained under explained—Testimony of interested witnesses not corroborated by independent witnesses.—It was held that conviction cannot be based on evidence of interested witnesses unsupported by independent evidence. Hence conviction was set aside. Ropi Ram v. State of Haryana, (1995) 2 CC Cases 514 (P & H).

Main accused allegedly killed deceased by giving him fatal lathi blow on the head of deceased during altercation between deceased and him. Wife and mother of deceased sustained injuries in process of being separated from deceased when they wanted to cover. The presence of other two accused persons who were brothers of main accused, on spot would have caused more injuries to said two ladies and deceased. The participation of two accused persons in crime was found doubtful. Benefit of doubt was given to them and they were acquitted. Ramadhar v. State, 2004 Cr LJ 2378 : 2004 All LJ 1205 : 2004 All LJ 1205 : 2004(48) All Cri C 534 : 2004(2) All Cri R 1526.

The accused allegedly bite left ear of complainant causing cut injury. There were seven eye-witnesses. 4 witnesses, who were independent and natural witnesses to the alleged incident deposed that they did not know about the incident. The evidence of other eye-witnesses showed that he reached the place of occurrence after the alleged incident and came to know about the incidence from the complainant himself. Medical evidence also did not support the prosecution case. The evidence on record showed there was scuffle between accused and complainant and the complainant felled on bicycle of accused and was injured. It was held that the cut-injury on ear could be due to fall of complainant on bicycle of accused and false implication of accused due to professional rivalry could not be ruled out and that the accused was entitled to be acquitted. State of Maharashtra v. Om Prakash, 2004 Cr LJ 982 (Bom) : 2004 All MR Bom (Cri) 750.

15. Private defence.—Contention was that acts done by them were in exercise of right of private defence. Digging of water channel providing the cause of fight. Petitioners were entitled to restrict it by exercising their right of private defence—Respondents were aggressors. It was held that Courts below not appreciating the evidence correctly hence order of conviction set aside. Fattu alias Fateh Singh v. State of M.P., (1995) 3 Crimes 279 (MP).

16. "Any Instrument."—Absence of any evidence about sticks being of lethal type and something like sharp blade or sharp point etc. attached to them. Such sticks would not fall within ambit of "any instrument". Jagannath Narayan Nikam v. State of Maharashtra, 1995 Cr LJ 795 (Bom).

17. Conviction.—The three appellants were convicted under Sections 302/34 Appellant No. 2 caused fatal injury resulting in death. The other two appellants No. 1 and No. 3 joined in assaulting when deceased fell down, but there was no evidence of preconcert or meeting of minds of the three accused for committing murder. Held, that for want of evidence of any such conspiracy, appellants 1 and 3 could not reasonably be held guilty of charge under Section 302/34, but they appeared to be guilty of Section 325/34. 1987 Cri LJ 113 (Pat).

18. Culpable homicide.—On quarrel when accused pushed deceased down from staircase without any deliberation, conviction altered from Section 304, Part II to Section 325, IPC. Bakkiaraj v. State, 1997 Cri LJ 429 (Mad).

19. Death of complainant.—Admittedly, complainant had died after recording of his pre-charge statement. Not only the respondents had the right as well as the opportunity to cross-examine him, they did actually cross-examine him. Therefore, the statement of complainant recorded at pre-charge stage is relevant in view of the provisions contained in Section 33 of the Evidence Act.

The learned Metropolitan Magistrate has not taken the pre-charge statement of complainant into consideration. In view of the mandate of Section 33 of the Evidence Act, it was obligatory for him to take the statement of late complainant into consideration before passing judgment on the merit of the case. Failure of the learned Metropolitan Magistrate to take the statement of complainant into consideration has resulted in failure of justice and, therefore, the order passed by him cannot be sustained. Surjit Kaur vs D. S. Kapoor & Ors., 2010 Cri LJ 1008 (Delhi).

20. Non examination of minor injury on accused.—Non-explanation of injuries by the prosecution will not affect prosecution case where injuries sustained by the accused are minor and superficial or where the evidence is so clear and cogent so independent and disinterested, so probable, consistent and creditworthy, that it outweighs the effect of the omission on the part of prosecution to explain the injuries.

When the prosecution comes with a definite case that the offence has been committed by the accused and proves its case beyond any reasonable doubt, it becomes hardly necessary for the prosecution to again explain how and under what circumstances injuries have been inflicted on the person of the accused. It is more so when the injuries are simple or superficial in nature. In the case at hand, triffle and superficial injuries on accused are of little assistance to them to throw doubt on veracity of prosecution case, particularly, when the accused who claimed to have sustained injuries has been acquitted. Sri Kishan vs. State of Haryana. 2009 (6) SCR 1184 : 2009 (12) SCC 757 : 2009 (8) JT 305 : 2009 (6) Scale 438.

21. De facto complainant.—To cause "grievous hurt" it is not necessary that any weapon of offence must be used. Even without any weapon, an injury of the nature mentioned in Section 320 could be caused. The offence under Section 325 is voluntarily causing grievous hurt. It does not speak of user of any weapon of offence. That does not mean that to attract Section 326, not only that grievous hurt should be caused and a weapon of offence of the kind mentioned therein is used, the injury must be one which is likely to cause death. Section 326 in clear and unambiguous terms provides that the instrument referred to therein is of such a nature that if it is used as a weapon of offence, it is likely to cause death. The expression "is likely to cause death" is attributable to instrument which is used as weapon of offence and not to the "grievous hurt". If grievous hurt is caused using a weapon of offence of the nature mentioned in Section 326, it becomes a graver offence for causing grievous hurt. To constitute a 'grievous hurt', it is not always necessary that the kind of hurt should be one which "is likely to cause death". All the kinds of hurt mentioned as "first" to "eighthly" in Section 320 would constitute grievous hurt. Only the eighth clause therein mentions about "hurt which endangers life". This by itself is sufficient to arrive at the conclusion that the injury caused need not be one which is likely to cause death, in order to attract Section 326. Sreekumar v. State of Kerala and another, 2009 CriLJ 3862 (Ker).

Sec. 326. Voluntarily causing hurt by dangerous weapons or means.—Whoever, except in the case provided for by Section 335, voluntarily causes grievous hurt by means of any instrument for shooting, stabbing or cutting, or any instrument which, used as a weapon of offence, is likely to cause death, or by means of fire or any corrosive substance, or by means of any explosive substance, or by means of any substance which it is deleterious to the human body to inhale, to swallow, or to receive into the blood, or by means of any animal, shall be punished with imprisonment for life or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

1. Amendment.—The words in italics were substituted for the words "transportation for life" by Act 26 of 1955, Section 117, and Sch. with effect from 1.1.1956.

2. Scope.—The section can only apply to a person who does a substantive act himself, and inflicts a blow causing grievous hurt as defined in the Code. 6 CWN 98. An accused cannot be convicted under this section unless the weapon used by him was deadly and the hurt intended or known to be likely to be caused was grievous. To convict an accused under Section 304, Part II, knowledge that the injury intended to be caused was likely to endanger life must be proved. If such knowledge or intention requisite for a conviction under Section 302, or under Section 304, Part I, is not proved, he is guilty of an offence under Section 326. and under Section 304, Part II, ILR 1944 Cal 305 : AIR 1945 Cal 467. Nose-cutting is a very serious offence and such cases should ordinarily be committed to Sessions. The offence falls under Section 326, and not under Section 302, 1963 (2) Cr LJ 592.

Political rivalry. Although there is a general statement about the inflicting injury by the other accused person including the accused Nos. 4 and 5, no such injuries are found in the evidence of the doctor. Had there been other injuries on the body of the accused, the same would have been reflected in the medical report, the accused being subjected to medical treatment immediately after the occurrence.

From the discussions made hereinabove, it is found that the FIR though was filed immediately within two hours of the occurrence, it is full of exaggeration and interpolation at various places. The name of the accused Nos. 4 and 5 have been inserted only due to political rivalry with their father. The learned P.P., in his usual fairness, also has not ruled out the possibility of political rivalry in this case which is elicited by defence. From the examination, it is not found as to how certain statements could be written in the FIR after making the endorsement in the FIR putting his signature. Prosecution is silent about this aspect altogether. That apart it is also a mystery as to why the informant, the eye witness failed to divulge the names of the other accused in the FIR. In this connection reference in K. Ashokan and Ors. v. State of Kerala, 1998 (3) SCC 570 : 1998 Cri LJ 2834 has got much relevance and in State of Haryana v. Shibu alias Sib Narayan and others, 2008 (11) SCC 377: 2008 AIR SCW 5400 wherein the Apex Court endorsed the view of the High Court as regards the improbability of the prosecution case, in view of the interpolation in the FIR as well as the non-mentioning of the names of the accused persons in the FIR lodged by the eye-witnesses to the occurrence has also much relevance with the present case.

Upon careful and close scrutiny of the prosecution witnesses it is found that the witnesses unfold two parts of the occurrence that took place, as a result of which witness was injured. As regards the first part of the occurrence the incident that have taken place inside the electric shop except the evidence exhibited by witnesses there is no clear, cogent and impeachable evidence on record. As regards the second part of the incident i.e., the chasing of the victim by all the accused persons it is found that there is no evidence in that regard. There is no indication as to when the other three accused persons joined with the earlier party. Insertion of the name of accused Nos. 4 and 5 in the FIR appears to be at a later point of time. The medical evidence is absolutely silent as regards the severe blows and attack given by the accused persons in the subsequent stage while they assaulted the victim by chasing. Accordingly, the second appeal of the occurrence is highly improbable and prosecution could not prove the same by any evidence worth the name. Narayan Sarkar & Ors. vs State of Tripura, 2010 Cri LJ 986 (Gauhati).

It is true that the weapon used was an axe which is a deadly weapon and it is also true that the amputation of the arm is a very serious injury but where the trial court seems to have erred is in holding that this was an attempt to murder. The injury inflicted, with all its horrifying dimensions would not normally endanger life unless it is an extreme case and if the intention was or the attempt was to take life, then more than one blow or even a fatal blow would have been directed towards a vital part of a body which was not done. The convection was attered from under section 307 to one under section 326, IPC. Basappa Balappa Bhangi v. State of Karnataka, 1999 Cri LJ 2689 (Kant).

"The crime mentioned in the section requires severe repression. and where grievous hurt is caused it usually calls for a heavy sentence. Where some aggravating circumstance exists to which the law attaches a severe punishment, such as the use of a deadly weapon, it is the duty of the Court to ascertain, the aggravating circumstance and not to assume jurisdiction by ignoring it, and then by passing a sentence for a minor offence, defeat the plain intention of the law. LBR (1872-1891) 182 : see also 20 PR 1915 Cr. "Sections 325 and 326 like the two section immediately proceeding provide the ordinary punishment and punishment under certain aggravating circumstance, of the offences mentioned—the two latter sections applying to the case of causing 'grievous hurt', and the two others to the case of 'hurt'. Many acts made punishable under the proceeding provisions may approach closely in character to those deliberate attempts to commit culpable homicide which are punished by Sections 307 and 308. Such attempts, when hurt is caused by them, are distinguishable from the offence here punished, because in the former, the act done is intended or known to be likely to cause death ; whereas nothing more than hurt or grievous hurt is contemplated in cases falling under the present section. But it may happen that the same act and the same circumstances which satisfy the Court that hurt or grievous hurt has been voluntarily caused, are equally cogent to show that the intention of the accused was to cause death. Morgan and Macpherson. A person urged another to attack the complainant, and such other person cut the complainant in the forearm with a clasp knife, while the former threw sticks at him. It appeared from the evidence that there was no proof that the latter had the knife in his hand at the time of the former's urging him on, nor was there evidence that the former knew in any other way that the latter would be likely to use the clasp knife. Held, that the former could not be convicted of abetting the offence of causing grievous hurt with a dangerous weapon under Section 326, Penal Code, but that he would only be convicted of abetting an assault. 4 LBR 271 : 8 Cr LJ 472. Where a person caused grievous hurt by means of chhavi in excess of his right of private defence he can be convicted under this section. 29 PWR 1914 Cr : 182 PLR 1914 : 15 Cr LJ 540 : 24 Ind Cas 948.

Where the accused in the course of a quarrel, stabbed the opponent in four places out of which he died, held, that in the absence of any evidence to show the character of the wounds inflicted, and whether death was the probable result of the wounds, the accused could not be convicted of culpable homicide, but should have been convicted of voluntarily causing grievous hurt with dangerous weapon. LBR (1872-1892), 463. A person cutting his wife's nose and ears with a razor and her gut with a pair of scissors, is guilty of the offence of voluntarily causing grievous hurt with an instrument of cutting and the offence is not therefore, compoundable. 19 PR 1902 Cr. To constitute an offence under Section 327, of the Penal Code, the act must have been done "voluntarily". That is the very essence of the offence. 12 CWN 533 : 7 Cr LJ 362. Before a conviction for the offence of grievous hurt can be passed, one of the injuries defined in Section 320, must be strictly proved ; and the eighth clause is no exception to the general rule of the law that a penal statute must be construed strictly. 19 Bom 247. Where the accused struck two blows, one of them severe and the other slight on the head of the deceased, and the deceased died in consequence, held, that it was safer and sounder to convict the accused under Section 326, than under Section 304, of the Indian Penal Code. 115 Ind Cas 66 : 30 Cr LJ 378 : AIR 1929 Lah 37.

Common intention. In her dying declaration, the deceased has imputed the acts of entry into her house and physical presence at the time of the incident to the appellant without anything more. No other overt act saves as mentioned above has been imputed to the appellant by the deceased. It has also not come in evidence before us that the appellant tried to gag her mouth or overpower the deceased in any other manner so as to facilitate the pouring of acid on her by the main accused. Had the appellant shared an intention common with the main accused to kill the deceased by throwing acid on her, it would have been manifest in his conduct which would certainly have been something more than him being just a mute spectator to the whole incident.

Thus, in absence of any active role played by the appellant or overt act being done by the appellant, it cannot be said with certainty that the appellant had accompanied the main accused to the house of the deceased with a common intention to murder the deceased. In view thereof, the conviction of the appellant under Section 302 read with Section 34 IPC cannot be sustained.

However, keeping in mind the facts that the deceased had turned down the sexual advances made by the appellant and that he had accompanied the main accused who was carrying a vessel containing acid in his hand at the dead of the night and in an unearthly hour, it can be said with certainty that the appellant had the intention to inflict bodily harm on the deceased otherwise the appellant would not have accompanied the main accused to the house of the deceased. Since the appellant was present at the scene of occurrence and simply watched the main accused throwing acid on the deceased without preventing the main accused from doing so clearly establishes that the appellant had intended to cause injury to and also disfigurement of the deceased and as such is liable to be punished under Section 326 IPC. Also since the appellant could be said to be possessing knowledge that the throwing of acid is likely to cause death of the deceased, a case under Section 304 Part II is also made out. The appellant has already served rigorous imprisonment for a period of seven years. Bengai Mandal alias Begai Mandal vs State of Bihar, 2010 Cri LJ 1420 (SC).

Deceased in her dying declaration, had attributed acts of carrying vessel containing acid and throwing content thereof on her only to accused No. Both accused were demanding illicit body relations with her as also entering into her house.

It cannot be said with certainty that co-accused had accompanied main accused to house of deceased with common intention to commit murder. Appellant is, therefore, liable to be convicted under Secs. 326 and 304, Part II and not under Sec. 300.

3. Dangerous weapon.—Whether a particular can per se cause any serious wound or grievous hurt or injury has to be determined factually. It is not every case a stone would constitute a dangerous weapon. It would depend upon the facts of the case. In some provisions e.g. Sections 324 and 326 expression "dangerous weapons" is used. In some other more serious offences (e.g. Sections 397 and 398). The facts involved in a particular case, depending upon various factors like size, sharpness, would throw light on the question whether the weapon was a deadly weapon or not. That would determine whether in the case Section 325 or Section 326 would be applicable. Mathai v. State of Kerala, 2005 Cr LJ 898 (SC) : AIR 2005 (SC) 710 : 2005(1) Crimes 181 : 2005(2) JT 365 : 2005(3) SCC 260 : 2005(1) Supreme 215.

In the instant case, the knife which was allegedly used to commit the offence was opined to be one which could have caused the injury suffered by the deceased. The description of weapon in the case and that it could cause the Maxilla to be cut were sufficient indication that, that answered the description of a dangerous weapon under Section 326, IPC. Fracture had been suffered by victim as per medical evidence. The accused was held liable to be convicted under Section 326, IPC. Sreenivasan v. State of Kerala, 2006 Cr LJ 1485 (Kerala).

6. Sentence.—An offence under Section 326, IPC has to be punished with imprisonment, the imposition of fine being an additional punishment at the option of the Court. A sentence of fine alone is obviously not according to law. 1927 MWN 575. The act of nose-cutting is one which imports deliberate design of a particular brutal and cruel character. But where the offence has been committed on real provocation one month's rigorous imprisonment is sufficient. AIR 1943 Mad 681 : 45 Cr LJ 143. In AIR 1956 Bom 193 : 1956 Cr LJ 479, the public servant while performing his duty was injured with axe by the accused who is unusually excitable and a poor villager. Held, that the same could not be a justification for the grossly inadequate sentence of 3 year's RI. Appropriateness of Sentence. In this case we feel the High Court has erred in balancing the relevant factors. The High Court seems to have waived off the custodial sentence and let off the respondents with a modest fine mainly on two considerations. One, that the offence was committed in the year 1996 and it would serve no useful purpose to send the respondents to jail after ten years of the occurrence. And two, the respondents being convicted of the offence of causing grievous hurt in place attempted murder. We are unable to agree with the High Court on both the counts. Any inordinate delay in conclusion of a criminal trial undoubtedly has highly deleterious effect on the society generally and particularly on the two sides to the case. But it will be a grave mistake to assume that delay in trial does not cause acute suffering and anguish to the victim of the offence. In many cases the victim may suffer even more than the accused. There is, therefore, no reason to give all the benefits on account of the delay in trial to the accused and to completely deny all justice to the victim of the offence. In this case there is nothing to indicate that the appellants or the prosecution were responsible for the delay in trial. We are, therefore, of the view that the High Court was not right in substituting the custodial sentence of the respondents to only fines of Rs. 3500.

Coming to the second reason weighing with the High Court, it is a mistake to think that as a rule all offences falling under Sec. 326 would be less serious than the offences falling under Sec. 307 of the Penal Code and would consequently attract lighter sentence.

From the injuries suffered by Appellant No. 2 it is evident that though the respondents did not intend to kill him altogether they surely wanted to leave him crippled for a lifetime. In our opinion, therefore, the High Court was not right in letting them off on completing sentence of imprisonment of merely four months and three months respectively. We accordingly restore the sentence of rigorous imprisonment given to the respondents 1 and 3 and direct that they must serve rigorous imprisonment for two years in addition to the fine of Rs. 3,500 imposed by High Court, in case of default in payment of fine the respondents would suffer simple imprisonment for six months. On realization of the amounts of fine Rs. 6,000.00 would be paid to Appellant No. 2. Mangal Singh vs. Kishan Singh, AIR 2009 SC 1535 : 2008 (12) JT 582 : 2008 (16) SCR 505 : 2008 (15) Scale 33 : 2008 (9) SLT 564.

Brother expressed natural resentment over the molestation of his young sister. He was dragged out of the house and was bodily lifted to the house of miscreant. The accused tied him with a rope against a pole, then tortured him, burnt his face with burning cigarette and cut his palms into pieces bit by bit. Held, that accused had rendered himself liable to the extreme penalty. A sentence of three year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 600 was held to be just. 1987 Cri LJ 128 (MP).

There was absolutely no reason to doubt the statements of witnesses with regard to the incident. An independent witness in as much that he had been employed with the complainant party as well as the accused party at various times. It also appears that he was the focus of the quarrel and the motive that had precipitated the incident, as both the parties were pushing for employing which had led to the unpleasant situation between them. Likewise we find difficult to disbelieve the statement of the injured victim himself as he has given a graphic description as to what had happened. It is true, as has been contended that there are some differences between the statements of these two witnesses but they are bound to occur with the evidence being recorded after about five years. It must also be borne in mind that a parrot like deposition after a long lapse of time smacks of tutoring and some differences in fact advance the credibility of the witnesses.

There is some uncertainty about the involvement of Neelam Bahal, appellant No.l. The facts of the case indicate that she was perhaps not aware that Rakesh Bahal was carrying a weapon in his pocket or on his person. The prosecution evidence also reveals that it was only after the quarrel had reached a certain pitch that he had rushed inside the house and had brought a knife and caused the injuries to Satish Chandra. We also find that no specific overt act has been attributed to Neelam Bahal and only a very tenuous role that has been ascribed to her. To our mind this kind of evidence creates a clear doubt as to her participation. Held that Neelam Bahal, appellant No.1 must be given the benefit of doubt, and thereby acquitted. The appeal qua her is allowed.

Though the general condition of the patient was very bad yet there is no categoric statement in the medical certificate issued by doctor that the injuries were in fact dangerous to life. We are unable to fathom as to whether this was a deliberate omission or an oversight but whatsoever it may be the benefit must accrue to the accused. We have also gone through the evidence of doctor and find that he had admitted that he had not mentioned that the injury was dangerous to the life as he did not think it necessary to do so. At the same time we are unable to accept Ms. Jaiswal"s statement that the case would fall under Sec. 323 or 324 of the IPC but in the light of the statement of victim that he had remained in hospital for fifteen days due to the injuries caused to him, makes out a case of grevious hurt. Rakesh Bahal alone should thus be held guilty under Sec. 326 of the IPC simpliciter. We are told that he has already undergone almost one year of the sentence and in the light of the fact that the incident happened in the year 1987 when he was a young man of about 25 and now must be of middle age, we reduce the sentence to the period already undergone by him. Neelam Bahal & Anr. vs. State of Uttarakhand, 2010 AIR SCW 88 : AIR 2010 SC 428

Alteration in Sentence—Conviction from Sec. 302 to Sec. 326 IPC—Scope. The informant on whose evidence trial Court and the High Court placed reliance had categorically stated that it was accused Rakesh who had attacked the deceased with a sword, and he was not sure as to how the other two accused persons including the present appellant attacked the deceased. The evidence of witness shows that the accused Jitu@Jitender had given a blow on the belly. The Doctor found no injury on the belly, but same was on the back side. In this scenario, it would be difficult to uphold the conviction of the appellant for offence punishable under Sec. 302 IPC. Accordingly, the conviction of the appellant is altered to Sec. 326 IPC. We find it strange that though the evidence of PW. 8 was accepted, no conviction was recorded so far as the present appellant is concerned for the assaults made by him on Bhagirath. There are several disturbing factors. Strongly, the State has not questioned the conviction of Rakesh for offence punishable under Sec. 324 IPC and non recording of any conviction insofar as the present appellant is concerned in respect of injuries inflicted by him on Bhagirath PW. 8. Jitu vs. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 1337 : 2009 CrLJ 1884 : 2009 (2) Crimes 143 (SC) : 2009 (3) JT 602 : 2009 (3) Scale 534 : 2009 (3) SCR 1158 : 2009 (2) Supreme 387.

In a Rajasthan case, the sentence was reduced to period already undergone by him having regard to the fact that he had remained in jail and more than twenty one years had elapsed since incident occurred. Roopa Ram v. State of Rajasthan, 2004 Cr LJ (NOC) 278 (Raj).

Reduction of sentence. Since the notice issued by this Court was limited to the sentence alone, we refuse to go to the merits of the conviction, though the feeble attempt is made by the Learned Counsel to plead innocence on the part of the appellant. However, insofar as the sentence is concerned, we must take into account the affidavit sworn by Badlu Ram, the complainant, practically absolving the appellant. Though it will be of no use at this stage for pleading the acquittal, it is certain that the relations between the parties have improved.

It is also seen that the incident is 30 years old and after being released in 2006 on bail, it will not be proper to send the accused back to jail, more particularly, because nothing has been stated against him regarding his indulgence in any criminal activity. We are also mindful of the fact that the accused must have acted under the influence of his father, who was in fact, the main actor in the whole drama. It was he, who had filed the civil Suit and lost. The appellant, therefore, seems to have acted under the influence of his father. Lastly, there is nothing on record to suggest that the injuries were very serious and endangered the life of Badlu Ram. In fact, it is only on that ground, that the accused persons have been charged for offence under Sec. 326 IPC. In short, even if we agree that the conviction was justified for the reasons aforementioned, we lean in favour of the leniency in sentence. Accordingly, we confirm the conviction, however, limiting the sentence to that, which is undergone by the appellant. With these observations, the appeal is dismissed. Radhey Shyam vs. State of Uttar Pradesh, 2008 (14) SCC 558 : 2009 CrLJ 1107 : 2008 (14) Scale 686 : 2008 (16) SCR 131 : 2008 (9) SLT 510.

Quantum of Sentence. As per the opinion of the Autopsy Surgeon, the death of the deceased was caused due to extensive hemorrhage on account of shock due to injury No. 8 mainly and Injury Nos. 13 and 14 causing hemorrhage. They were incised wounds. Since accused persons abjured guilt, trial was held. Each of the accused persons was convicted as noted above. Appeals were filed before the High Court. So far as the appellant is concerned, it was submitted that he could not be convicted in terms of Sec. 302 read with Sec. 34 IPC as only accused Nanhe, according to the prosecution, caused incised wounds. The appellant was holding only a stick. The High Court relied on the evidence of two eye-witnesses PWs. 5 and 9 and held that the appellant cannot be held guilty of offence punishable under Sec. 302 read with Sec. 34 IPC. It was held that the prosecution has not proved that each of the participating culprits had the some intention and each one shared the intention of the other. The High Court noticed that the accused Prabhu and Jagdish had caused lacerated wounds and, therefore, the knowledge which can be inferred from the said acts is that they intended to cause grievous hurt. Accordingly, the conviction as noted above was altered.

Learned Counsel for the appellant submitted that the appellant cannot be convicted in terms of Sec. 326 read with Sec. 34 IPC. It was submitted that none of the injuries were grievous hurts and the sentence in any way is very harsh.

The heading of the Sec. provides some insight into the factors to be considered. The essential ingredients to attract Sec. 326 are : (1) voluntarily causing a hurt; (2) hurt caused must be a grievous hurt; and (3) the grievous hurt must have been caused by dangerous weapons or means. As was noted by this Court in State of U.P. vs. Indrajeet Alias Sukhatha, 2000 (7) SCC 249, there is no such thing as a regular or earmarked weapon for committing murder or for that matter a hurt. Whether a particular article can per se cause any serious wound or grievous hurt or injury has to be determined factually. At this juncture, it would be relevant to note that in some provisions e.g. Secs. 324 and 326 expression "dangerous weapon" is used. In some other more serious offences the expression used is "deadly weapon" (e.g. Secs. 397 and 398). The facts involved in a particular case, depending upon various factors like size, sharpness, would throw light on the question whether the weapon was a dangerous or deadly weapon or not. That would determine whether in the case Sec. 325 or Sec. 326 would be applicable.

Considering the principles set out above, certainly the appellant guilty of offence punishable under Sec. 326 read with Sec. 34 IPC. However, in the peculiar facts of the case, the sentence of 5 years rigorous imprisonment would meet the ends of justice. Prabhu vs. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 745 : 2008 (13) JT 72 : 2008 (16) SCR 1095 : 2008 (15) Scale 228 : 2009 (1) SLT 506.

7. Evidence and Proof.—When evidence of witnesses is consistent on involvement of accused persons and nature of injuries corroborated by medical evidence and evidence of eye-witnesses, conviction is justitied. Thathanna v. State of A.P., AIR 1994 SC 652 : 1994 Cr LJ 632.

There was absolutely no reason to doubt the statements of witnesses with regard to the incident. An independent witness had been employed with the complainant party as well as the accused party at various times. It also appears that he was the focus of the quarrel and the motive that had precipitated the incident, as both the parties were pushing for employing which had led to the unpleasant situation between them. Likewise we find difficult to disbelieve the statement of the injured victim himself as he has given a graphic description as to what had happened. It is true, as has been contended, that there are some differences between the statements of these two witnesses but they are bound to occur with the evidence being recorded after about five years. It must also be borne in mind that a parrot like deposition after a long lapse of time smacks of tutoring and some differences in fact advance the credibility of the witnesses.

There is some uncertainty about the involvement of appellant No.l. The facts of the case indicate that she was perhaps not aware that Rakesh Bahal was carrying a weapon in his pocket or on his person. The prosecution evidence also reveals that it was only after the quarrel had reached a certain pitch that he had rushed inside the house and had brought a knife and caused the injuries to Satish Chandra. We also find that no specific overt act has been attributed to appellant No.1 and only a very tenuous role that has been ascribed to her. To our mind this kind of evidence creates a clear doubt as to her participation. Held that appellant No.1 must be given the benefit of doubt, and thereby acquitted. The appeal qua her is allowed.

Though the general condition of the patient was very bad yet there is no categoric statement in the medical certificate issued by doctor that the injuries were in fact dangerous to life. We are unable to fathom as to whether this was a deliberate omission or an oversight but whatsoever it may be the benefit must accrue to the accused. We have also gone through the evidence of doctor and find that he had admitted that he had not mentioned that the injury was dangerous to the life as he did not think it necessary to do so. At the same time we are unable to accept statement that the case would fall under Sec. 323 or 324 of the IPC but in the light of the statement of victim that he had remained in hospital for fifteen days due to the injuries caused to him, makes out a case of grevious hurt. Rakesh Bahal alone should thus be held guilty under Sec. 326 of the IPC simpliciter. We are told that he has already undergone almost one year of the sentence and in the light of the fact that the incident happened in the year 1987 when he was a young man of about 25 and now must be of middle age, we reduce the sentence to the period already undergone by him. Neelam Bahal & Anr vs State of Uttarakhand, 2010 AIR SCW 88 : AIR 2010 SC 428

Trial for offence under Section 326, IPC. Incident admitted to the accused—Oral and medical evidence corroborating each other—Hence conviction of the accused, held, proper. Thathanna v. State of Andhra Pradesh, (1994) 1 Cr C 428 (SC) : 1994 Cr LJ 632 : AIR 1994 SC 652.

When medical opinion is not able to explain how injury could have endangered life of deceased, conviction under Section 326, mis conceived. Ashok Kumar Pradhan v. State of Orissa, (1995) 3 Crimes 155 (Ori).

In appeal against conviction under Section 326, IPC, when injured was operated upon but medical evidence not produced, it he stablishes only simple injury. Govind v. State of M.P., 1995 Cr LR 165 (MP).

Testimony of an important eye-witness whose presence at spot cannot be doubted. cannot be undermined by discrepancy in time of recording FIR. State of Rajasthan v. Ani @ Hanif, 1997 (1) Crimes 146 (SC) : AIR 1997 (SC) 1023 : 1997(1) JT 460 : 1997(1) Scale 287 : 1997 Cr LJ 1529.

8. Acquittal.—Trial for offence under Section 326, IPC and evidence firmly indicating towards the guilt of the accused.—Conviction of the accused not to be quashed on the ground of acquittal of the co-accuseds. Sk. Bandar alias Badiruddin v. State of Orissa, 1995 Cr LJ 63 (Ori).

On the adjourned date acquittal order cannot be passed by the Court—If order is passed, it shall be miscarriage of justice. Azaz Hussain v. J.J. Jan, (1994) 2 Crimes 741 (MP).

Both the appellants convicted under Sections 326/34, IPC—Revision petition was challenged of.—It was held that the averments made in bail application of these two appellants have to be read as a whole and when so read the averments relied upon by court below make out a case for assault on 'M' on the hands of two appellants so as to warrant their conviction under Sections 326/34, IPC. Hence, set aside. Dheera v. State of U.P., 1994 U.P. Cr R 400 : 1994 ACC 396 (All).

It seems that the accused party wanted to disarm the complainant party in a process while defending it caused numerous injuries. This aspect would not be sufficient to hold either that accused party itself was aggressor and not the complainant party or that accused had in any manner exceeded the right of private defence of person and property. Hence order of conviction and sentence passed by the trial court is set aside and accused are acquitted. Hamam Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 2 CC Cases 549 (P & H).

The complainant alleged that his right hand was fractured due to twisting by accused but as per medical evidence wound was grievous in nature and might have been caused by any blunt object. Evidence of victim and his brother were contradictory and untrustworthy and there was delay in lodging the complaint also. The conviction of accused was set aside. Ambati Vykunta Rao v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 241 (AP) : 2003(2) Crimes 255 (AP).

Where accused a juvenile, caused serious injury is vital part of the body of victim by Hasia but did not report blow, it was held that intention of accused to cause injury become doubtful and, therefore, the accused was entitled to the benefit of doubt. Motilal Hansda v. State of Bihar, 2005 Cr LJ 49 (Jhar) : AIR 2005 Jhar HCR 148 : 2004(4) JCR Jha 171 : 2004(4) JLJR 263.

In the instant case the accused was convicted only on the ground that injury was corresponding to the statement of one witness. The same evidence of other witnesses in relation to all other co-accused was not accepted. It was held that the conviction of accused was not proper, especially when the doctor's evidence was that injuries could have been caused by weapon other than seized weapon. Mohan v. S. Mane, 2006 Cr LJ 220 (Bom).

Conviction based on averments made in bail application of appellants—Averments was found to be not clear but ambiguous—Hence conviction based on such averments not proper and hence set aside. Dheera v. State of U.P., 1994 ACC 396 : 1994 UP Cr R 400 (All).

9. Probation.—Causing of injury on head with Gandasi using dang-wise by accused—When was held guilty for offences under Sections 326/325/324/323, read with Section 34, IPC which was confirmed by Sessions Judge—Revision petition for same was filed. The Doctor admitted that sometimes an injury on head caused by blunt weapon may give appearance of incised wound. Hence, no offence under Sec. 326, IPC, is made out. Conviction under Secs. 323 & 324/34 confirmed. Accused bread winner of the family and had faced trial for 9 years and was not a habitual offender. Hence released on probation. Pala Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 1 Recent Cr R 286 (P & H).

10. Wrongful confinement.—Where deceased was beaten and confined in police custody and was arrested in a case under Section 307. His arrest and detention will not be illegal. From the evidence available on record both documentary and oral J.B. Katariya had caused injuries to deceased Virendra Singh while he was in police custody and even if it is not possible to say that he intended to cause the death of Virendra Singh, but he can certainly be clothed with the knowledge that the injuries which were being caused to the deceased at the police station were likely to cause his death though probably without any intention to cause his death, or even to cause such bodily injuries to him as were likely to cause death. The offence would fall under Section 304, Part II IPC. So far offence under Section 342 IPC is concerned it is admitted that deceased was not wrongfully confined. He was arrested in a case under Section 307 CPC. His arrest and detention was not illegal. His conviction under Section 342 IPC is set aside. J.B. Katariaya v. State of U.P. 2002 Cri LJ 2220 (All.) : AIR 2002 (SC) 1529 : AIR 2002 Kant HCR 990 : 2002(3) Scale 83 : 2002(2) Supreme 500.

11. Conviction.—Though injured was operated upon but the medical evidence was not produced, the evidence establishes a simple injury with a sharp weapon. Hence conviction altered to under Section 324. IPC and RI for one year and fine. Govind v. State of M.P., 1995 Cr LR 65 (MP).

Revision against conviction. Accused persons armed with lathi, farsi and axe came at spot and assaulted complainant due to which he sustained grievous injuries from perusal of the record it is evident that both the Courts below concurrently found that the petitioners have committed offence for which the petitioners have been convicted. This Court is well aware about the limitation of this Court while exercising the revisional jurisdiction, which does not empower reappreciation of evidence. Hence, so far as conviction is concerned the judgment passed by the Courts below is maintained. Toran Singh Yadav vs. State of M.P., 2010 (3) CrLJ 2601 (MP).

When the accused was convicted under Section 304, Part I, which was confirmed by High Court—Revision petition was filed. It was held that the accused caused simple injury with axe resulting in death. The said injury was not found sufficient to cause death in ordinary course. Hence conviction altered to one under Section 326, IPC. Moti Lal v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (1994) 3 Recent Cr R 77 (SC) : 1994 Cr LJ 1633 : 1994 (2) East Cr C 353.

Revision petition against conviction was filed. Deceased was injured with deadly weapons—While sleeping—Common intention was proved—Oral testimony not in contradiction with medical evidence—Conviction was held fully justified. Pirthi v. State of Haryana, (1994) 1 CC Cases 339 (P&H).

When accused was convicted under Section 326, IPC, and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for two years—Revision petition and assailing for conviction and sentence was filed. There was material contradiction in evidence of victim in court and his statement before police under Section 161, Cr PC. Further, independent witnesses were not examined. The prosecution story appears to be twisted and doubtful. Hence conviction liable to be set aside. Rabi Sahu v. State of Orissa, 1994 Cri LJ 2226 (Ori).

When testimony of eye witness is that he saw accused with blood stained weapon coming out of house of victim, conviction under Section 326, is proper. Prasad Mahato v. State of Bihar. 1993 Cri LJ 3136 (SC) : AIR 1993 (SC) 2477 : 1994 SCC (Cr) 55.

Where accused convicted for offence under Section 304, Part II, which was converted into Section 326, IPC—Medical opinion not able to explain how injury could have endangered the life of the deceased—Hence, conviction under Section 326, misconceived—Blow was with knife, a dangerous weapon—Offence squarely covered by Section 324, IPC.—Conviction was altered to Section 324, IPC. Ashok Kumar Pradhan v. State of Orissa, (1995) 3 Crimes 155 (Ori).

Where contention of evidence cannot be relied upon for conviction—Case of molestation not established and accused sustaining injuries which remained unexplained. It was held difficult to maintain conviction u/S. 326, IPC. Hence, conviction and sentence set aside. Dharam Pal v. State of Haryana, (1995) 2 Crimes 629 (P&H).

When there is no infirmity in evidence of eye witnesses though interested ones, conviction is sustainable. State of Maharashtra v. Hindurao Daulu Charapale, 1997 (1) Crimes 407 (Bom).

It was alleged that six accused persons had assaulted the complainant and caused injuries to him. Appellant was found guilty under Section 326 and co-accused under Section 323 but they were acquitted of charge under Sections 147, 148 and 307. The accused on appeal inter alia pleaded the right of private defence. The accused as per evidence had run to house for fetching a tabli and then assaulted the victim and all this shows that there was time to have recourse to public authorities. So right of private defence plea was not sustained and conviction of accused and sentence awarded were confirmed. Rizan v. State of Chhattisgarh, 2003 Cr LJ 1226 (SC) : AIR 2003 (SC) 976 : 2003(2) SCC 611 : 2003(2) JT 191 : 2003(1) Supreme 890 : 2003(2) Crimes 125 (SC) : See also Sri Shantanu Chakrabarty v. State of Tripura, 2005 Cr LJ 4333 (Gau).

The accused was without any reason questioned by deceased and aggravated by it they wielded lathies and gave a single blow on head of deceased. Since incident occurred at the spur of moment without any intention of motive of causing death, they were convicted under Section 326/34. Chowas Mandal v. State of Bihar (Jhar), 2004 CR LJ 1405 (SC) : AIR 2001 (SC) 1603 : 2004(1) Crimes 331 : 2004(2) Scale 217 : 2004(1) Supreme 861.

The accused had inserted his fingers and a stick in the vagina of his wife as a result of which she sustained heavy bleeding injury. Delay in lodging FIR properly and satisfactorily explained. The evidence of victim wife was satisfactory, trustworthy and convincing and corroborated by medical evidence with regard to nature and cause of injuries sustained by him. Mere non seizure of stick was not to affect the prosecution case. Bomma Haiah v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 2439 (AP) : 2003(1) ALD (crl) 965 : 2003(2) Andh LT AP 340.

Where accused as a member of unlawful assembly caused injury during a malice on which six persons had taken part, it was held that accused was guilty under Section 326 and not under Section 304. Ranu v. State of UP, 2004 Cr JL 1407 (SC) : AIR 2004 (SC) 1605 : 2004(2) JT 289 : 2004(1) Crimes 325 (SC).

The accused were alleged to have caused grievous hurt in a dispute and possibility of false implication even prima facie was ruled out. There was no serious discrepancy between statement of two injured eye-witnesses. The conviction under Section 326 and releasing the offender on probation upon furnishing the bond to keep good conduct was held proper. Balbir Singh v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 3148 (P&H) : 2003(55) Chand LR (Civ & Cri) 339 : 2003(2) Rec Cri R 204.

Where the accused threw acid due to which the victim was badly injured and one of his eyes was also destroyed, the conviction of accused under Section 326 was held proper. Basudev Kar v. State 2004 Cr LJ 1572 (Ori) : 2004(18) All Ind Cas 432 : 2004(1) Orissa LR 318.

The accused alongwith other members of unlawful assembly wanted to teach a lesson to prosecution witnesses and when deceased intervened he was shot dead. Evidence showed that there was no common intention of accused persons to cause death but only to cause grievous injuries. The conviction of accused was altered from under Section 302/149 to one under Section 326/149. Chander Pal v. Rajpal v. State of Haryana, 2004 Cr LJ 285 (SC) : Air 2004 (SC) 625 . 2003(8) JT 545 : 2003(4) Crimes 460 (SC) : 2003(8) Supreme 442.

In an Allahabad case, the accused allegedly inflicted knife blows on the victim body the accused being a co-villager was identified by the victim. She was successful in test of cross-examination. FIR was also lodged promptly. Conviction of accused under Section 326, 324 was held proper. Bhudevo Snigh v. State, 2004 CR LJ 4544 : 2004 All LJ 3508 : 2004(50) All Cri C 203 : 2004(3) Crimes 611.

Members of unlawful assembly chased deceased and assaulted him and while coming back one of the assailants caused injuries to the injured witness. It was held that all are liable to be convicted with the aid of Section 149 and Section 326 could not be applied in case of accused assailant alone. State of Maharashtra v. Kashirao, 2003 Cr LJ 4464 (SC) : AIR 2003 (SC) 3901 : 2003(10) SCC 434 : 2003(7) JT 437 : 2003(6) Supreme 294 : 2003(4) Crimes 74 (SC).

In a Gauhati case, the injured who had lost his firearm had implicated accused as sole assailant. There was no material on record to show that the prosecution case could not be believed. It was held that minor contradictions or omissions could not make prosecution case doubtful and that the conviction was proper. Atiqur Rahman Mazumdar v. State of Assam, 2004 Cr LJ 2362 (Gau) : 2005(1) Gau LR 91.

12. Murderous assault.—The deceased had died either because of his own negligence or the reason could be medical illiteracy or lack of awareness because he used to go to a Medical Assistant in a village dispensary for getting the bone treated which was not proper approach. In any case he has died because of the perforation of the wound which was stitched by Doctor S. L. Kachroo. This was a grievous hurt caused by means of an instrument used for stabbing or cutting and since the dagger or the sword when used as a weapon of offence is likely to cause death, therefore, the accused are guilty of causing voluntarily grievous hurt by use of a dangerous weapon. They are, therefore, guilty of an offence punishable under Section 326 read with Section 34 IPC. State v. Abdul Rashid and Others 2002 Cri LJ 3118 (J&K).

The death of deceased was caused due to single head injury inflicted by the accused and occurrence had taken place in front of the house of the deceased in which his son was also injured. The prosecution had failed to show complications of injury and other intervening circumstances causing the death. The prosecution also did not produce doctor as witness who had treated the deceased. It was held that accused could only be convicted under Section 326/324 and not for offence of murder. Kathandapani v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 151 (Mad) : 2002(2) Mad LW (Cri) 826.

Where the accused caused gun-shot injuries to deceased but death was not the direct result of the said injuries as the deceased died after one and a half month of occurrence and in between he had also been operated upon, it was held that the accused could be held guilty under Section 326 and not under Section 302, IPC. Dev Raj v. State of Punjab, AIR 1992 SC 950 : 1992 Cr LJ 1292 : 1992(2) JT 302 : 1992(1) Crimes 980 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 519 : 1992(1) Scale 608.

The accused had caused injuries on leg of deceased by means of Katari and medical evidence showed that if best of the treatment would have been provided immediately the death might not have occurred. Moreover accused had no knowledge that the injuries would cause death and also had no intention to do it. The conviction for murder was set aside. Anama Naik v. State, 2003 Cr LJ (NOC) 39 (Orissa) : 2002(3) All Cri LR 64 : 2002(93) Cut LT 28 : 2002(2) Rec Cri R 437.

Where the accused person had assaulted the deceased and the medical evidence showed that none of the injuries even collectively appeared to be dangerous to life, the conviction was altered from under Section 302 to one under Section 326 34. State of Haryana v. Manga Ram, 2003 Cr LJ 830 (SC) : AIR 2003 (SC) 558 : 2003(1) SCC 637 : 2002(10) JT 240 : 2003(1) Crimes 250 (SC) : 2003(1) Supreme 39.

13. Applicability.—Some hurts which are not like those hurts which are mentioned in the first seven clauses, are obviously distinguished from a slight hurt, may nevertheless be more serious. Thus a wound may cause intense pain, prolonged disease or lasting injury to the victim, although it does not fall within any of the first seven clauses. Before a conviction for the sentence of grievous hurt can be passed, one of the injuries defined in Sec. 320 must be strictly proved, and the eighth clause is no exception to the general rule of law that a penal statute must be construed strictly. Prabhu vs. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 745 : 2008 (13) JT 72 : 2008 (16) SCR 1095 : 2008 (15) Scale 228 : 2009 (1) SLT 506.

14. Compromise.—In Ram Lal v. State of J & K, 1999, JT (SC) 147 : AIR 1999 SC 895 : 1999(2) SCC 213 : 1999(1) JT 147 : 1999(1) Scale 162 : 1999 Cr LJ 1342, the court referred to the decision of this court in Y. Suresh Babu v. State of A.P., (1987) 2 JT (SC) 361 and held as under:—

> "We gave our anxious consideration to the case and also the plea put forward for seeking permission to compound the offence. After examining the nature of the case and the circumstances under which the offence was committed, it may be proper that the trial court shall permit them to compound the offence."

In Ram Pujan v. State of U.P., 1973 Cr. LJ 1612 : AIR 1973 SC 2418, the court held that the major offences for which accused have been convicted were no doubt non-compoundable, but the fact of compromise can be taken into account in determining the quantum of sentence.

In the case of Y. Suresh Babu v. State of A.P., (1987) 2 JT (SC) 361 the court has specially observed that the said case "shall not be treated as a precedent". The aforesaid two decision are based on facts and in any set of circumstances, they can be treated as per incuriam as pointed attention of the court to sub-section (9) of section 320 was not drawn. Hence, the High Court rightly refused to grant permission to compound the offence punishable under section 326.

In Surendra Nath Mohanty v. State of Orissa, 1999 Cri LJ 3494 (SC) : 1998(8) SCC 387 : 1998(9) JT 1991 : 1999(2) SLT 478(2), the Apex court discussed the law as under:—

> "We reiterated that the course adopted in Ram Pujan v. State of U.P. AIR 1973 SC 2418: 1973 Cr LJ 1612 and Mahesh Chand v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1988 SC 2111 : 1989 Cri LJ 121 (Supra) was not in accordance with law. However, considering the fact that parties have settled their dispute outside the court and the fact that 10 years have elapsed from the date of the incident and the further fact that appellants have already undergone 3 months' imprisonment as per the sentence imposed on them we think that ends of justice would be met if the sentence of imprisonment is reduced to the period already undergone besides imposing a fine of Rs. 5000/- on each of the accused under Section 326 read with section 34, IPC, we reduce the sentence as indicated above and direct that in default of payment of fine, the appellant concerned shall undergo simple imprisonment for a further period of three months. We also refrain from imposing any separate sentence on the other counts of offences. Out of the fine amount, if realised, a sum of Rs. 9000/- also be paid to the injured as compensation"

15. Voluntary causing hurt.—Absence of torch light or electric light at time of occurrence is immaterial when accused were either close relations or co-villagers of witnesses, as there can be no mistaken identity. Shyama Pradhan v. State, 1996 Cri LJ 2936 (Ori).

Where it was allegation against the accused that he hit his sister in-law with injured in angry attitude and where evidence of eye-witnesses were found truth worthy and there is nothing change could be brought through cross examination ; it was held that medical evidence and the evidence of other witnesses have corroborated the prosecution story and therefore, conviction of accused held proper. Ravendra v. State, 1997 Cr LJ 171 (Mad).

16. Free fight.—In free fight between two groups when accused inflicted are injury on head of deceased, he was not responsible for other fatal injury caused to deceased. Amrik Singh v. State of Punjab, 1993 Cri LJ 2857 (SC) : 1999(9) SCC 132 : 1999(236) ITR 38.

Revision against conviction. Accused persons armed with lathi, farsi and axe came at spot and assaulted complainant due to which he sustained grievous injuries from perusal of the record it is evident that both the Courts below concurrently found that the petitioners have committed offence for which the petitioners have been convicted. This Court is well aware about the limitation of this Court while exercising the revisional jurisdiction, which does not empower reappreciation of evidence. Hence, so far as conviction is concerned the judgment passed by the Courts below is maintained. Toran Singh Yadav vs. State of M.P., 2010 (3) CrLJ 2601 (MP).

This Court do find absolutely no reason to doubt the statements of witnesses with regard to the incident. An independent witness in as much that he had been employed with the complainant party as well as the accused party at various times. It also appears that he was the focus of the quarrel and the motive that had precipitated the incident, as both the parties were pushing for employing which had led to the unpleasant situation between them. Likewise we find difficult to disbelieve the statement of PW. 3 the injured victim himself as he has given a graphic description as to what had happened. It is true, as has been contended that there are some differences between the statements of these two witnesses but they are bound to occur with the evidence being recorded after about five years. It must also be borne in mind that a parrot like deposition after a long lapse of time smacks of tutoring and some differences in fact advance the credibility of the witnesses. We also find that the counter version given by the accused cannot be accepted. The accused has claimed that PW. 3 had an evil eye on Neelam Bahal but if that was the reason for the incident they were further called upon to explain as to how the injuries had been suffered by PW. 3, more particularly, as the incident had apparently taken place outside the residential home of the appellants.

We are, however, of the opinion that there is some uncertainty about the involvement of Neelam Bahal, Appellant. The facts of the case indicate that she was perhaps not aware that Rakesh Bahal was carrying a weapon in his pocket or on his person. The prosecution evidence also reveals that it was only after the quarrel had reached a certain pitch that he had rushed inside the house and had brought a knife and caused the injuries to Satish Chandra. We also find that no specific overt act has been attributed to Neelam Bahal and only a very tenuous role that has been ascribed to her. To our mind this kind of evidence creates a clear doubt as to her participation.

We are, therefore, of the opinion that Neelam Bahal, Appellant must be given the benefit of doubt, and thereby acquitted. The appeal qua her is allowed.

A reading of the above would indicate that though the general condition of the patient was very bad yet there is no categorical statement in the medical certificate issued by doctor that the injuries were in fact dangerous to life. We are unable to fathom as to whether this was a deliberate omission or an oversight but whatsoever it may be the benefit must accrue to the accused. We have also gone through the evidence of doctor and find that he had admitted that he had mentioned that the injury was dangerous to the life as he did not think it necessary to do so. At the same time we are unable to accept that the case would fall under Sections 323 and 324 of the IPC but in the light of the statement of victim that he had remained in hospital for fifteen days due to the injuries caused to him, makes out a case of grievous hurt. Rakesh Bahal alone should thus be held guilty under Section 326 of the IPC simpliciter. We are told that he has already undergone almost one year of the sentence and in the light of the fact that the incident happened in the year 1987 when he was a young man of about 25 and now must be of middle age, we reduce the sentence to the period already undergone by him. Neelam Bahal and Anr. vs. State of Uttarakhand, 2010 (2) CrLJ 2100 (SC).

18. Sex crime.—The improved quality of her evidence would assist the courts in arriving at the truth and sifting truth from falsehood. The High Courts would therefore be well-advised to draw the attention of the trial courts to be amended provisions of Section 327, Cr. P.C. and to impress upon the Presiding Officers to invariably hold the trial of rape cases in cameras, rather than in the open court as envisaged by Section 327(2) Cr. P.C. when trials are held in camera, it would not be lawful for any person to print or publish any matter in relation to the proceedings in the case, except with the previous permission of the court as envisaged by Section 327(3) Cr. P.C. This would save any further embarrassment being caused to the victim of sex crime. Trilochan Singh Johar and Another v. State and Another, 2002 Cri LJ. 3268.

19. Principles of Unlawful assembly—Applicability.—Accused persons armed with deadly weapons went to house of victim and inflicted farsa blow on his head and injuring to others.

A close scrutiny of the statements of all the prosecution witnesses reveal that there was a free fight amongst the Complainant Party and the present appellants, during which complainant and his mother sustained injuries and the appellants also sustained injuries, therefore, in such a situation, it would not be a safer course, for the Court to apply the principles of Sections 147, 148 and 149 of IPC to sustain the conviction of the present appellants under Sections 147, 148 and 149 of IPC in view of the specific overt acts of the appellants, however, they can safely be convicted under Section 323 of IPC. Consequently, the present appellants are convicted only under Section 323 of IPC. Babla and Anr. vs. State of Madhya Pradesh, 2010 (3) Cri LJ 3061 (MP) (Gwalior).

Where in a murder trial no charge was framed under Sec. 149 (S. 300 read with Sec. 149), However, the charges as framed made it clear that Court specified that accused persons were members of unlawful assembly and in prosecution of the common object of such assembly, i.e., in order to commit murder of deceased, committed offence and at that time they were armed with daggers etc. to bring in the application of Sec. 148 and in Charge No. 3, there was a specific reference to the transactions, as mentioned in the first charge, and the object to commit murder by hacking on the body of the deceased with daggers and causing his intentional death and thereby committing offence punishable under Sec. 302 IPC, the charge in relation to offence punishable under Sec. 149 IPC was thus, not only implicit but also patent in the charges and no prejudice could have been caused to accused due to non-framing of charge under Sec. 300 read with Sec. 149. Consequently, order of High Court that in the absence of charge under Sec. 302 read with Sec. 149 IPC, they could not have been convicted under Sec. 302, but that each would be liable for conviction for offence punishable under Sec. 326 would be liable to be set aside. Further, if conviction under Sec. 300 read with Sec. 149 could not have been made in the absence of charge, conviction in terms of Sec. 326 also could not be made. Dumpala Chandra Reddy v. Nimakayala Balireddy and Ors., AIR 2008 SC 3069 : 2008 (10) SCR 938 (SC) : 2008 (8) SCC 339 : 2008 (8) JT 117 (SC) : 2008 (10) Scale 178 (SC) : 2008 (5) Suprem 129 (SC) : 2008 CrLJ 3936 (SC) : 2008 (3) SCC (Cr) 493 : Crimes 71 (SC).

20. Offence of Attempt to murder.—The High Court has completely overlooked the evidence on record and the impugned judgment shows total non-application of mind. The High Court observed that the doctor has not stated that the injury was sufficient to cause death in the ordinary course of nature. PW. 1 had noted that 1/3 of the leg was chopped off below the knee. He had categorically stated that the injury could have caused death. The Doctor clearly stated that the aforesaid chopping of the leg was grievous in nature. With some strange logic the High Court observed that merely on the testimony of witness it cannot be assumed that the injury was sufficient to cause death in ordinary course of nature.

The evidence of PW. 5 the victim clearly shows the gruesome nature of the attack and the intention of the accused persons. According to him, two accused Ram Singh and Bapulal caught hold of him. He was laid down on the ground and the accused Krishan Lal chopped out the left foot and Ram Singh caught hold of his left leg and Bapulal caught hold of his right leg, Arjun caught hold of his leg and Krishan Lal kept his legs on his left hand and put clothes in his mouth and caught hold of his head. Leela Krishan said that his foot jaw has been chopped off and the heels should also be chopped out. Accused Suraj Singh kept his leg on a log of wood and Leela Krishan chopped out his feet by axe from above the ankle. The trial Court noticed that the leg was chopped out between the knee and the ankle. Krishan Lal asked Ram Singh to keep the chopped pieces of the leg in the bag and Ram Singh picked up the pieces of legs and kept them in the bag. Though accused Arjun Singh asked that both his eyes should be taken out, accused Ganga Ram told him that chopping of his one leg was sufficient to cause his death.

Thereafter the High Court directed suspension of sentence. By then they had suffered custody for about 3 months 15 days more. There was no similarity in the period of sentence already suffered by the accused persons when the High Court passed the impugned judgment.

Looked at from any angle the judgment of the High Court is clearly unsustainable, deserves to be set aside which we direct. The judgment of the trial Court stands restored so far as conviction as well as the sentences are concerned. State of M.P. v. Kashiram, AIR 2009 SC 1642 : 2009 (4) SCC 26 : 2009 CrLJ 1530 : 2009 (9) JT 140 : 2009 (1) SCR 806 : 2009 (2) Scale 118 : 2009 (1) SLT 765 : 2009 (2) JCC 872.

Appellant had intention to commit murder as he threw full glass of acid on body of injured informant, causing extensive injury. Prosecution proved case beyond reasonable doubts against appellant. He has rightly been found guilty under Sections 341, 323, 326 and 307/34. Amar Soni & Anr vs State of Jharkhand, 2010 (4) CriLJ 4003 (Jhar).

21. De facto complainant.—To cause "grievous hurt" it is not necessary that any weapon of offence must be used. Even without any weapon, an injury of the nature mentioned in Section 320 could be caused. The offence under Section 325 is voluntarily causing grievous hurt. It does not speak of user of any weapon of offence. That does not mean that to attract Section 326, not only that grievous hurt should be caused and a weapon of offence of the kind mentioned therein is used, the injury must be one which is likely to cause death. Section 326 in clear and unambiguous terms provides that the instrument referred to therein is of such a nature that if it is used as a weapon of offence, it is likely to cause death. The expression "is likely to cause death" is attributable to instrument which is used as weapon of offence and not to the "grievous hurt". If grievous hurt is caused using a weapon of offence of the nature mentioned in Section 326, it becomes a graver offence for causing grievous hurt. To constitute a 'grievous hurt', it is not always necessary that the kind of hurt should be one which "is likely to cause death". All the kinds of hurt mentioned as "first" to "eighthly" in Section 320 would constitute grievous hurt. Only the eighth clause therein mentions about "hurt which endangers life". This by itself is sufficient to arrive at the conclusion that the injury caused need not be one which is likely to cause death, in order to attract Section 326. Sreekumar v. State of Kerala and another, 2009 CriLJ 3862 (Ker).

1. Scope.—"The bodily hurt is inflicted by way of torture. The excitable cruelties which are committed in India by robbers, dacoits, etc, for the purpose of extorting property, or information relating to property render a severe punishment necessary. The section applies not only to such cases, but to all cases in which the hurt is for purpose of extorting, or compelling against the sufferer's consent, the delivery of property, notwithstanding that the offender may have valid claim or title to such property".—Morgan and Macpherson. Torture by means of stinging rattles, the effect of which was to extort property, is an offence under this section. 18 WR Cr 8.

2. Person interested in the sufferer.—"Any tie of blood relationship, marriage service or even friendship, seems sufficient. The Court must ascertain for what purpose the suffering was caused, whether it was directed wholly at the sufferer or at another through him. Besides the purposes above referred to, of extorting property or information relating to property, another purpose may be to constrain to any illegal act".—Morgan and Macpherson.

In case of discrepancy in the prosecution evidence regarding plain sheet of paper, the acquittal was held justifiable under Section 327, IPC, 1983 Raj Cr Case 166.

3. Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compound-able—Triable by a Magistrate of the first class.

4. Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That on or about the......day of....at......you voluntarily caused hurt to A, B for the purpose of extorting from the A, B (or from a certain interested in the said A, B to wit.......) a certain property to wit...... and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 327, of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

5. Separate conviction.—It is doubtful whether separate convictions under Section 147, and this section are legal. 8 CLR 390.

6. Offence.—The evidence was that mother-in-law caused injuries on person of deceased who committed suicide. The Supreme Court held that the offence was made out and seeking her old age sentence of fine of Rs. 3,000/-was imposed. State of M.P. v. Nikku Ram, AIR 1996 SC 67.

7. Plea of false implication not tenable.—The question is as to whether of enmity. The factum of injuries to persons had really seen the assailants, they would normally not let them go and substitute them by imaginary persons. That is against the rule of nature, since the injuries were there, only the real assailants could have been implicated and not substituted by others. Babu v. State, 1996 Cr LJ 2116 (All).

Causing hurt by means of poison, etc., with intent to commit an offence.—Whoever administers to or causes to be taken by any person any poison or any stupefying, intoxication or un-whole-some drug, or other thing with intent to cause hurt to such person, or with intent to commit or to facilitate the commission of an offence or knowing it to be likely that he will thereby cause hurt, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall be liable to fine.

1. Scope.—In order to convict a person of an offence under this section mere administration of the drug will not do. There must also be evidence to show that such administration was with the intent specified in the section and to cause injury to the person to whom it was administered. 15 Cr LJ 512 ; 25 Cr LJ 517 ; 46 All 27 ; 4 Bom LR 425 ; 1 Weir 335 ; 30 All 568 ; AIR 1931 Pat 346 : 32 Cr LJ 1228 : 134 Ind Cas 639 ; 60 Ind Cas 50 : 22 Cr LJ 194 : 3 LLJ 191 : AIR 1942 Mad 100 : 43 Cr LJ 320 ; AIR 1941 Mad 832 ; AIR 1931 Pat 346 : 32 Cr LJ 1228. "This offence is complete although no hurt is caused to the person to whom the poison or drug is administered. It is sufficient if he is induced to take it by a person who has any such intention as is specified in the section or who knows that it is likely to cause hurt. A person who knowingly causes another to take poison, may be presumed without further proof to intend to cause hurt unless he is able to show satisfactorily a good intention, e.g., that it was administered in good faith medicinally. Stupefying, intoxicating, or unwholesome drugs or liquors may often be given and taken by those who knew their qualities, or who have no intention to cause hurt or to commit an offence by means of them. Where such things are administered, the criminal intention, which is an essential portion of the offence here defined, should be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Court. The sale of intoxicating or unwholesome liquors or drugs by persons who know their qualities, and that they are likely to cause hurt, is not, it seems, an offence falling under this section".—Morgan and Macpherson.

The accused was not knowing that arrack mixed with small quantity of methyl alcohol was likely to cause death. Hence Section 203, IPC, or even Section 304, IPC was not applicable. Joseph Kurian v. State of Kerala, 1995 Cr LJ 502 (SC) ; 1995 SCC (Cr) 20 : (1995) 1 East Cr C 487 : 1995 Cr R 325 (SC).

In a Jharkhand case, there was no evidence to show that the accused had knowledge that the herbal which he sold to deceased for treatment of a particular disease. There was total absence of motive or intention to commit murder. Prosecution witness, who had also taken the same herbal with curd and rice was alive. The post-mortem report showed that the cause of death was due to fracture of ribs of both sides of chest with injury to lungs, internal haemorrhage and shock. It was held that the possibility of existence of indosulphan in curd could not be ruled out. Shankar Mandal v. State of Bihar, 2004 Cr LJ (NOC) 190 : AIR 2004 Jhar HCR 2001 : 2003 (3) East Cri C 216.

The seizure memo in respect of the recovery of mustard oil from Ram Lalit dated 12.2.1999 shows that the tin from which the sample of mustard oil was taken has not been described at all. All that it says was that the tin was open and it contained half a tin of mustard oil. There is no mention if the tin had any marking of the manufacturer or of the seller. As against this the tin recovered from the premises of the petitioner bears a label of "Nandi Brand Mustard Oil" Kachhi Ghani, 15 kg filtered crushed by kolooh, Manufactured by Haryana Oil Industries, Bhiwani Road, Rohtak", and further a sticker carrying the words "Representative sample tested in competent laboratory and certified unadulterated" were fixed. Further on the cap of the tin the words "Nandi Brand double filtered 100% pure mustard oil Haryana Oil Industries, Rohtak – 124051" were printed. No bill of any kind showing sale of mustard oil by the petitioner to co-accused Ram Lalit has been recovered by the investigation.

It appears, therefore, that the only link between the petitioner, Kailash Chand Gupta and the offence of sale of adulterated mustard oil which was poisonous, is the statement of co-accused, Ram Lalit. The investigation has not procured any evidence to show that the contents of the tin recovered from Ram Lalit could not have been supplied to him by anyone other than the petitioner. The label, sticker and the print on the tin recovered from the petitioner showed that the manufacturer of the oil was Haryana Oil Industries. Therefore, the oil recovered from Ram Lalit could have been supplied to him by any manufacturer of oil and even if it was the same oil which was produced by Haryana Oil Industries the same could have been supplied to him directly by Haryana Oil Industries or by any other middle-man. Thus the very foundation of the charge against the petitioner, namely the link of the sale of adulterated/ poisonous mustard oil and the petitioner is missing. Thus the petitioner cannot be charged for the offence under Section 328, IPC. Kailash Chand Gupta v. State, 2005 Cr LJ 2846 (Delhi) : 2005(2) Crimes 359 : 2005(2) Cur Cri R 138 : 2005(118) DLT 60 : 2005(1) FAC 140.

2. Hurt.—In order to constitute an offence under the section it is not necessary that the hurt should be caused to any particular person intended or that the person injured or likely to be injured should have been previously known. 5 BHC Cr 50 ; 5 LBR 79. The accused called in a "medicine mean" to detect a case of theft. The latter told the accused that he could administer the juice of some leaves to all the villagers, and that it would cause the belley of the thief to swell. The medicine man mixed some drug with the juice in presence of the accused and those who took the medicine really submitted themselves to the deal. Three of them showed symptoms of having been poisoned and suffered severely for upwards of a fortnight. Held, the accused had committed an offence under Section 328, for having caused in unwholesome drug likely to cause hurt to be administered. 1 Weir 335. 4. Charge.—I (name and office of the Sessions Judge, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That on or about the......day of....at.....you administered to AB a certain poison, to wit...... (or any stupefying thing, etc.), or caused the same to be taken by AB), with intent to cause hurt to the said AB (or knowing it to be likely that you will thereby cause hurt to the said AB or with intent to commit or facilitate the commission of the offence of......upon the said AB), and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 321, of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

5. Offence.—The chain of circumstances leading to the death of deceased was not complete as against the accused appellant and it cannot be said to be leaving no room for any other hypothesis except the guilt of the accused/appellant. Therefore, offences under Section 328 and 302 of the Indian Penal Code was not made out against the accused/appellant. Kaushal Prasad v. State of M.P., 1996 Cr LJ 2268 (MP).

6. Administration of drug—Error in stating offence.—The charge under Section 304 framed against the appellant-accused was with definite allegation of culpable homicide not amounting to murder by reason of administration of drug without taking precaution for reaction there from. This is totally different from causing hurt by means of administration of unwholesome drug. On no count a definite charge of culpable homicide can be an error for causing hurt. Going by Sec. 214, Cr. P.C., in every charge words used in describing an offence shall be deemed to have been used in the sense attached to them by law under which such offence is punishable. Therefore, to construe the section relating to culpable homicide as only an error for causing hurt by unwholesome drug will lead to misleading so far as the accused is concerned resulting in failure of justice so far as his opportunity to defend is concerned. Therefore, the contention that mentioning of Section 304, I.P.C. in the charge was only an error for Section 328, I.P.C., the ingredients of which have been brought in evidence, and therefore, the conviction can be confirmed as under Sec. 328, I.P.C., as the accused is in no way prejudiced by such error in stating the offence, would not be tenable. Radha Sasidharan v. State of Kerala, 2006 CriLJ 4702 (Ker).

1. Amendment.—The words in italics were substituted for the words "transportation for life" by Act 26 of 1955, Sec. 117, and Sch with effect from 1.1.1956.

2. Scope.—Vide notes under Section 327. Grievous hurt under the like aggravated circumstances is here made punishable. What is made punishable under Section 329, is constraining the person to do illegal act. So when no hurt is caused to a person to compel him to write off a debt or to withdraw a suit to enforce it, no offence would be made out under Section 329, because writing off a debt or withdrawing a suit to enforce it is not an illegal act. AIR 1951 Sau 49 : 5 AI Cr D 291 : 52 Cr LJ 704.

"The use of the word constraint implies that a person is controlled or obstructed from doing an act which the person wants to do. The applicants allegedly wanted to obstruct complainant from deposing against them in another criminal case. The question is if they were trying to force him to an illegal act. It is clear from the definition that whatever be an offence within the meaning of the Penal Code would be covered by it. The legislature has made elaborate provisions in the Code itself regarding evidence. If a person refuses to take oath or state of affirmation before a court of law, he is liable to be punished under section 178 of IPC. If a person refuses to answer question as a witness in a court of law he is liable to be punished under section 179, IPC. The complainant may be required to commit any of the aforesaid offences by constraint put upon him by the applicants. It is not in dispute that pursuant to their intention of preventing the complainant from giving evidence against the applicants, they caused him voluntarily grievous hurt. Thus, applicants were requiring him to commit an offence within the meaning of Indian Penal Code. They were forcing him to an illegal act if facts stated in the chargesheet are true. Consequently, charge under section 329, IPC was rightly framed against the applicants." Ameen v. State of M.P., 2001 Cri LJ 1947 (MP) : 2001(2) MPHT 144 (M.P.).

Of the two injuries caused to the victim, one was located chest which was grievous and the other upon the thigh which was simple, it was held that the absence of any evidence which of these injuries were inflicted by the accused should have been convicted under Section 327, for causing a simple hurt with a sharp weapon. 3. Non-compliance of Sections 239 and 240.—Order sheet is silent about the compliance of Sections 239 and 240, Criminal Procedure Code. Magistrate did not hear the accused and the prosecution on the question of charges. It is the duty of the Court to hear prosecution and accused and consider the material available before him before passing the order framing of charge, which is not done in the present case. Nor Magistrate has recorded his opinion that there is sufficient ground to presume that the accused has committed an offence triable by him and in his opinion accused could be adequately punished by him.

The learned Magistrate shall hear the prosecution and accused and shall consider every material produced before him and thereafter learned Magistrate shall pass appropriate order either to discharge the accused or to frame the charges against the accused in accordance with law. Vijay Kumar Agarwal vs. Mahesh Kumar Agarwal. 2010 (2) CrLJ 1753 (Uttrakhand).

1. Elements.—There must be connection between the assault and restoration of property. 5 Pat LW 106. It must be proved that the assault was inflicted for the purpose of extorting confession or restoration of property. 46 Ind Cas 525 : 5 Pat LW 109 : 19 Cr LJ 749 ; 13 WR 23 Cr ; 138 Ind Cas 134 : 33 Cr LJ 557 : 35 MLW 61 : 1932 MWN 65 : 62 MLJ 223 : AIR 1932 Mad 214. A police man who stands by, acquiescing in an assault on a prisoner committed by another police man for the purpose of extorting confession or information leading to the detection of the crime is guilty of an offence under this section. In such a case the maxim "Respondent Superior" has no application. AIR 1940 Nag 186 : 41 Cr LJ 757 ; AIR 1940 Nag 340 : 42 Cr LJ 17. The word "demand" refers to some demand in respect of some property. 11 M 257. A person voluntarily causes hurt when he himself does an act with the intention of causing hurt to any person or with the knowledge that he is likely thereby to cause hurt to any person and actually causes hurt thereby to any person. 9 CPLR Cr 18. An offence under this section is committed when hurt has been caused for the purpose of extorting information which might lead to the detection of an offence. 20 WR Cr 41. Where the accused was shown to have toctily instigated the commission of an offence by others by expressing approval of their conduct in maltreating a tenant and by suggesting that the tenants having lost their heads should be given a sound beating. Held, that the accused was rightly convicted and sentenced under Section 330, read with Section 114, IPC. 25 ALJ 149 : 8 LR 28 Cr : 100 Ind Cas 537 : 28 Cr LJ 313.

2. Cases.—When a police constable, in the course of an enquiry, violently beat the deceased who dies of the beating nine days subsequently, held, that he was guilty of an offence under Section 330, IPC. 86 PR 1866 : see also (1964) 2 Andh WR 43 : 1964 Mad LJ (Cr) 415 : AIR 1964 AP 548 (Police officers subjecting suspect to torture with a view to extract confession). An Excise Inspector searching the house of a person, under the suspicion that he would find cocaine there, committed many irregularities. He had no warrant authorising him to make the search, he had brought only one search witness and he directed a constable to scale the outer wall of the house. The accused assaulted and beat him. Held, that the Inspector and the constable were not acting in the discharge of their duties as public servants and the accused were not guilty of an offence under Section 330, Penal Code, but were guilty of causing hurt only. 13 ALJ 439 : 37 All 358 : 16 Cr LJ 495 : 29 Ind Cas 335. 3. Sanction.—For sanction. See AIR 1967 All 519 : 1967 Cr LJ 1463.

4. Sentence.—In this case the accused, a sergeant of police, was convicted under Section 330, IPC, and sentenced to three months' simple imprisonment for causing hurt to a prisoner in his custody for the purpose of extorting a confession. On revision, the sentence was enhanced to rigorous imprisonment for two years, for reason that the offence found to have been committed was of gravest character, and such as to shake judicial confidence in a most important portion of the evidence, which has commonly to be relied on by the Court of Justice, namely, the genuiness and trust-worthiness of early confession, for such evidence ought to be free from the slightest taint, and to tamper, with it is to polite justice at the found. UBR (1897-1901) Vol. I, 330. The law clearly draws a great distinction between simple hurt caused in the ordinary way and simple hurt caused for the purpose of extorting a confession or making an accused person recover any property. Conduct of causing hurt under Section 330, Penal Code, by responsible police-officer engaged in the investigation of a crime is one of the most serious offences known to the law. The result of third degree methods or of actual torture or beating must be that innocent persons might well be convicted, confession being forced from them which are false. In almost every case in which a confession is recorded in criminal Courts, it is alleged by the defence that the police have resorted to methods such as these. It is seldom, however, that an offence of this nature is, or can be proved. It clear is the duty of the Courts when a case of this kind is proved to pass sentence which have deterrent effect. 163 Ind Cas 145 : 37 Cr LJ 811 : 38 PLR 689 : 1936 Cr C 506 : AIR 1936 Lah 471. Where the statute says that for an offence the offender shall be imprisoned, it naturally means that he should be sent to jail. To impose a sentence of imprisonment till the rising of the Court is an evasion of the statutory provision and such an evasion would be justified only in every exceptional circumstances ; as for instance, when the offence is found to be very severely technical or where there are extenuating circumstances possessing unusual force. AIR 1955 Mad 424 : (1955) 2 MLJ 651 : 1955 Cr LJ 1080.

5. Framing of charges.—This brings us to the next question as to whether the trial Court as well as the High Court was justified in dropping the charge under Sec. 330 IPC since R.K. Jain's death took place while he was in custody. The important question is whether a prima facie case can be said to have been made out for a charge to be framed under Sec. 330 IPC. Since the cause of death has been shown to be asphyxia on account of detention of the deceased in unhygienic conditions despite his respiratory problems and the injuries to the ribs and mouth of the deceased could possibly have been caused by the attempts made by the doctor at the Hospital to resuscitate the deceased, who had been brought to the Hospital in comatose condition, with the body showing no signs of pulse, respiration or blood pressure, prima facie a case is made out for framing of charge under Sec. 330 IPC. The sheet showing the progress and treatment of the accused on arrival at the Hospital, also corroborates the same and it also mentions the fact that cardiac pulmonary resuscitation was immediately started and the patient was also put on mechanical ventilator as part of the attempts at resuscitation. Apart from indicating that the patient had died of asphyxia, the medical opinion does not give any reason for such asphyxia and even in reply to the queries made on behalf of the investigating authorities the reply received from Dr. Satpathi, as to the cause of death, was that it had occurred due to asphyxia, but as to how it had occurred was under investigation. Indu Jain v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2009 (SC) 976 : 2008 (15) SCC 341 : 2009 CrLJ 951 : 2008 (12) JT 524 : 2008 (14) SCR 1137 : 2008 (15) Scale 168 : 2009 (2) SLT 72 : 2009 (1) JCC 246.

1. Scope.—"The hurt or grievous hurt in these sections is supposed to be committed by way of torture, but for purposes differing from those mentioned in the two preceding sections. The illustrations show the operation of these provisions. The information sought for may be required for the advancement of justice—any more, it may be such information as cannot be withheld without offending against public justice—the property, the extoration of which is sought, may be property which the sufferer has borrowed from the offender, and which he illegally refuses to give back—the claim or demand may be a just claim—but the law will not tolerate the employment of such means as are here made punishable, even when used for honest ends".—Morgan and Macpherson. Here the word "demand" must be with respect to property-consequently the extortion of a promise to restore an abducted woman is not an offence under this section. 5 Lah LJ 374 : 73 Ind Cas 272 : 24 Cr LJ 576 : AIR 1924 Lah 167. Torture by police-officer for getting confession which causes death is an offence under this section. 40 Ind Cas 610.

Section 331, applies to cases where grievous hurt is caused by a person for the purpose of having a claim or demand which the other person owes to him, satisfied and not to cases where the claim or demand is owed by the culprit to the victim of the assault. 6 DLR (Sau) 30 : 5 AI Cr D 291 : AIR 1951 Sau 40 : 52 Cr LJ 704.

2. Charge.—I (name and designation of the Session Judge) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you on or about the..........(date) at...........(time) and at.........(place) voluntarily caused grievous hurt to....... (name of the injured) for the purpose of extorting from him (or....... a person interested in him) a confession (or an information) which might lead to the detection of an offence (or misconduct) (or for the purpose of constraining him or any other person interested in him to restore or to cause the restoration of any property or valuable security, to wit...... or to satisfy any claim or demand or give information which might lead to the restoration of any property or valuable security) and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 337, of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

"And I hereby direct that you be tried in the Court of the said charge".

Where there is no evidence that the police officer saw the person playing for money or other valuable thing, the police officer has no right to arrest the person or any other person under Section 13, Public Gambling Act. In trying to arrest the person the police officer is not discharging his public duty but is attempting to transgress the express provision of law. In such a case, Section 332 does not apply because the public servant is not engaged in the lawful discharge of his duty. 1961 (2) Cr LJ 504 ; See also 1959 MPLJ (Notes) 113.

1. Scope.—Under Section 333, a person who causes grievous hurt to a public servant can be convicted under three circumstances : (1) when grievous hurt is caused while the public servant is in the discharge of his duty as such public servant—in this case motive and object are irrelevant ; (2) when a public servant is prevented or deterred from discharging his duty as such public servant—in this case it is necessary that the object of accused should be to deter the public servant from discharging his duty but is not necessary to prove any motive ; (3) when the public servant is assaulted in consequence of anything done or attempted to be done by that public servant in the discharge of his duty—in this case it is necessary that the public servant should be discharging his duty at the time of assault. The object too is irrelevant. The only thing that has got to be seen is motive. AIR 1935 All 563 : 1996 Ind Cas 602 : 36 Cr LJ 964 : 1935 Cr C 590. Without recording on prima facie opinion he could not have framed a charge under Section 333, IPC. Hence the same is illegal. Arun v. State of Uttar Pradesh, 1994 UP Cr R 307 (All).

2. Sentence.—Causing grievous hurt to public servant is a serious offence and, therefore, reduction of sentence to custodial sentence of 6 months and 23 days that was already undergone on the ground that the accused belonged to low income group and was of 23 years of age was held not proper. State of MP v. Saleem, 2005 Cr LJ 3435 (SC) : 2005(5) SCC 554 : 23005(5) Scale 462 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1329 : 2005(4) Supreme 733.

Lesser sentence. It is bizarre to note that there is terrible irrationality in the sentence prescribed for committing offence u/S. 333, IPC. The said offence is in combination of offence - defined u/S. 320 and the offence of assault on a public servant punishable u/S. 353, IPC. The offence of grievous hurt is punishable u/S. 326, IPC with life imprisonment or with the imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to 10 years and shall also be liable to fine. Whereas a higher form of manifested offence u/S. 333 is made punishable only with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to 10 years and shall also be liable to fine. The law-makers shall take note of the anomaly in the sentencing policy and effect necessary correction by way of amendment. Although it is belated yet the lawmakers at least should now wake up to go for thorough rational and scientific review of sentencing policy for all the offences. The different types of injuries enumerated u/S. 320 do not ensue same amount of harm, pain and disability. Therefore proportionate to the nature of grievous injuries and its consequences, the punishment should be redefined. So also the punishment for an offence u/S. 333 should be redefined. Similarly in respect of other offences rational sentence to be re-prescribed in respect of other offences. State of Karnataka v. Mohammed Sadiq, 2006 CriLJ 3391 (Kar).

1. Scope.—The punishment is mitigated because the hurt is caused on grave and sudden provocation. Causing grievous hurt on grave and sudden provocation is punishable more severely than causing hurt not grievous on such provocation. The provisions on this subject are framed on the same principles on which the corresponding portion of the law of culpable homicide has been framed.—Morgan and Macpherson. This section applies to the case of a person who causes "hurt" on grave and sudden provocation to the person giving the provocation. 1 BHCR 17 ; see also 27 Ind Cas 559 : 16 Cr LJ 175 ; 94 Ind Cas 142 : 27 Cr LJ 574 ; 14 Cr LJ 442 ; LBR (1892-1900), 484. 3. Compoundable.—Only grievous hurt coming under this section and Section 338 is compoundable.

4. Evidence of eye-witnesses of accident—Credibility.—From eye-witness in the cross-examination, it is elicited that after hearing the sound, he turned and saw the accident. He has denied all other suggestions including the suggestion that he did not see the accident. In fact, when PW. 1 was cross-examined immediately after his examination-in-chief, nothing was suggested to him regarding the accident. However, he was recalled twice for the purpose of further cross-examination, at the request of the accused and during further cross-examination, certain suggestions relating to the accident were put to him, which, he denied. Nothing is elicited from eye-witness to indicate that he could not see the accident in question. The only material suggestion put to him in the cross-examination was since the bullock-cart was going ahead of the bus he could not see the bus, but he has denied this suggestion. This suggestion is incongruous, as the bullock-cart cannot cover the bus, as the bus is taller than the bullock-cart and the seat of the driver of the bus itself will be above the height of bullock-cart. In fact it is not suggested to eye-witness that he was not present near the tea stall and he did not see the accident. Thus, the presence of eye-witness near the tea stall is not seriously disputed in the cross-examination. There is no suggestion to eye-witness that he did not witness the actual collision between the two vehicles. In fact, from the tenor of cross-examination of eye-witness behalf of the accused indicates that the accused seriously did not dispute the fact that the collision took place on the extreme western side of the tar road while the bus driver was overtaking the bullock-cart which was going ahead of him.

The learned Magistrate has disbelieved the evidence of witness on the ground that in his cross-examination he has stated that after hearing the sound he turned round and came to the place of the accident; he disbelieved the evidence of eye-witness 2 on the ground that while drinking tea near the tea stall he could not concentrate as to what happens on the road and that he could not see the bus as a bullock-cart was proceeding ahead of the bus. He disbelieved the evidence of witness on the ground that he could not identify the driver of the bus though he saw the bus coming from a distance of 10 to 15 feet and he could not say the speed at which the bus was driven. I fail to understand as to how the evidence of these witnesses could be disbelieved for the above reasons. When it is shown that was the pillion rider of the motor cycle and when it was not disputed that the accused was the driver of the bus which was involved in the accident, the fact that the pillion rider did not identify the bus driver should not be a ground to reject his evidence. On the ground that pillion rider or could not say the speed with which the bus was driven, his evidence could not have been disbelieved, as, in a prosecution for the offence under Sections 279, 338 and 304-A, IPC, the question required to be considered is whether, they accused drove the vehicle in a rash and/or negligent manner so as to endanger human life. In my opinion, the reasons assigned by the learned Magistrate to reject the evidence of witnesses are not proper and are irrelevant reasons. The evidence of other witnesses clearly establish that they were present near the tea stall and they had seen the accident. The evidence of pillion rider who was the pillion rider is convincing and acceptable. For improper and irrelevant reasons, the learned Magistrate has disbelieved the evidence of PWs witnesses Therefore, the finding of the learned Magistrate in this behalf is perverse and illegal State of Karnataka vs. Kumayian, 2010 (3) CriLJ 3376 (A) (Karn).

5. Overtaking prohibited in certain cases.—The Central Government in exercise of its power under Section 118 of the Motor Vehicles Act has framed the regulations called "Rules of Road Regulations, 1989" and the same has come into force from 1.7.1989. Regulation No.6 deals with over, taking prohibited in certain cases. According to this regulation, the driver of a motor vehicle shall not pass a vehicle travelling in the same direction as himself if his passing is likely to cause danger to other traffic proceeding in any direction. In the light of this, the accused as driver of the KSRTC bus before overtaking the bullock-cart going ahead of him should have seen as to whether his act would cause danger or inconvenience to the vehicle/s coming from opposite or any other direction. Without taking such care or caution, the respondent - accused proceeded to overtake the bullock-cart and unmindful of the fact that a motorcycle was coming from the opposite direction on the correct side of the road, the accused proceeded further and dashed against the motor-cycle. In the light of the above^ there is no substance in the argument that the rider of the motor-cycle ought to have stopped the vehicle after seeking the bus and avoided the collision. As the rider was moving on the correct side of the road, and he was not overtaking any vehicle, there was no duty cast on him to stop the vehicle. Thus the respondent - accused did not take such care and caution which a prudent and reasonable man was required to take in the circumstance of the case and in spite of the fact that two wheeler was coming from opposite direction, by keeping to its correct side, the respondent instead of stopping the bus and avoid overtaking the bullock-cart going ahead of him as it was likely to cause danger to the two wheeler coming from the opposite direction, proceeded further wantonly and ultimately caused injury to both the rider and pillion rider of the two wheeler. Thus the facts and circumstances of this case clearly indicate that there is culpable rashness and neglignece on the part of the accused. He did not act as a prudent and reasonable driver would have done in such circumstance.

Ex.P. 4 is the sketch prepared by the Investigating Officer during the investigation and Ex. P. 2 is the spot mahazar. If the contents of Exs.P. 2 and P. 4 are read together, it is clear that the actual collision took place at a distance of about 5 feet from the western edge of the tar road. The correctness of the contents of Exs.P.2 and P.4 is not disputed by the accused. Thus from the contents of Exs. P.2 and P.4, it is clear that the accident occurred almost at the western edge of the road, which was wrong side to the direction in which the bus was proceeding. The evidence on record indicates that the right front portion of the bus dashed against the motorcycle and the motor-cycle came under the right front wheel of the bus and ultimately the bus after dragging the motor-cycle to a distance of about 20 feet stopped on the foot path situated on the western side. From this, it is manifestly clear that the bus driver drove the bus in a rash and negligent manner and the vehicle was not under his control. He was not in a position to bring the bus to halt and in the absence of any tyre mark on the road, it appears the accused also did not make any effort to apply break to stop the bus. No doubt there is no clear evidence as to whether the driver of the bus drove the vehicle at a great speed. However, the speed by itself is not the sole factor to decide the culpability of the driver of the vehicle, and it is the rash and negligent act which is very much necessary to be considered. The question as to whether a person drove the vehicle in a rash and negligent manner depends upon the facts and circumstances of each case. The totality of the circumstances has to be taken to find out as to whether there was rash and negligent act on the part of the accused person. In the case on hand by taking the entire evidence on record as a whole and the silence on the part of the accused, it is clearly established that the respondent - accused drove the bus in a rash and negligent mannen and that was responsible for the accident which resulted in the death of one person and injury to another. Accused who was the driver of the bus which involved in the accident had the special knowledge as to how the accident occurred and as to whether or not he was responsible for the accident. Unfortunately, during the examination under Section 313 CrPC, the accused has not come out with any explanation. He has merely denied all the incriminating circumstances put to him. State of Karnataka vs. Kumayian, 2010 (3) CriLJ 3376 (A) (Karn).

6. Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable with permission of the Court—Triable by a Magistrate of the first class.

1. Scope.—"Hitherto cases in which hurt has been voluntarily caused have been provided for. But hurt may be caused involuntarily yet culpably. There may have been no design to cause hurt, no expectation that hurt would be caused. Yet there may have been a want of due care not to cause hurt. For these cases of involuntary, yet culpable, infliction of bodily hurt, and also for the like cases of causing, risk of hurt, this and the following sections are provided".—Morgan and Macpherson. Many specific acts of rashness or negligence likely to endanger life or to cause hurt or injury, are made punishable by Chapter XIV. "This section punishes similar acts, of whatever kind, which cause risk to human life or to the personal safety of others, although no hurt may have been caused thereby".—Morgan and Macpherson. For the conviction of an offence under this section, the fact that human life or the personal safety of others was endangered must be proved. It is not merely a question of the words "rashly or negligently". 1 LBR 45. see also AIR 1937 Rang 273 : 170 Ind Cas 278 : 38 Cr LJ 897. For an act to amount to an offence under Section 336, it must be such as will endanger the life of a person or the personal safety of others. The provisions of the above sections are intended to meet cases where acts which are in themselves lawful are done so rashly or negligently as to endanger human life or the personal safety of others. In order to convict a person under the above section, the prosecution must prove rashness or negligence on the part of the accused, and also that by such rashness or negligence human life or the personal safety of others was actually endangered. 1. Scope.—This section applies only to acts done without any criminal intent, personal injury intentionally caused is neither a rash nor a negligent act. UBR (1904) 1st Qr. Penal Code, 6. Where an operation was needlessly made by a physician in a primitive way without taking the most ordinary precautions and where the instruments used were not disinfected and sterilized and where the result was that the operation was unsuccessful and the complainant's eye sight was permanently damaged to a certain extent, held, that the accused's physician was rightly convicted under this Section 39 Bom 523 : 17 Bom LR 384. Causing hurt by negligence in the use of gun would fall under this section. 28 All 464 : 3 ALJ 332 ; AIR 1948 Rang 220 : 49 Cr LJ

692. Where a wife administered to her husband a Dhatura poison to make him less quarrelsome which portion he received from her lover without enquiring what that poison is, she is guilty under this section. 19 Bom LR 54 : 38 Ind Cas 1003 : 18 Cr LJ 443 ; see also 39 Cal 855. The words "rash and negligently" are distinguishable and one is exclusive of the other. The same act cannot be rash as well as negligent. Shooting pigs on foot always carries with it a certain amount of risk and if by chance a shot hit one of the beaters or spectators, the matter must be treated as that of a pure accident. AIR 1931 Lah 54. The accused's liability is determined by what is the proximate cause, AIR 1925 Sind 233 : 18 SLR 199 : 27 Cr LJ 257 : 92 Ind Cas 433. Negligence must not be presumed merely because car hits something else. 1933 Cr C 1146 : AIR 1933 Rang 329 ; 1938 NLJ 44.

When the applicant's rash and negligent driving of his lorry has led to a collusion as a result of which hurt is caused to a person sitting in a jeep, the applicant can be properly convicted under Section 337, although the hurt was not caused knowingly. The word "Voluntarily" is not used in Section 337. AIR 1962 Guj 318 : 1962 (2) Cr LJ 760 ; 1995 Cr LJ 173 (2) ; Mere rashness or negligence is not enough to bring a case within the ambit of Section 337 or Section 338 of the Penal Code. Negligence or rashness proved by evidence must be such as should necessarily carry with it a criminal liability, whether such liability is present may depend on the degree of culpability having regard in each case to the particular time, place and circumstances. AIR 1962 Mad 362 : (1962) 2 Mad LJ 146 : 1962 (2) Cr LJ 386 : 1962 Mad LJ (Cr) 444. If it is merely a case of compensation or reparation for injury or damage caused to a person or property, it is clearly not punishable under either of the sections. Ibid.

Where the evidence showed that the act to be deliberate, the accused could be convicted under Section 352 rather than under Section 336 or Section 337, notwithstanding absence of charge. 1961 BLJR 277 ; 1971 Cr App. Rep. (SC) 244 (overspeeding of truck without sounding horn and collision with other truck). Criminality is gross culpable neglect or the failure to exercise that reasonable and proper care and precaution to guard against injury either to the public or to an individual in particular which having regard to all the circumstances out of which the charge arose, it was the imperative duty of the accused person to have adopted. AIR 1968 SC 1319 : 1968 Cr LJ 1501.

Death was the direct result of negligent act—Cyclist fell down as a result of opening of door of car by car driver in meantime lorry coming from behind running over Cyclist, car driver cannot be convicted of offence under Section 304-A but can be convicted for offence under Section 337. Lorry driver not liable. P.S. Jose v. State of Kerala. 1994 MLJ (Cri) 666 (Ker).

Where the evidence showed that the accused was driving vehicle at a very high speed in a very busy locality when the vehicle hit the motor-cycle driven by injured, it was held that the fact that the motorcycle was dragged established that the accused was driving jeep rashly and negligently. Ram Bahadur v. State, 2004 Cr LJ (NOC) 199 (MP) : 2003 Cri LR (SC&MP) MPJ 669 : 2003(2) MPHT 510 : 2003(3) MPLJ 45.

2. Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable with permission of the Court—Triable by Magistrate of the first class.

3. Charge.—The charge should run as follows :

"I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of accused) as follows :

That on or about the.........day..........at......you caused hurt to AB......by doing any act, to wit...... so rashly or negligently as to endanger human life or the personal safety of others and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 337 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

"And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge".

4. Acquittal.—Offence under accused while driving jeep hit an auto rickshaw—Driver of auto died and passengers suffered injuries—Negligence of jeep driver alleged—Auto came from a side and waited to cross the double road to keep on its side—Auto driver having while crossing ought to have taken care—Accused could not have anticipated auto to enter on main road—Hence acquittal order was upheld. State of Karnataka v. G. Radhakrishna, (1994) 3 Crimes 307 (Kant) (DB).

5. Local witnesses.—There is no rule of law nor of prudence that local witnesses should not be believed. If an accident occurs on a public road in a village and is witnessed by one or more witnesses, the eye witnesses are more likely to be the residents of the locality or the persons visiting that locality on business or some other purpose. Merely because the persons are residents of the village or the locality where the accident occurred, they cannot be called as interested witnesses. Moreso when on merits, nothing has been shown why the witnesses should have been disbelieved. Digamber Baburao Ingavale v. State of Maharashtra, 2008 CriLJ 2418 (Bom).

6. Sentence.—Mitigating circumstances.—Sentence it is said is the most public face of the criminal justice system. A sentence imposed by the Courts should have a deterrent effect more so when accident cases are on the rise. Courts are required to ensure that whenever an accused is found guilty, he does not escape the clutches of law very lightly. Sentencing discretion has to be exercised considering the fact of each case. In this case, the age of the accused as well as the fact that he promptly took the injured to the hospital are certainly mitigating circumstances but deterrence also remains one of the main object to be achieved while imposing the sentence. Considering the facts of the case, the accused sentenced to undergo SI for one day till rising of the Court each under Secs. 279 and 337, IPC to run concurrently. In addition the accused directed to pay compensation in the sum of Rs. 1000/- each to injured passengers and in default to undergo SI for three months. State v. Mohandas S. Gawade, 2007 CriLJ 850 (Bombay).

Whether conviction of accused under both Sec. 279 & Sec. 337 and imposition of separate sentence. Accused caused injuries to victim as he drove jeep so negligently that victim was dashed by it. Offences having been outcome of same act. Accused is liable for conviction only under Sec. 279, sentence under Sec. 279 being higher.

But the question remains whether a Court can convict a person under Section 279 and 337, IPC for commission of the same act of offence and accordingly pass sentence under both the Sections. According to this Court, as the offence having been outcome of the same act, the Court should punish the accused for one offence and at the same time, while passing the order of sentence, the Court should also consider that when the sentence prescribed under Section 279, IPC being higher it is a grave offence than the offence prescribed under Section 337, IPC, the accused could be punished under Section 279, IPC only.

As this Court noted earlier that even if the accused is convicted for offence under Sections 279 and 337, IPC, the offences having been outcome of the same act, he could be punished for one offence only and that is under Section 279, IPC as sentence under Section 279, IPC being higher. As aforementioned, that the quantum of sentence mposed by the trial Court for commission of offence under Section 279, IPC is the maximum, this Court is of the opinion that it would meet the ends of justice if the sentence is reduced to pay a fine of Rs. 1000/- within a period of two months from today, in default of payment of the fine money, the judgment of the trial Court affirmed by the appellate Court shall stand operative and the trial Court shall take necessary step to re-arrest the accused petitioner to undergo the original sentence. Hiran Mia vs The State of Tripura, 2010 Cri LJ 189 (Gauhati).

Sec. 338. Causing grievous hurt by act endangering life or personal safety of others.—Whoever causes grievous hurt to any person by doing any act so rashly or negligently as to endanger human life, or the personal safety of others, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

Where the accused was driving a motor lorry through a public road a little boy apparently, in crossing the road, came into contact with the lorry and his left foot was run over and fractured. It was found that the speed was moderate and the accused was driving on the correct side of the road. It did not appear that the accused when called upon to stop could have swerved the lorry and saved the boy. Held, that on those facts, the accused could not be convicted of an offence under Section 338, IPC. 32 CWN 612. Evidence of pillion rider. Collission between motor cycle and bus. In the cross-examination of Pillion rider there was no suggestion that he was not proceeding as pillion rider on the motor cycle. In fact, the evidence on record shows that he was injured in the accident and for several days he was treated as in-patient in the hospital. Therefore there is no difficulty in believing his evidence that he was proceeding as pillion rider on the motor cycle, as such he was the best witness to speak as to the manner in which the accident occurred. However. the learned Magistrate for strange and peculiar reasons has disbelieved the evidence of pillion rider. The learned Magistrate has disbelieved the evidence of witness on the ground that in his cross-examination he has stated that after hearing the sound he turned round and came to the place of the accident; he disbelieved the evidence of eye-witness 2 on the ground that while drinking tea near the tea stall he could not concentrate as to what happens on the road and that he could not see the bus as a bullock-cart was proceeding ahead of the bus. He disbelieved the evidence of pillion rider on the ground that he could not identify the driver of the bus though he saw the bus coming from a distance of 10 to 15 feet and he could not say the speed at which the bus was driven. I fail to understand as to how the evidence of these witnesses could be disbelieved for the above reasons. When it is shown that witness was the pillion rider of the motor cycle and when it was not disputed that the accused was the driver of the bus which was involved in the accident, the fact that the pillion rider did not identify the bus driver should not be a ground to reject his evidence. On the ground that pillion rider or could not say the speed with which the bus was driven, his evidence could not have been disbelieved, as, in a prosecution for the offence under Sections 279, 338 and 304-A, IPC, the question required to be considered is whether, the accused drove the vehicle in a rash and/or negligent manner so as to endanger human life. In my opinion, the reasons assigned by the learned Magistrate to reject the evidence of witnesses are not proper and are irrelevant reasons. The evidence of other witnesses clearly establish that they were present near the tea stall and they had seen the accident. The evidence of the pillion rider is convincing and acceptable. For improper and irrelevant reasons, the learned Magistrate has disbelieved the evidence of witnesses. Therefore, the finding of the learned Magistrate in this behalf is perverse and illegal. State of Karnataka vs. Kumayian, 2010 (3) CriLJ 3376 (Karn).

OF WRONGFUL RESTRAINT AND WRONGFUL CONFINEMENT

Scope.—"The provisions under this head are for the punishment of offences in which the offender, although he may have no design against human life, and no intention to inflict bodily hurt, either wholly deprives the injured person of his freedom, or in some-degree abridges his personal liberty. The personal restraint or confinement may, in some cases, be so slight as to deserve little more than a nominal punishment, but the arbitrary imprisonment of a person, which is often a quiet and convenient made of prosecuting him, is a most serious offence, deserving of exemplary punishment". Morgan and Macpherson.

Sec. 339. Wrongful restraint.—Whoever voluntarily obstru-cts any person so as to prevent that person from proceeding in any direction in which that person has a right to proceed, is said wrongfully to restrain that person.

Exception.—The obstruction of a private way overland or water which a person in good faith believes himself to have a lawful right to obstruct, is not an offence within the meaning of this section.

Illustration

A obstructs a path along which Z has a right to pass. A not believing in good faith that he has right to stop the path. Z is thereby prevented from passing. A wrongfully restrains Z.

2. Exception 2124
3. Liability of Director of Company 2124

1. Scope.—The expression "proceeding in any direction" within the meaning of this section must mean only proceeding in that direction and in any other direction much less in any reverse direction. 62 LW 864 : (1949) 2 MLJ 703. So an offence under this section is committed if a person is prevented from proceeding in the direction in which he wants to proceed. 3 DLR (Pat) 3 : 49 Cr LJ 418 : AIR 1948 Pat 299 ; AIR 1947 Mad 124 : 49 Cr LJ 459. This section relates to the voluntary obstruction by a person, and not obviously, at least, to obstruction, which are not voluntarily continued by the persons accused of the obstruction, throughout the time this obstruction lasts. 9 Bom LR 30 ; 36 M, 547. Restraining a horse on which a person is riding so as to prevent him from proceeding at the moment of wrongful restraint, amounts to wrongful restraint within meaning of Section 339 of the Penal Code. 100 Ind Cas 544 : 28 Cr LJ 320 : AIR 1927 Mad 506. Sections 339 and 441 do not cover cases where there is no ordinary or special reason for persons to proceed in the direction which is obstructed 29 Bom LR 494 : AIR 1927 Bom 369. No doubt, there is authority for the view that all that Section 339 protects is the obstruction of any person and that it does not cover a case where he himself is free to proceed in a direction in which he has a right to proceed but without any impediments that he may have with him. On the other hand, this view of personal obstruction must obviously have some limits. 27 Bom 118 : 27 Bom LR 1419. Obstructing a person going with bullocks to a place where he had a right to go is an offence under Section 339. AIR 1926 Bom LR 1419 : 27 Cr LJ 139 : 91 Ind Cas 811. Obstruction to a person having a right to go upwards is an offence. But projecting a shed over a wall not obstructing any person is not an offence. AIR 1927 Bom 369 : 29 Bom LR 494 : 28 Cr LJ 1023 : 106 Ind Cas 111. Voluntary obstruction of a vehicle or cart can not be held to amount to wrongful restraint under Section 339, IPC, where there is nothing to show that either the carter or any human being is prevented from proceeding anywhere. Section 339 only makes punishable wrongful restraint of a person. 155 Ind Cas 444 : 36 Cr LJ 740 : 30 CWN 143 : 60 Cr LJ 472 : 1935 Cr C 334 : AIR 1935 Cal 252. The word "proceed" in Sections 339 and 340 is not confined to the case of a person who can walk on his own legs or can move by physical means within his own power. It includes the case of proceeding by outside agency, which in the case of a child of tender age means the agency of his natural protector or guardian. Such a child can, therefore, be the subject of wrongful confinement, and offence under Section 365, IPC, is capable of being committed in respect of a child unable to walk. 62 Cal 629 : 39 CWN 396.

Wrongful restraint. Accused landlord merely stopped entry of vehicles where shop of complainant tenant was situated. Not allowing entry of vehicle within compound of building is totally different from obstructing a person from proceeding in a particular direction in which he has right to proceed. Held, no offence of wrongful restraint made out. Bharat Kishormal Shah & Ors vs State of Maharashtra & Anr., 2010 (4) CriLJ 4088 (Bom).

When officers gone for enquiry were detained in house of accused and there is no apprehension doubt of use of force in case they attempt to go out, no offence is made out. State of Gujarat v. Keshavlal Maganbhai Jogani and others, 1993 Cri LJ 248 (Guj).

Under this section, the obstruction should be so complete and successful as to prevent the person obstructed from proceeding in any direction in which he has a right to proceed. 15 Bom LR 103. Physical presence of the obstructor is not necessary as an ingredient of the offence of wrongful restraint. To constitute the offence, the obstructor must intend or know or have reason to believe it to be likely that the means adopted would cause the obstruction of the complainant. 9 MLT 103. There must be obstruction attributable directly to the person charged. 5 MLT 207. An obstruction made by a person who acts in good faith in the supposed exercise of any right is not an offence. And it is not apparent why the exception appended to the definition is confined to the case of obstructing a private way. The obstruction must be voluntary; that the act or the illegal omission which causes, it must be intended or known to be likely to obstruct. If there is this intention or knowledge, it is not necessary that there should be actual obstruction by physical means, by some act done, etc.—Morgan and Macpherson. This obstruction must be against a person. 15 Bom LR 103; but see 10 WR 35. The obstruction must be a physical obstruction. 1 Weir 339.

The mere ploughing up a path does not amount to an obstruction within the meaning of Section 339. 2 LW 1035. A person will not be justified in complaining of wrongful restraint against a pariah, who being lawfully in the public street on his own business, refused to move when directed to remove himself to a distance, knowing that, if he remained, the complainant would be debarred by fear of pollution, from passing near him. So where A caused certain pariah to stand in the public street in the vicinity of a temple, with the object of preventing B from conducting a procession from the temple through the street, held, the act of A did not amount to an obstruction within the meaning of Section 339, and it was B a distinction to go near the pariahs, and not presence of the pariah, which prevented him from going where he would and that A did not therefore commit the offence of wrongful restraint. 7 MLT 366 : 15 Ind Cas 851 : 11 Cr LJ 263. No offence of wrongful restraint is committed where the complaint is detained by the moral influence. Rat Un Cr C 89. A police officer refusing to let a person to go home until he had given bail would be guilty of wrongful restraint. 10 WR Cr 10. The act of preventing a person from proceeding in a certain direction, with his carts and extracting from him a sum of money on a false plea would constitute an offence of wrongful restraint. 10 WR Cr 35. The accused landlord, prevented a tenant of his who was holding over, from entering the room which the tenant had rented from the accused. Held, that the accused has committed an offence under Section 339, IPC. 43 Bom 531 : 21 Bom LR 261 : 20 Cr LJ 417. To justify a conviction for an offence under Section 341, IPC, it must be found that the person complaining has a right to proceed along the path and that he was obstructed from doing so. 2 LW 1035 : 16 Cr LJ 701 : 30 Ind Cas 749. Where a landlord by locking the door prevents a tenant from entering and making use of a bathroom and a privy which he may be entitled to use as a tenant. the landlord is technically guilty of the offence of wrongful restraint under this section. However a dispute of this kind can be tried more suitably in a Civil Court than in a Criminal Court. AIR 1950 Cal 157.

When the passage through the plot on which the complainant's son was proceeding with the complainant's cart full of manure had been sued for a long time as passage for carts to the complainant's fields, and the accused prevented the son of the complainant along with the cart to proceed towards the complainant's field by erecting a wall across the passage, the offence under Section 341 was clearly made out. 1953 Raj LW 199. Where the person, by, standing in front of a motor van, prevent the van from proceeding further, they wrongfully restrain the persons travelling by the van from proceeding further and punishable under Section 341. 1960 Ker LJ 856 : 1960 Ker LT 789 : 1961 Mad LJ (Cr) 67 : 1961 (1) Cr LJ 656. The fact that an act of an accused indirectly results in the complainant not proceeding in the direction in which he wanted to proceed originally would not make the accused guilty of causing obstruction to the person so as to prevent him from going in that direction. The gist of the offence defined in Section 339 is causing obstruction directly to a human being. 1955 Andhra WR 143 : 1955 Andh LT (Cr) 79. Unvoking of buffaloes tied to plough does not amount to wrongful restraint of persons. Ibid.

The offence of wrongful restraint is clear in its scope ; while wrongful confinement is circular in its character. Wrongful restraint is keeping a man out of a place when he wishes to be and has a right to be. The obstruction must be physical. A verbal prohibition or remonstrance does not amount to such obstruction. The offence is the abridgement of the liberty of a person against his will. AIR 1954 Mad 247 : (1952) 1 Mad LJ 164 : 1952 Mad W.N. 163 : 65 Mad LW 446 : 1952 Mad W.N. (Cr) 39 : 1954 Cr LJ 283. Where the passage through the plot on which the complainant's son was proceeding with the complainant's cart full of manure had been used for a long time as a passage for carts to the complainant's fields and the accused prevented the son of the complainant field by erecting a wall across the passage, the offence under Section 341 was clearly made out. 1953 Raj LW 199 : 1955 Cr LJ 1005.

The word "proceed" in Sections 339 and 340 is confined to the case of a person who can walk on his legs or can move by physical means with own power. Surely the word "proceeding" in Section 340 includes the case of proceeding by outside agency. To contemplate that when a person driving in a motor vehicle along a highway is stopped and prevented from moving forward would not be said to have been wrongfully restrained it, he is asked to get down from the vehicle and left free move on his foot would, take away a very large part of the content and meaning of the word "proceed" occurring in the definition in Section 339. That word cannot be given the limited meaning of proceed on foot only. 67 CWN 1029 : 1964 (2) Cr LJ 20 : AIR 1964 Cal 287.

In case of a joint owner of a house having a large share preventing co-owner having smaller share for using a door opening into sehar, the action does not constitute wrongful restraint. 1963 Kash. LJ 117 : 1964 (1) Cr LJ 40 : AIR 1964 J&K 4.

2. Exception.—Where the accused believed that they had a right to prevent the complainant from passing over their ground, and erected a wall between their permises in good faith, held, that their case was covered by the exception. 2 P.R. 1886 Cr ; see also 30 CWN 921 ; 24 Cal 885 ; 47 Cal 818 ; 15 Cr LJ 532 ; 12 Bom 377 ; 5 PWR 1914 ; 34 M 547 ; 16 Cr LJ 701 ; AIR 1950 Ass. 82 : AIR 1950 Cal 157.

3. Liability of Director of Company.—Indisputably, the dispute arose in regard to construction/tarring of the road by reason whereof, the first respondent might have faced difficulties in ingress and egress to and from his house for a short while. However, evidently, first respondent went to the Police Station and made a complaint thereabout. The work was stopped for some time, but allegedly the same was started again. Accused were called to Police Station. However, first respondent again went to Police Station to lodge a first information report after he allegedly found that the work had been continuing.

It is one thing to say that the Accused were its Directors, the same, in our opinion, would not be sufficient to fasten any criminal liability on them for commission of an offence under Sec. 341 of the IPC or otherwise.

Appellants herein were not at the site. They did not carry out any work. No overt act or physical obstruction on their part has been attributed. Only because legal proceedings were pending between the Company and the Bombay Municipal Corporation and/or with the first respondent herein, the same would not by itself mean that appellants were in any way concerned with commission of a criminal offence of causing obstructions to the first respondent and his parents. We have noticed hereinbefore that despite of said road being under construction, the first respondent went to the Police Station thrice. He, therefore, was not obstructed from going to Police Station. In fact, a firm action had been taken by the authorities. The workers were asked not to do any work on the road. We, therefore, fail to appreciate that how, in a situation of this nature, the Managing Director and the Directors of the Company as also the Architect can be said to have committed an offence under Sec. 341 of the IPC.

The learned Additional Chief Metropolitan Magistrate, therefore, in our opinion, was not correct in issuing summons without taking into consideration this aspect of the matter. The Managing Director and the Directors of the Company should not have been summoned only because some allegations were made against the Company.

For the reasons aforementioned, the impugned judgment and order of the High Court is set aside. The appeal is allowed. The order summoning the appellant is quashed. Keki Hormusji Gharda vs. Mehervan Rustom Irani, AIR 2009 SC 2594 : 2009 (6) SCC 475 : 2009 CrLJ 3733 : 2009 (3) Crimes 243 (SC) : 2009 (13) JT 540 : 2009 (9) SCR 183 : 2009 (8) Scale 289 : 2009 (5) Supreme 343 : 2009 (4) SLT 579 : 2009 (3) JCC 2086 : 2009 (150) CompCas 70.

1. What constitutes.—The use of physical force is not a necessary ingredient of the offence of wrongful confinement. 1. Scope.—Directors herein were not at the site. They did not carry out any work. No overt act or physical obstruction on their part has been attributed. Only because legal proceedings were pending between the Company and the Bombay Municipal Corporation and/or with the first respondent herein, the same would not by itself mean that appellants were in any way concerned with commission of a criminal offence of causing obstructions to the first respondent and his parents. He, therefore, was not obstructed from going to Police Station. In fact, a firm action had been taken by the authorities. The workers were asked not to do any work on the road. We, therefore, fail to appreciate that how, in a situation of this nature, the Managing Director and the Directors of the Company as also the Architect can be said to have committed an offence under Sec. 341 of the IPC.

Indian Penal Code, save and except some matters does not contemplate any vicarious liability on the part of a person. Commission of an offence by raising a legal fiction or by creating a vicarious liability in terms of the provisions of a statute must be expressly stated. The Managing Director or the Directors of the Company, thus, cannot be said to have committed an offence only because they are holders of offices.

The learned Additional Chief Metropolitan Magistrate, therefore, in our opinion, was not correct in issuing summons without taking into consideration this aspect of the matter. The Managing Director and the Directors of the Company should not have been summoned only because some allegations were made against the Company. In Pepsi Foods Ltd. and Anr. vs. Special Judicial Magistrate and Ors. (1998) 5 SCC 749 : 1997 AIR SCW 4084, this Court held as under :

> "28. Summoning of an accused in a criminal case is a serious matter. Criminal law cannot be set into motion as a matter of course. It is not that the complainant has to bring only two witnesses to support his allegations in the complaint to have the criminal law set into motion. The order of the Magistrate summoning the accused must reflect that he has applied his mind to the facts of the case and the law applicable thereto. He has to examine the nature of allegations made in the complaint and the evidence both oral and documentary in support thereof and would that be sufficient for the complainant to succeed in bringing charge home to the accused. It is not that the Magistrate is a silent spectator at the time of recording of preliminary evidence before summoning of the accused. The Magistrate has to carefully scrutinize the evidence brought on record and may even himself put questions to the complainant and his witnesses to elicit answers to find out the truthfulness of the allegations or otherwise and then examine if any offence is prima facie committed by all or any of the accused." Keki Hormusji Gharda and Ors. v. Mehervan Rustom Irani and Anr., AIR 2009 SC 2594 : 2009 (9) SCR 183 (SC) : 2009 (6) SCC 475 : 2009 (13) JT 540 (SC) : 2009 (8) Scale 289 (SC) : 2009 (5) Supreme 343 (SC) : 2009 (4) SLT 579 (SC) : 2009 CrLJ 3733 (SC) : 2009 (3) Crimes 243 (SC) : 2009 (3) JCC 2086 (SC) : 2009 (150) Comp Cas 70.

The submission of the learned senior Counsel for the appellants that since deceased received only one and two fatal injuries respectively, the common object at the most could be to cause injuries and not fatal injuries hardly merits acceptance. The deadly weapons with which appellants were armed, the number of injuries inflicted on deceased, and the murderous assault lead to a certain inference that the appellants shared common object of committing murder with other accused. That they were more than five and formed unlawful assembly is beyond doubt. deceased died on the spot. Witness fortunately survived after surgery and hospitalization for more than month. Anna Reddy Sambasiva Reddy vs. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 2661 : 2009 (3) Crimes 17 (SC) : 2009 (12) SCC 546 (SC) : 2009 (5) JT 617 : 2009 (6) Scale 223 : 2009 (6) SCR 755 : 2009 (4) Supreme 506.

2. Essentials of an offence.—To justify a conviction for an offence under this section, it must be found that the person complaining has a right to proceed along the path and that lie was obstructed from doing so. 2 LW 1035 : 3 DLR (Cal) 42 : 60 Cr LJ 211 : AIR 1949 Cal 112. The slightest unlawful obstruction to the liberty of the subject to go when and where he likes to go provided, he does so in lawful manner, cannot be justified, and is punishable as an offence under this section. 1 Weir 339. There can be wrongful restraint only when a person voluntarily obstructs another. 3 DLR (Cal) 42 : 83 Cr LJ 99 : 49 Cr LJ 753 : AIR 1949 Cal 85 ; 2 DLR 712 : 52 CWN 782. To constitute wrongful restraint a person must voluntarily obstruct any person so as to prevent that person from proceeding in any direction in which the person has a right to proceed. 53 CWN 822 ; AIR 1941 Pat 384 : 42 Cr LJ 526 ; 48 LW 379 : 1938 MWN 1010. Where accused was originally challaned under Section 341 but subsequently the charge was framed under Section 506 against them, the procedure was not in any way irregular in view of the fact that they were not taken unawares inasmuch as they and their counsel had heard all the evidence. AIR 1931 Oudh 73 : 32 Cr LJ 330. Any person travelling in a vehicle is entitled to travel in that vehicle, and should not be compelled to get down from that vehicle and walk or proceed in any other manner the obstructor wants. That is elementary common sense. Where, therefore, a driver of a bus makes his bus stand across a road in such a manner as to prevent another bus coming from behind to proceed further, he is guilty of an offence under this section, of wrongfully restraining the driver and the passangers of the other bus. AIR 1950 Mad 233 ; see also AIR 1947 Mad 124 : 48 Cr LJ 459 : 1946 MWN Cr 118 ; but see AIR 1942 Mad 539 : 44 Cr LJ 45 (which relates to wrongful confinement). 'The offence of wrongful restraint, which consists in keeping a man out of place where he wishes to be and has right to be, when it does not amount to wrongful confinement and when it is not accompanied with violence or with the causing of bodily hurt, is seldom a serious offence. It is, therefore, visited with light punishment." Morgan and Macpherson. Unreasonable delay on the part of a plague passport officer to issue a passport, to a person who cannot lawfully proceed to another place, though highly reprehensible, cannot amount to wrongful restraint or imprisonment of such person, in the absence of anything to show that the officer objected to such person going on without passport, or that he either physically or by the show or suggestion of force prevented such person from proceeding. 2 MLT 159 : 5 Cr LJ 357. In a wrongful restraint there need not be any stoppage of the movement ; it may be directed into a channel different from the direction in which the victim intends to move. Physical presence of the accused is not necessary ; nor is an actual assault necessary and fear of immediate harm restraining a man out of a place where he wishes to be and has a right to be is sufficient to constitute an offence under this section. 3. Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate and may be tried summarily.

4. Charge.—The charge, if necessary, should run thus :

"I (name and office of the Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused), as follows :—

That on or about the.........day of.......at........you wrongfully restrai-ned one....... (name the person restrained) and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 341 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

5. Separate conviction.—Where offence under Section 341 is involved in offence under Section 143, separate fine under Section 341 is illegal. AIR 1941 Mad 445 : (1941) 1 MLJ 362.

Specific charges—Non-mentioning of specific Section 149 in charge—Effect of. A careful reading of Charge No. 4 and Charge No. 5 leaves no manner of doubt, since the transaction mentioned in Charge No. 1 has been made integral part thereof, that all the necessary ingredients of Sec. 149 IPC are implicit therein except mentioning of Sec. 149 IPC specifically. The particulars stated in Charge Nos. 4 and 5 are reasonably sufficient to give the appellants adequate notice of Sec. 149 IPC although not specifically mentioned. Is non-mentioning of Sec. 149 in Charge No. 4 and Charge No. 5 a fundamental defect of an incurable illegality that may warrant setting aside the conviction and sentence of the appellants? We do not think so. Non-framing of a charge under Sec. 149 IPC, on the face of the charges framed against the appellants would not vitiate their conviction; more so when the accused have failed to show any prejudice in this regard. The present case is a case where there is mere omission to mention Sec. 149 in Charge Nos. 4 and 5 which at the highest may be considered as an irregularity and since the appellants have failed to show any prejudice, their conviction and sentence is not at all affected. Tenor of cross-examination of PW-1 and PW-3 by the defence also rules out any prejudice to them. The offence, in the established facts and circumstances of the case, under Sec. 302 read with Sec. 149 IPC is implicit and applying the dictum laid down by the Constitution Bench of this Court in Willie (William) Slaney, the omission to mention Sec. 149 IPC specifically in the Charge Nos. 4 and 5 cannot affect their conviction. In no way their conviction is rendered bad as the appellants had assembled together armed with axes and eathapululu (sickle) and were parties to the assault on D-1 and D-2 and others. In a situation such as this it was not obligatory upon the prosecution to prove which specific overt act was done by which of the accused. Anna Reddy Sambasiva Reddy vs. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 2661 : 2009 (3) Crimes 17 (SC) : 2009 (12) SCC 546 : 2009 (5) JT 617 (SC) : 2009 (6) SCR 755 : 2009 (6) Scale 223 : 2009 (4) Supreme 506.

6. Punishment.—The Magistrate had no right to order the maintenance of the passage and the demolition of the wall. 1953 Raj LW 199 : 1954 Cr LJ 1005.

7. Sentence.—Treatment to Advocate—Commissioner by Police Personnel—Convicted by lower court under the Sections 341 and 355, IPC. The accused being the personnel supposed to protect law and order should not have behaved in such a manner. The sentence imposed was too meagre for offence committed by him. In cases of these nature where police personnel kept in charge of life and liberty of citizen exceed their limits the imprisonment should be preferred to fine. M. Bhaskar v. Convenor, Eamcet 1993, Andhra University College of Engineering (1994) 1 ALT (NRC) 33 ; (1994) 1 ALT (Cr) 191.

8. Proof of offence.—When victim is a girl of 13 years and her evidence is cogest and cnvincing but since no seminal Stains found on her body clothes, offence of sake is not stablished except outraging modesty of victim and thus accused to be convicted only under Sections 341 and 354, IPC, IPC. State v. P. Balan, 1996 Cri LJ 3705 (Mad).

Independent eye-witness—Reliability. The most important witness in this case is PW. 3 Vanaja, whose house is situated very near to the place of occurrence. According to her she came out of the house and when she was proceeding towards Southern side for taking water, she saw that the accused came and attacked Johnson and while PW. 1 intervened, he was also attacked. Admittedly, she is not related to the deceased family.

There is nothing to indicate that PW. 3 was having any animosity to speak falsehood against the accused. The reading of her deposition would make it clear that she is very natural and reliable witness. It is clear that the occurrence had taken place just opposite to her house and from that place, the blood stained earth was seized under Exh. P9 mahazar attested by her husband PW. 6 Gopalakrishnan on the very same day. She also stated that she had finished her S.S.L.C. and after her marriage, she was living with her husband Gopalakrishnan near the place of occurrence. On coming to know that the victim who was taken to hospital died, she went to the hospital to see the dead body. She gave the reason as to why she went to hospital immediately by stating that : "The person who does not know any thing was killed so I went to Kuhithurai Hospital to see Johnson."

In the light of the above position, it is to be emphatically stated that the evidence of Vanaja, who is an educated, independent, not related and whose house is situated opposite to the place of occurrence would inspire confidence that what all she stated before the Court is cogent and credible. Vijaykumar vs. State, 2009 (12) SCC 629 : 2009 CrLJ 3056 : 2009 (7) JT 36 : 2009 (6) SCR 919 : 2009 (6) Scale 364 : 2009 (8) SLT 27.

Mere absence of injury on body of victim does not mean that no rape was committed. Shanmugham v. State, 1996 Cri LJ 3808 (Mad).

9. Liability of Director of Company.—Indisputably, the dispute arose in regard to construction/tarring of the road by reason whereof, the first respondent might have faced difficulties in ingress and egress to and from his house for a short while. However, evidently, first respondent went to the Police Station and made a complaint thereabout. The work was stopped for some time, but allegedly the same was started again. Accused were called to Police Station. However, first respondent again went to Police Station to lodge a first information report after he allegedly found that the work had been continuing.

It is one thing to say that the Accused were its Directors, the same, in our opinion, would not be sufficient to fasten any criminal liability on them for commission of an offence under Sec. 341 of the IPC or otherwise.

Appellants herein were not at the site. They did not carry out any work. No overt act or physical obstruction on their part has been attributed. Only because legal proceedings were pending between the Company and the Bombay Municipal Corporation and/or with the first respondent herein, the same would not by itself mean that appellants were in any way concerned with commission of a criminal offence of causing obstructions to the first respondent and his parents. We have noticed hereinbefore that despite of said road being under construction, the first respondent went to the Police Station thrice. He, therefore, was not obstructed from going to Police Station. In fact, a firm action had been taken by the authorities. The workers were asked not to do any work on the road. We, therefore, fail to appreciate that how, in a situation of this nature, the Managing Director and the Directors of the Company as also the Architect can be said to have committed an offence under Sec. 341 of the IPC.

The learned Additional Chief Metropolitan Magistrate, therefore, in our opinion, was not correct in issuing summons without taking into consideration this aspect of the matter. The Managing Director and the Directors of the Company should not have been summoned only because some allegations were made against the Company.

For the reasons aforementioned, the impugned judgment and order of the High Court is set aside. The appeal is allowed. The order summoning the appellant is quashed. Keki Hormusji Gharda vs. Mehervan Rustom Irani, AIR 2009 SC 2594 : 2009 (6) SCC 475 : 2009 CrLJ 3733 : 2009 (3) Crimes 243 (SC) : 2009 (13) JT 540 : 2009 (9) SCR 183 : 2009 (8) Scale 289 : 2009 (5) Supreme 343 : 2009 (4) SLT 579 : 2009 (3) JCC 2086 : 2009 (150) CompCas 70.

10. FIR.—Sufficient explanation for Delay.—Inspector of Police Station received a telephonic message from the Nursing Home. He arrived at the Nursing Home at about 7 O'Clock, recorded the statement of Viswanathan, brother-in-law of the deceased (PW-1). The First Information Report was registered by him after coming back to the Police Station at about 8.30 p.m. He visited the place of occurrence on the next day. By that time, as noticed hereinbefore, the deceased breathed his last.

Some delay might have been caused in lodging of the First Information Report, but, the same has sufficiently been explained. It is true that PW-7 in his evidence stated that he had sent the information to the Police Station but he also admitted that the same was not recorded in the accident register. PW 7 was examined on 22.04.2003, i.e., after a period of more than six years from the date of the incident. At the time of his deposition, he was working in the ESI Hospital, Salem as Medical Officer. The Inspector of Police PW-13 in his evidence categorically stated that he received the telephonic message at about 6 O'Clock in the evening from the Nursing Home and he reached there at about 7 O'Clock. We do not find any reason to disbelieve the said evidence brought on record by the prosecution.

Witness, Sekaran, son of the deceased in his deposition, who has not been cross-examined, categorically stated that he had been working in a company known as Power Held norporation of India at K.R. Thoppur. He was informed about the incident by his material aunt Chandra (PW-2) when she came in a car and took him to the Shanmugha Nursing Home where the deceased was admitted in its Intensive Care Unit. The fact that he had to be brought to the Nursing Home by PWs is again a pointer to the fact that they were busy in not only making arrangements for proper medical treatment of the deceased but also intimating the son of the deceased (PW-4) and bringing him to the hospital at the earliest possible opportunity. We, therefore, are of the opinion that the delay in lodging the First Information Report has sufficiently been explained. Padmanaban vs. State, AIR 2010 (SC) 47 : 2009 (10) JT 172 : 2009 (12) SCR 252 : 2009 (10) Scale 526 : 2009 (6) SLT 751 : 2009 (5) Supreme 763.

Delay in lodging--When not fatal. No doubt lodging of a First Informing Report at the earliest possible opportunity is desirable. But, the Courts cannot also ignore the ground realities that the relatives of the deceased would give priority to the treatment of a severely injured person. All attempts would first be made to save his life. The action on the part of the prosecution witnesses, in our considered opinion, in giving priority to the treatment to the injured was wholly justifiable. Padmanaban vs. State. AIR 2010 (SC) 47 : 2009 (10) JT 172 : 2009 (12) SCR 252 : 2009 (10) Scale 526 : 2009 (6) SLT 751 : 2009 (5) Supreme 763.

1. Scope.—"This section punishes the offence defined by Section 340. Wrongful confinement, which is a form of wrongful restraint, is the keeping a man within limits out of which he wishes to go, and has a rights to go. It may, like wrongful restraint, be slight offence. But when attended by aggravating circumstances it may be one of the most serious that can be committed."—Morgan and Macpherson.

Agony of trial since four years—Released on probation claimed—Sentence insufficient undergone—Sentence reduced to four months. Surender v. State of Haryana, (1994) 3 CC Cases 352 (P & H).

Sufficient material for Conviction. Thus, it is quite clear that eye-witnesses to the occurrence have fully proved the incident and corroborated the statements mentioned in the FIR and there is no inconsistency in the statements of all the three witnesses. There is no material contradiction in the cross examination and the entire facts of the FIR which has been fully supported by the statements of all the three aforesaid witnesses.

From the perusal of the post mortem report and the statement of the doctor it is clearly evident that the injuries on the deceased persons were found to be on the chest which is a vital part of the body and the death was natural as the bullet had hit them. According to the statement of PW-7, the cause of death was the gun shot ante-mortem injury on the vital part of the body and from excessive bleeding and shock. According to the statement of PW-7 at the time of firing of the gun its barrel must have been at a distance of 3 to 6 feet from the dead bodies. As a result of which the deceased Brijesh and Rajesh had suffered injuries from the gun shots fired within 6 feet from the place where they were hit by the bullet and the same caused their instant death.

The defence towards the end of the trial tried to put up a version that the two deceased came there to the petrol pump to commit robbery by hurling bomb and in the process also caused damage to the petrol pump. Unfortunately, however, no proof in support of the said contention could be produced by the defence. There is nothing on record which can even remotely suggest that the act of the accused persons was in exercise of their right of private defence. The investigation, at the place of occurrence, soon after the incident did not reveal any remains of bomb or recovery of any firearm from the hands of the deceased or any damage to the petrol-pump. No injury was also found on the bodies of the accused. It is pertinent to mention here that no suggestion regarding recovery of any bomb materials or detection of any signs of damage to the petrol pump by the deceased persons and PW-2, was put by the defence to either PW-10 or PW-11, both of whom were present at the place of occurrence at the time when the showroom of the accused persons was searched and weapons, cartridges and other articles were seized. Thus, the submission of the defence with regard to the alleged exercise of right of private defence by the accused persons being without any basis, the same also fails.

Another submission which has been advanced by the learned Counsel for the accused is that the story of Accused No. 1 and Accused No. 2 locking the PW-2 in the showroom is completely unbelievable. As discussed hereinbefore, on altercation having taken place for petrol, PW-2 was assaulted by the accused persons and forcibly taken to the showroom and locked in there immediately thereafter. On being asked by PW-1 not to do the same, the gun shot was fired at him but he retreated to safety. Thereafter, when both deceased, Rajesh and Brijesh, the two sons of PW-1 reached the spot, two consecutive shots were fired at them which resulted in their death and thereafter again gun shot was fired towards PW-1. This fact is quite clear not only from the evidence of PW-1 but has also been fully corroborated by the evidence of PW-2 and PW-3. It is quite evident from the record that a big crowd gathered at the spot. Under the said circumstances, it was quite natural for the accused persons to keep PW-2 in their custody. Making PW-2 captive, a fact to which PW-11, the SSI who was investigating the case was also a witness, could well protect the accused persons from the crowd which had come to the place of occurrence after hearing the gun shots. Making PW-2 captive could also protect the petrol tank from being damaged by the pressure of the agitated crowd. The injuries were found on the body of PW-2 by the doctor who had examined him soon after the incident at 1.50 pm on the same day.

In view of the aforesaid discussion, facts and circumstances of the case, we are of the considered view that the High Court clearly erred in reversing the order of conviction recorded by the trial Court. Accordingly. we set aside the judgment and order of the High Court and restore the judgment and decision of the trial Court. Raj Narain Singh vs. State of Uttar Pradesh, 2009 (10) SCC 362 : 2009 (12) JT 342 : 2009 (12) Scale 627 : 2009 (14) SCR 755 : 2009 (8) SLT 160.

6. Private defence.—Accused entered office room of deceased, threw chilly powder into his eyes, picked up an iron hammer as well as a brick lying there and assaulted deceased in presence of complainant, a worker engaged by deceased. Trial Court finding evidence cogent, credible, recorded conviction of appellant. The question in such a case would be a question of assessing the true effect of the prosecution evidence, and not a question of the accused discharging any burden. Where the right of private defence is pleaded, the defence must be a reasonable and probable version satisfying the Court that the harm caused by the accused was necessary for either warding off the attack or for forestalling the further reasonable apprehension from the side of the accused. The burden of establishing the plea of self-defence is on the accused and the burden stands discharged by showing preponderance of probabilities in favour of that plea on the basis of the material on record.

When the factual scenario is examined in the background of the principles set out above, the inevitable conclusion is that the appeal is without merit, deserves dismissal which we direct. Arun vs. State of Maharashtra, 2009 CrLJ 2065 : 2009(2) Crimes 6(SC) : 2009(4) SCC 615 : 2009(3) Scale 803 : 2009(4) JT 78 : 2009(3) SLT 220.

7. Evidence and Proof.—Sufficient evidence for murder and wrongful confinement. In the teeth of the evidence of eyewitnesses PWs. 1 and 11, corroborated by the testimony of PW-9 and PW-10 discussed above, it is established beyond any shadow of doubt that in fact the occurrence had taken place at the given time in the house of A-1 where the dead body of Dinesh was found lying by the Police which was sent to the Doctor for post mortem examination. PW-1 immediately lodged complaint (Exh. PJ) of the incident to Om Prakash, ASI (PW-14) who met him on the way leading to the Police Station. The names of all the accused were specifically mentioned in the said complaint. The accused persons were not found present in the village when the Investigating Officer visited the place of occurrence. A-1, A-2, A-3 and A-4 were produced before Rohtas Singh S.I. (PW-12) by Zile Singh, who is the resident of the same village. Recovery of two pieces of "danda" (Exhs. P-18 and P-19) and "rope" (Exh. PQ/3) taken into possession by PW-12 pursuant to the disclosure statement (Exh. PQ) made by A-1 during the course of interrogation, has been proved which were used by the appellants in the commission of the offence. The ocular version of PW-1 and PW-11, the eyewitnesses, has been further corroborated by Dr. Paramjit, who found as many as 12 injuries on the dead body of Dinesh.

In the opinion of Dr. Paramjit, the cause of death of Dinesh was shock and haemorrhage due to multiple injuries to the vital organs which were ante-mortem in nature and sufficient to cause death in ordinary course of nature.

The trial Court as well as the High Court have rightly held that there was a motive for the accused to commit murder of Dinesh because as per the prosecution evidence, A-1 was nursing a grudge against the deceased because he allegedly sexually assaulted his daughter, for which offence Dinesh was acquitted by the trial Court on 18.03.2002 whereas the prosecutrix was later on married to DW-3 on 26.05.2002. Dinesh was murdered on the intervening night of 29/30.05.2002 in the house of A-1 in village Sundana. The evidence of PWs. 1 and 11 has been found to be satisfactory, reliable, consistent and creditable by the trial Court as well as by the High Court. Both the witnesses have been cross-examined at length by the defence, but nothing tangible has been extracted from their evidence to create any shadow of doubt that they are not truthful witnesses. They have given reliable and consistent version of the crime and their evidence inspires confidence. On our examination of the judgment given by the trial Court and confirmed by the High Court, we find that both the Courts have properly and rightly appreciated and re-appreciated the entire evidence on record and there is no infirmity or perversity in the findings recorded by the Courts below to interfere with the well-reasoned judgments. Rajender Singh vs. State of Haryana. OF CRIMINAL FORCE AND ASSAULT

Of Criminal Force and Assault.—"A large proportion of acts designated as assaults, will also be offences falling under the heads of hurt and restraint. Thus a stab with a knife is an offence falling under the head of hurt, and it is also an assault. The seizing a man by the collar, and thus preventing him from proceeding on his way, is unlawful restraint, and is also an assault. But there will be many assaults which it is absolutely necessary to punish, yet which cause neither bodily hurt nor unlawful restraint. A man who impertinently puts his arm round a lady's waist, who aims a severe stroke at a person with a horse whip, who maliciously throws a stone at a person, squirts dirty water over him, or sets a dog at him, may cause no hurt and no restraint, yet it is evident that such acts ought to be prevented."—Morgan and Macpherson.

Sec. 349. Force.—A person is said to use force to another if he causes motion, change of motion, or cessation of motion to that other, or if he causes to any substance such motion, or change of motion, or cessation of motion as brings that substance into contact with any part of that other's body, or with anything which that other is wearing or carrying, or with anything so situated that such contact effects that other's sense of feeling ;

Provided that the person causing the motion, or change of motion or cessation of motion, causes that motion, change of motion or cessation of motion in one of the three ways hereinafter described:

First.—By his own bodily power.

Secondly.—By disposing any substance in such a manner that the motion or change or cessation of motion takes place without any further act on his part, or on the part of any other person.

Thirdly.—By inducing any animal to move, to change its motion, or to cease to move.

Sec. 350. Criminal force.—Whoever intentionally uses force to any person, without that person's consent, in order to the committing of any offence, or intending by the use of such force to cause, or knowing it to be likely that by the use of such force he will cause injury, fear or annoyance to the person to whom the force is used, is said to use criminal force to that other.

Illustration

(a) Z is sitting in a moored boat on a river. A unfastens the mornings, and thus intentionally causes the boat to drift down the stream. Here A intentionally causes motion to Z, and does this by disposing substance in such a manner that the motion is produced without any other action on any person's part. A has therefore intentionally used force to Z ; and of he has done so without Z's consent, in order to the committing of any offence, or intending or knowing it to be likely that this use of force will cause Injury, fear or annoyance to Z. A has used Criminal force to Z.

(b) Z is riding in a chariot. A lashes Z's horses, and thereby causes them to quick-their pace. Here A has caused change of motion to Z by inducing the animals to change their motion. A has, therefore, used force to Z ; and if A has done this without Z's consent, intending or knowing it to be likely that he may thereby injure, frighten, or annoy Z, A has used criminal force to Z.

(c) Z is riding in a palanquin. A, intending to rob Z, seizes the pole, and stops the palanquin. Here, A has caused cessation of motion to Z ; and he has done this by his own bodily power. A has therefore, used force to ; and as A has acted thus intentionally, without *Z*s consent, in order to the commission of an offence. A has used criminal force to Z.

(d) A intentionally pushes against Z in the street. Here A has by his own bodily power moved his own person so as to bring it into contact with Z. He has therefore intentionally used force to Z ; and if has done so without *Z*s consent, intending or knowing it to be likely that he may thereby injure, frighten or annoy Z, he has used criminal force to Z.

(e) A throws a stone intending or knowing it to be likely that stone will thus bring into contract with Z, or with *Z*s clothes, or with something carried by Z or that it will strike water, and dash up the water against *Z*s clothes or something carried by Z. Here, if the throwing of the stone produce the effect of causing any substance to come into contact with Z, or *Z*s clothes, A has used force to Z ; and if he did so without *Z*s consent. Intending hereby to injure, frighten or annoy Z, he has used criminal force to Z.

(f) A intentionally pulls up a woman's well. Here A intentionally uses force to her and if he does so without her consent intending or knowing it to be likely that he may thereby injure, frighten or annoy her, has used criminal force to her.

(g) Z is bathing. A pours into the bath water which he knows to be boiling. Here A intentionally by his own bodily power causes such motion in the boiling water as brings that water into contact with Z, or with other water so situated that such contact must affect *Z*s sense of feeling. A has therefore intentionally used force to Z ; and if he has done this without *Z*s consent intending or knowing it to be likely that he may thereby cause injury, fear or annoyance to Z, A has used criminal force.

(h) A incites a dog to spring upon Z, without *Z*s consent. Here, if A intends to injury, fear or annoyance to Z, he uses criminal force to Z.

Synopsis

1. Intentionally 2146
2. Without his Consent 2146
3. Criminal Force 2147
4. Scope 2147

1. Intentionally.—The word "intentionally" shows that all involuntary, accidental, or merely negligent acts are excluded. (Vide Mayne's Criminal Law, Section 415).

2. Without his consent.—There is a difference between doing an act without the consent of a person, and against his will. The latter implies mental opposition to an act which is anticipated before it takes place. Where it is an element of an offence that the act should have been done without the consent of the person affected by it, some evidence must be offered that the act was done to him against his will or without his consent. Reg. v. Fietcher, LRICC 89 cites in Mayne's Criminal Law, Section 415.

3. Criminal force.—"Criminal force" in Section 350 contemplates criminal force used against a person and not against any matter of substance. 22 Cr LJ 329 : 2 Pat LT 120 : 61 Ind Cas 57 ; AIR 1940 Pesh 51 : 42 Cr LJ 272 (1). Breaking open a lock is not use of criminal force. AIR 1927 Lah 830 : 26 PLR 500 : 28 Cr LJ 676. The offence of being members of an unlawful assembly is one in the composition of which the use of criminal force does not enter, though the show of criminal force may exist. 25 Cal 434 : 2 CWN 305. To support an order under Section 522, for restoration of possession of immovable property there must be a finding that the dispossession was by the criminal force as defined in Section 350 of the Penal Code. 27 Cal 174 : 4 CWN 307.

Force refers to a person used either directly or indirectly causing injury, fear or annoyance, to that person. That excludes force or violence to property. AIR 1968 Mad 310 (1928) 1 MLJ 266 ; 1982 Cr LJ (NOC) 11 : 1981 Ker LT 475. Force if used against the consent of the person on whom the same is used the use of force will be criminal force. AIR 1968 Raj 2419 : 1968 Cr LJ 1304. No criminal force in refusing the accused to give his specimen of hair for purposes of identification. 1971 Cr LJ 1905.

4. Scope.—"This definition of criminal force appears to include what is termed by the English Law 'battery,' that is, any event the least hurt or violence inflicted on the person of another. If there is the use of force as defined in the proceeding section, and this is intentional on his part who uses it, and is also without the consent of the person against whom it is used such use of force becomes criminal when it has for its object the commission of an offence (see Section 40), or the causing of injury (see Section 44), or the causing of fear or annoyance. It will be observed that the definition of the offence does not included anything that the door does by means of another person".—Morgan and. Macpherson. No clear distinction between 'force' defined in Section 349 and criminal force in Section 350. 1951 Ker LT 475 : 1982 Cr LJ NOC 11.

Sec. 351. Assault.—Whoever makes any gesture, or any preparation intending or knowing it to be likely that such gesture or preparation will cause any person present to apprehend that he who makes that gesture or preparation on is about to use criminal force to that person, is said to commit an assault.

Explanation.—Mere words do not amount to an assault. But the words which a person uses may give to his gestures or preparation such a meaning as may make those gestures or preparations amount to an assault.

Illustrations

(a) A shakes his fist at Z, intending or knowing it to be likely that he may thereby cause Z to believe that A is about to strike Z. A has committed an assault.

(b) A begins to unloose the muzzle of a ferocious dog, intending, or knowing it to be likely that he may thereby cause Z to believe that he is about to cause the dog to attack Z, A has committed an assault upon Z.

(c) A takes up a stick, saying to Z. "I will give you a beating". Here, though the words used by A could in no case amount to an assault, and though the mere gesture unaccompanied by any other circumstances, might not amount to an assault, the gesture explained by the words may amount to an assault.

Synopsis

1. Scope 2148
2. Gesture or preparation 2149
3. Cases 2149

1. Scope. An assault is something less than the use of criminal force, the force being cut short before the blow actually falls. It seems to consist in an attempt or offer by a person having present ability with force to do any hurt or violence to the person of another. And it is committed whenever a well-founded apprehension of immediate from a force already partially or fully, put in motion is created. An assault is included in every use of criminal force. Mere words, it is explained, do not amount to an assault. Such acts as the following a blow which is purely accidental, an injury received in playing at any lawful sport by consent, reasonable chastisement of a child by his parent or guardian, or of a scholar of a school master, a blow or other violence in self-defence, the use of force by a public servant within the sphere of his duty, force used in defence of a man's property, and like, vide, 24 Cr LJ 276 : 71 Ind Cas 996—are not offences, either under the head of criminal force or assault, or under any other provision of the Code. By the chapter of General Exception such assaults are saved from being accounted offences."—Morgan and Macpherson ; See also (1963) 2 Andh WR 403 : AIR 1964 AP 548.

Any gesture calculated to excite in the party threatened a reasonable apprehension that the party threatening intends immediately to offer violence or is about to use criminal force to the person threatened, constitute if coupled with a present ability to carry such intention into execution, an assault in law. 1 BHCR, 204. To substantiate a charge of assault upon a particular person, it is necessary that a gesture or preparation should be made by a person which would cause another person to apprehend that the person was about to use criminal force to him then and there. It would not be enough to prove that the words used and the preparation made were calculated to cause that person to apprehend that criminal force would be used to him, if he persisted in a certain course of conduct, 30 Cal 97 : 6 CWN 342. Whether particular act amounts to assault depends on circumstance. AIR 1935 Pat 214.

Where the accused for the purpose of inducing the revenue inspector to desist from distraining his properties, threatens to kill the revenue inspector, he is guilty of criminal intimidation under Section 503 and not under Section 352, IPC. When there is no evidence to show that the words were accompanied by any gesture, which is essential for constituting assault. AIR 1959 Mad 342 : 1959 Cr LJ 1084 : 1959 Mad LJ (Cr) 266.

The essential elements in the term "assault" are that the gesture is made in the presence of the person in respect of whom the gesture is made and that the accused knew or intended that such gesture or preparation would use criminal force against him. (1974) 40 Cut LT 155. See (1969) 35 Cut LT 788. In case of attack on human being mere preparation by itself may amount to a offence under Section 351 but preparation for slaughter of animal is no offence. AIR 1962 All 22.

2. Gesture or preparation.—Mere words do not amount to assault. But the words which the party threatening cases at the time may either give to his gestures such a meaning as may make them amount to an assault or on the other hand, may prevent them from doing so. 1 BHC 205. Mere threatening attaining attitude is not sufficient. 8 MLT 118 : 7 Ind Cas 416.

3. Cases.—Throwing a bottle into a house with the intention of frightening the inmates, constitutes an offence under this section. 4 Cr LJ 201 : 3 BLR 194. Causing the death of a man, who had an enlarged spleen, by striking him is an offence under this section. 21 PR 1876 Cr. Where an accused breaks into another's house he could be convicted under this section, as throwing of breaks would be a gesture which would cause apprehension that criminal force was about to be used, AIR 1932 All 322 : 33 Cr LJ 889. An internal medical examination of a lady, if not voluntarily submitted by her would amount to assault and battery. AIR 1932 All 524 : 1932 ALJ 221. According to this section apprehension of the use of criminal force must be from the person making the gesture or preparation and if it arises from some body else, it is not an assault on the part of the person making the gesture. AIR 1939 Oudh 81 : 40 Cr LJ 221. Where a number of persons aim lathi blow at another, it is an act which irrespective of whether the blow hit the mark, renders the weilder guilder of assault as defined under Section 351. 1957 All WR (HC) 149 : 1957 ALJ 308. In case of a charge under Section 323, it was pleaded that there was no medical evidence about the injury but there was positive evidence about the injury of the complaint by the accused the offence would be under Section 351. 1980 Cut LR 139 : 1981 Cr C 14; sec also (1981) 3 WLR 131 (notwithstanding that there was common consent in the sport in the course of which the injury was caused).

Sec. 352. Punishment for assault or criminal force otherwise than on grave provocation.—Whoever assaults or uses criminal force to any person otherwise than on grave and sudden provocation given by that person, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three months, or with fine may extend to five hundred rupees, or with both.

Explanation.—Grave and sudden provocation will not mitigate the punishment for an offence under this section, if the provocation is sought or voluntarily provoked by the offender as an excuse for the offence, or if the provocation is given by anything done is obedience to the law, or by a public servant, in the lawful exercise of the powers of such public servant, or if the provocation is given by anything done in the lawful exercise of the right of private defence.

Whether the provocation was grave and sudden enough to mitigate the offence, is a question of fact.

1. Criminal force.—To constitute 'criminal force', the offender must intentionally use force to any person without that person's consent, in order to the committing of any offence or intending by the use of such force to cause, of knowing it to be likely that by the use or such force he will cause injury, fear or annoyance to the person for whom the force is used. Unless all these elements are present a person cannot be convicted under this section. UBR (1892-1896), Vol. 1, 226 ; UBR (1892-1896), Vol. 1, 228. An assault made by parties proceeding together and acting in conjunction as to time, place, and assault is one single act, and not a divisible and district act. The complainant, a young woman, was going with an earthen jar through a public thoroughfare to fill water at a well, after sunrise, when the accused who was standing, leaning against his lathi, caught hold of the complainant's hand which prevented her from going in the direction in which she was going. It was also alleged that the accused had also solicited her to commit adultery with him. The Magistrate, finding the latter part of the charge unproved, convicted the accused under Section 352, IPC. Held, that though there was evidence to sustain a charge of criminal force under Section 352, IPC the principle of Section 95, IPC, applied to the act of the accused in the case as it was a mere piece of foolish and vulgar chaff, which seriously to treat as a crime would be absurd. The act of the petitioner in dragging the complaint opposite party upto the road where assault was committed amount to offence under the section. (1977) XLIV Cut L.T. 194.

2. Scope.—"This section provides for the ordinary punishment for an assault or for using criminal force. A mitigation of punishment when there is grave and sudden provocation is admitted here as in cases of culpable homicide and of hurt. The several general Exception concerning the right of private defence, acts done by consent, etc., should be borne in mind."—Morgan and Macpherson.

Where the constables were taking the accused to dispensary for his examination, the accused refused to go and resisted the attempt of the constables to drag him to the dispensary, and in so doing, gave blows to the constables and made good his escape the question arose whether the accused was guilty under Section 352 or Section 353. The answer was in the negative inasmuch as the accused had the right of defending himself against the force sought to be illegally exercised against his person. AIR 1959 Bom 284 : ILR 1959 Bom 852 : 1959 Cr LJ 825 : 61 Bom LR 30.

In order to claim protection under Section 197, Cr PC a person accused of an offence under Section 353, must show that there was a reasonable connection between his official duty and the act. The accused was charged with abusing and assaulting a police constable. The accused had abused and slapped the constable when he was waiting for a bus for going back to police station after making search of some known depardator. It was observed that constable was merely waiting for a bus to reach police station, it could not be said that he was engaged in executing the duty. Held, that accused was guilty of offence punishable under Section 352 and not under Section 353. 1987 Cri LJ 950 (Kant).

3. Procedure.—Not cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compounda-ble—Triable by any Magistrate and may be tried summarily.

4. Charge.—The charge, if necessary, should run thus :

"I [name and office of the Magistrate, etc.] hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :

'That on or about.......day of......at.....you assaulted (or used criminal force) to AB (the person aggrieved) and thereby committed an offence under Section 352, of the IPC and within my cognizance."

"And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge."

5. Sentence.—Where the accused was a railway officer of some station and as such it was his duty to behave fairly and courteously to passangers, his conduct in forcibly trying to occupy a seat occupied by a woman passanger and her bale and assaulting her when she resented, calls for censure and where he had added to insult to injury in casting as persons on the character of that passenger the Court must award the maximum sentence permissible under Section 352. 1. Assault.—Whether a particular act does or does not amount to an assault depends on the circumstances of each case; a particular act may not amount to an assault in one case, but the same act taken along with the other surrounding circumstances may amount to an assault in another case. 155 Ind Cas 421 : 36 Cr LJ 714 : 16 Pat L.T. 295 : 1935 Cr C 577 : AIR 1935 Pat 214 (S.B.). The terms "prevention" and "deference" are not synonymous. In the first place, prevention does not mean only deference by physical force but by other means as well. Secondly, the distinction seems to be with reference to the stage of interference by the accused. 1953 Cr LJ 1780 : AIR 1953 Mad 936.

Father of the complainant was assaulted according to the prosecution case by the accused in an inhabited part of the village, but none was a witness of the locality and "chance" witnesses only deposed against the accused. In an appeal from acquittal, it was held that no injury to the victim was proved from the record of the case. Appeal dismissed. [(1986) 2 Crimes 525 (Cal)].

2. Scope.—"The assault is aggravated because a public servant is the object of it. To support a charge under this section, besides proof of the assault or use of criminal force, and that it was used against one who either was or was acting as a public servant—it should be shown that the accused had knowledge of the official character of the person assaulted. It will of course be open to the accused to show illegality or excess on the part of the public servant".—Morgan and Macpherson. The prosecution must prove that person assaulted is a public servant and that the assault was made on him while he was discharging his duties as such. 18 Cr LJ 803 : 15 ALJ 565 : 41 Ind Cas 323 ; 154 Ind Cas 740 : 36 Cr LJ 558 : AIR 1935 All 516 ; 1963 (1) Cr LJ 559 ; 1964 (2) Cr LJ 571 : MR 1964 Pat 493. The Commissioner was in his office, i.e., Town Hall, when the offence took place. He was not there for any purpose other than his duty. For causing obstruction to his duty it is not necessary that the Commissioner is physically obstructed. Such a view will be too pedantic. No public servant can discharge his duties if he is humiliated in the manner in which the petitioner humiliated the Commissioner. Such acts are direct obstructions to functioning of a public servant. Obstruction was caused not only at the moment when the offence was committed but the obstruction must deemed to have continued for a fairly long time not for that day but also for days that followed. Mr. Sunil Sharma, learned counsel appearing for the State, says that the day of the Commissioner was lost because the Commissioner could not work till his stained clothes were replaced. The act itself was sufficient obstruction and it is not necessary to seek how long the Commissioner took to regain his poise. If such activities are deemed no obstruction to the performance of duty of a public servant, no public servant can be said to be safe in the place of his duty. If the offence committed is looked upon as a simple non-cognizable offence, there would be no way of keeping up the dignity of a public servant which is so very essential for efficient functioning of the Government or a local body. Virendra Sharma v. State, 2005 Cr LJ 2644 (Del) : 2005 (120) DLT 249 (Del).

In the instant case it was alleged that the Municipal officials were abused and assaulted by accused when they tried to prevent the construction. It was held that their presence at the spot as public servants of the Municipality was not at all warranted. Assuming for a moment that there was any assault it would not be an interference with the discharge of their public duty, since the prosecution his failed to show that those officers who went there had gone with the valid authority of preventing the alleged illegal construction. State of Karnataka v. Ireppa Dhareppa Hosani, 2001 Cri LJ 3566 (Kant).

Duty imposed on the public servant includes the performance of all acts which are too integrally connected with his duty. AIR 1975 SC 1685 : 1975 Cr LJ 1440. 4. Conviction and Sentence.—Where a charge under Section 147 has only been framed, the accused cannot be convicted under Section 353; 18 CWN 1274 : 16 Cr LJ 42 : 26 Ind Cas 634.

Separate sentences under Section 147 and under Section 353 should not be passed, when the common object of the unlawful assembly committing the riot was the offence under Section 353. 4 CWN 245. Lesser sentence. It is bizarre to note that there is terrible irrationality in the sentence prescribed for committing offence u/S. 333, IPC. The said offence is in combination of offence - defined u/S. 320 and the offence of assault on a public servant punishable u/S. 353, IPC. The offence of grievous hurt is punishable u/S. 326, IPC with life imprisonment or with the imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to 10 years and shall also be liable to fine. Whereas a higher form of manifested offence u/S. 333 is made punishable only with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to 10 years and shall also be liable to fine. The law-makers shall take note of the anomaly in the sentencing policy and effect necessary correction by way of amendment. Although it is belated yet the lawmakers at least should now wake up to go for thorough rational and scientific review of sentencing policy for all the offences. The different types of injuries enumerated u/S. 320 do not ensue same amount of harm, pain and disability. Therefore proportionate to the nature of grievous injuries and its consequences, the punishment should be redefined. So also the punishment for an offence u/S. 333 should be redefined. Similarly in respect of other offences rational sentence to be re-prescribed in respect of other offences. State of Karnataka v. Mohammed Sadiq, 2006 CriLJ 3391 (Kar).

'That you on or about.... (date)...... (time) and..... "And I hereby direct that you be tried in this Court on the said charge."

8. F.I.R.—FIR cannot be quashed simply on ground of delay as prosecution is to explain delay at appropriate stage. Rajinder Singh v. Union Territory, Chandigarh. (1995) 3 Recent Cr R 507 (P & H).

9. Probation.—When accused was convicted under Sections 353/34, IPC, and sentenced to 2 years RI.—Appeal to Sessions Judge was dismissed. Hence, there was challenging of petition. The petitioners are not previous convict and are 1st offenders. Keeping in view the facts and circumstances of the case it is fit case where benefit of probation should be extended to petitioners. Hence though conviction is maintained he is released on probation. Shankar Lal v. State of Haryana, (1994) 3 CC Cas 247 (P & H).

10. Hurdle in discharge of duties by police personnel.—Accused in order to avoid their arrest creating hurdle in discharge of duties by police personnel. It is true that the prosecution should not be insisted upon independent witness while convicting the accused on the basis of the police personnel evidence, but the police personnel evidence should be corroborated by other evidence. Prosecution has not been able to produce a single witness pointing towards the fact that the arms used by the appellants were serviceable or not. Even for recoveries of arms from the accused appellants has also not been proved by independent witness. The findings arrived at by the trial Court is not perverse so far as acquittal of the accused appellants for the offence under Sections 3/25 Arms Act. It may be possible that in order to avoid their arrest they must not have co-operated the police personnel or hindrance was created by them in the discharge of duties by the police personnel for that the trial Court rightly convicted the accused appellants under Section 353, IPC, but so far as guilt of the accused appellants for section 307, IPC, in absence of independent evidence or any corroborative evidence such like FSL report, benefit of doubt can be given to the accused appellants. The charge of Section 307, IPC framed by the trial Court is not proved and the accused appellants are entitled to be given the benefit of doubt in absence of any other independent evidence or corroborative evidence. Bhairon Singh & Anr. vs State of Rajasthan, 2010 Cri LJ 1177 (Raj)

11. Identification parade.—Conviction on basis of identification for the first time in Court. None of the prosecution witness knew any of the accused-appellants. However, in of the FIR, not only their names but also their parentage and complete addresses were stated. It is, however, not clear as to whether the name of the accused Hemu was recorded in the said FIR or not, the translated version thereof has been placed before us.

Appellants herein admittedly were not known to the police officers. Only Sattey was known to them. Anoop Singh in his deposition categorically admitted that he did not know the assailants previously. After their arrest, no identification parade test was held. Although the first informant as also witnesses in their depositions proceeded on the basis that all the accused had been coming in a Maruti Car and they were heavily armed, no arm was recovered from any of them.

How their names could be taken is beyond anybody's comprehension. Even two persons, namely, Lilu and Vinod were called by their first names. How the Officer In-charge even could ascertain their actual names has not been disclosed. He admitted that apart from Sattey, he had not seen any accused persons on previous occasion. Why despite the same, identification parade was not held has not been explained. Appellants were identified only in Court.

It was contend that identification for the first time in Court is permissible in law. There cannot be any dispute so far as the aforementioned proposition of law is concerned. The said principle, however, should be applied having regard to the facts and circumstances of each case. Courts, as is well known, ordinarily, do not give much credence to identification made in the Court for the first time and that too after a long time.

Witnesses in their depositions admitted that they had not been knowing the accused from before the despite so, no test identification parade was held. The accused persons having been identified for the first time in the Court, it is difficult for any Court to rely upon the same and that too after such a long time.

As indicated hereinbefore, appellants were not known to the police officers; they were not involved in any other case. In fact, so far as the Hemu is concerned, no case at the relevant time was pending against him. Only because Sattey allegedly called them by their names, which appears to be wholly unlikely, they could not have been identified particularly in view of the fact that the incident had taken place in an isolated area and that too on a dark night.

Sattey furthermore could not have been instrumental in murdering Lasker Singh. Lasker Singh died of a firearm injury shot from a service revolver, i.e., at the hands of the police party only. Such a revolver, thus, was not and could not have been used by any of the accused persons. Hem Singh vs. State of Haryana, 2009 (6) SCC 748 : 2009 (7) JT 433 : 2009 (6) Scale 784 : 2009 (7) SCR 888 : 2009 (4) Supreme 338 : 2010 (1) SLT 126.

Sec. 354. Assault or criminal force to woman with intent to outrage her modesty.—Whoever assaults or uses criminal force to any woman, intending to outrage or knowing it to be likely that he will thereby outrage her modesty, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

STATE AMENDMENT

Andhra Pradesh.—Amended by Act No. 6 of 1991.

In its application to the State of Andhra Pradesh, for Section 354 of the Indian Penal Code, 1860, the following section shall be substituted namely—

> "354. Assault or criminal force to woman with intent to outrage her modesty.—Whoever assaults or uses criminal force to any woman, intending to outrage or knowing it to be likely that he will thereby outrage her modesty, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which shall not be less than five years but which may extend to seven years and shall also be liable to fine :
> Provided that the Court may, for adequate and special reasons to be mentioned in the judgment, impose a sentence of imprisonment of either description for a term which may be less than five years, but which shall not be less, than two years."

Madhya Pradesh.—After section 354, the following new section insert, namely:—"354A. Assault or use of Criminal force to woman with intent to disrobe her.—Whoever assaults or uses criminal force to any woman or abets or conspires to assault or uses such criminal force to any woman intending to outrage or knowing it to be likely that by such assault, he will thereby outrage or causes to be outraged the modesty of the woman by disrobing or compel her to be naked on any public place, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which shall not be less than one year but which may extend to ten years and shall also be liable to fine.•.

Orissa.—In the First Schedule to the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 in the entry under column 5 relating to section 354 of the Indian penal Code 1860 for the work 'bailable' the word 'non-bailable' shall be substituted.

1. Scope.—What constitutes an outrage to female modesty is nowhere defined. The essence of a woman's modesty is her sex. The culpable intention of the accused is the crux of the matter. The reaction of the woman is very relevant, but its absence is not always decisive. Modesty in this Section is an attribute associated with female human beings as a class. It is a virtue which attaches to a female owing to her sex. The act of pulling a woman, removing her saree, coupled with a request for sexual intercourse, is such as would be an outrage to the modesty of a woman; and knowledge, that modesty is likely to be outraged, is sufficient to constitute the offence without any deliberate intention having such outrage alone for its object. The ultimate test for ascertaining whether modesty has been outraged is whether the action of the offender is such as could be perceived as one which is capable of shocking the sense of decency of a woman. Raju Pandurang Mahale v. State of Maharashtra, 2004 Cr LJ 1441 : AIR 2004 SC 1677 : 2004(4) SCC 371 : 2004(2) JT 425 : 2004(2) Crimes 204 (SC) : 2004(2) Supreme 234.

"In order to constitute an offence under this section, mere knowledge that the modesty of a woman is likely to be outraged is sufficient (without any deliberate intention having such outrage alone for its object. 1 Weir 347 ; 31 CWN 583 : 103 Ind Cas 353. But an indecent assault upon a woman does not amount to an attempt to commit rape, unless the Court be satisfied that, the conduct of the accused indicated a determination to gratify his passions at all events and in spite of all resistance. 5 Bom 403. In order to constitute the offence there must be intention or knowledge that the woman's modesty will be outraged. 14 Cr LJ 149 ; 42 PWR 1910 ; 16 PWN 1912 ; 15 Ind Cas 309. "Woman" is explained to denote a female human being of any age (vide Section 10). 14 Bom LR 961 : 13 Cr LJ 858 : 17 Ind Cas 794. The phrase "to outrage modesty" is indefinite ; and would be an outrage to the modesty of one woman to do her what would be though nothing of by another. The taking indecent liberties with females will be punished by this section ; but the provision is not confined to such cases. In a country, where many women consider themselves as dishonoured by exposure to the gaze of strangers may gross insults of a different kind, such as a man rudely thrusting his head into the covered palanquin of a woman of rank, may well be deemed to outrage female modesty. Assaults committed with intention to commit rape are not, it seems, here contemplated".—Morgan and Macpherson. The mere acts of assault and outraging the modesty of woman are covered by this section and not by section 366. AIR 1934 Pesh 69 : 35 Cr LJ 1273. No injury is found on private parts or any other part of the body. The accused was found lying over her. Held, that he was guilty under Section 354 and not under Section 376, 1953 Raj LW 243 ; 63 Punj LR 546 : 1961 All Cr R 211 : 1961 All WR 32 : 1962 (1) Cr LJ 843 ; 1961 MPLJ (Notes) 73. Where the process-servers and the decree-holder acted in good faith and in exercise of their legal right in removing the female occupant refusing to vacate by which the dhoti of the woman got loose, no offences under this section have been committed. AIR 1936 Oudh 379 : 37 Cr LJ 892. Section 354 does not offend against Article 14 of the Constitution. AIR 1953 Mad B 147 : 1953 Cr LJ 964 : 37 Cr LJ 892. It is not the act of outraging modesty that is made an offence under Section 354. In order to constitute an offence under Section 354, there must be assault or use of criminal force to any woman with the intention or knowledge that the woman's modesty will be outraged. 1953 Cr LJ 964 : AIR 1953 MB 147. The distinction between an attempt to commit rape and to commit indecent assault is sometimes very meagre. For the forms there should be some action on the part of the accused which would show that he is just going to have sexual connection with the prosecutrix. For an offence of an attempt to commit rape the prosecution must establish that it has gone beyond the stage of preparation. The difference between mere preparation and actual attempt to commit an offence consists chiefly in the degree of determination. The accused making girl naked and running away on seeing her nude is guilty of offence under Section 354. AIR 1960 MP 155 : 1960 Cr LJ 612.

Where an accused is tried for an offence under Section 354 and an assault is proved, the next question to be considered is whether he did so with the intent to outrage the woman's modesty, or with the knowledge that it would be outraged. The story of a person trying to outrage the modesty of two women in the presence to two gentlemen is so unnatural that there must be clear and unimpeachable evidence before it can be accepted. AIR 1954 SC 711 : 1954 Cr LJ 1793. The culpable intention of the accused is the crux of the matter irrespective of the reaction of the woman. AIR 1967 SC 63 : 1967 Cr LJ 1.

The difference between mere preparation and actual attempt to commit offence consists chiefiy in the greater degree of determination. 1984 Cr LJ 786 ; 1982 (2) Cr LJ 715 ; see also AIR 1967 Raj 149.

There is no abstract conception of modesty that can apply to all cases. AIR 1967 SC 63 (commission of the offence with necessary intent or knowledge) (overruling AIR 1963 Punj 443; AIR 1933 Cal 142; AIR 1928 Pat 336 and AIR 1953 Madh B 147) ; 1982 BLJ 23 ; 1980 Cr LR 446.

Where in a case girl of 4 years old sitting on the stomach of accused, no body seen naked, no indecent act, no assault, girl came out when door was opened after knock, no signs of stress or emotions, no complaint made by girl to her father in presence of witnesses, not established that girl was detained forcibly, it was held that no case for conviction under Section 354 or 342 is made out. 1987 Cr LR (MP) 11.

The case was of outraging the modesty of a woman for the act should be capable of shocking the sense of decency of a woman. The ultimate test for ascertaining whether modesty has been outraged is, the action of the offender such as could be perceived as one which is capable of shocking the sense of decency of a woman. Rupan Deol Bajaj (Mrs.) v. Kanwar Pal Singh Gill, 1995 JIC 1155 at p. 1162 (SC).

Victim being a little child of 3-1/2 years old—Her statement taken after 6 years of the occurrence—Stating the commission of rape upon her by the appellant which was not corroborated by medical evidence—Conviction was held, to be not sustainable—However conviction modified from under Section 376 to under Section 354 IPC.—

Though at the relevant time she was 3-1/2 years old she was examined in court after about six years of the occurrence. Not only this she claims in the witness-box that she was taken to the bath room of the school where she was subjected to sexual intercourse and that the Principal had come into the bath room and hadasked the appellant to go away. Had there been a rape the Principal, would not have acted that way. In any case the Principal has not been examined. Since the material witness has been kept back without any explanation the presumption would be that he had been examined he would not have supported the prosecution version. Yet another point also needs to be noticed. The father of Kalpana states that on 10th December, 1983, he had contacted Mr. D.S. Dalal who was managing the school and had told him everything. Mr. Dalal was examined by prosecution and what is significant is that he has not said a word about the incident or about what, if any. had been told to him. Any how, it is the statement of the mother of Kalpana which clinches the issue. She has been examined as PW-4 and as per her Kalpana had never told her about her having been subjected to sexual intercourse and that what had been told to her by the victim had led her to form the impression that the appellant had only tried to fondle her vagina 'with his fingers. Thus rape or attempt to rape is ruled out. The case consequently squarely falls within the mischief of Section 354 of the Indian Penal Code. Ranji Lal v. State, (1994) 53 DLT 829 at pp. 830. 831.

When accused entered house of complainant, dragged her out, torn her clothes and misbehaved her prima facie offence under Section 354, IPC, made out. Shakuntala Devi v. Sumeat Kumar, 1997 Cri LJ 335 (Del).

Holding a woman by her breast by a person who is not her husband in public and particularly by a person who is an utter stranger will be by an act very such likely to outrage the modesty of a woman State of H.P. v. Ram Das, 1999 Cri LJ 2802 (HP).

2. Attempt to commit rape.—Since evidence on record clearly show that accused catching hold of hand of victim and when one of prosecution witnesses came there on hearing alarm of victim, accused fled away, conviction of accused under Section 376/511, IPC converted into one under Section 354 of IPC. Bisheshwar Murmu v. State of Bihar, 2004 Cr LJ 326 (Jhar) : AIR 2003 Jhar HCR 1366 : 2003(4) JCR JHA 468.

Attempt to rape—Outraging modesty of women. Action of lifting victim, putting her on bed, removing her underwear and lifting her frock did outrage the modesty of victim. There was no attempt to rape as there was no attempt to penetrate. Held, offence under S. 354 made out. Tika Ram Chettri vs State of Sikkim, 2010 (4) CriLJ 4025 (Sikkim).

The accused attempted to commit rape. Section 375 IPC defines rape whereas Section 376 envisages punishment for rape. There is explanation in Section 375 IPC to the effect that penetration is sufficient to constitute the sexual intercourse necessary to the offence of rape. So, the natural corollary is that provisions of Section 376 / 511 IPC would be attracted in case the accused tried a penetrate his penis in the vagina of prosecutrix. In the present case, from the testimony of the prosecutrix, it is revealed that neither the accused undressed himself nor he undressed the prosecutrix. The only attribution to the accused is that he caught hold of the prosecutrix, laid her on the ground and then caught hold of her neck.

In the present case, there is neither allegation of ejaculation of accused nor undressing both the prosecutrix and himself. So, I am of the view that the finding of the learned trial Court whereby the accused stands convicted under Section 376 and / IPC is without any basis and the accused stands acquitted under the said provision of law.

The above said ingredients are complete, in the present case. By invoking the provisions of Section 222, Criminal Procedure Code, the accused stands convicted under Section 354 IPC. Pawan Kumar vs. State of Haryana, 2010 (2) CrLJ 2077 (P & H).

The woman in conservative society is not generally used as a pawn to wreak the vengeance. Courts have a duty to make deeper scrutiny of the evidence and decide acceptability or otherwise of the accusation. False implication of accused is remote possibility. When outraged woman belongs to scheduled caste, the offence is aggravated. Essential ingredient of offence is mere knowledge that the modesty of a woman is likely to be outraged and intention is not sole criteria. Vidyadharan v. State of Kerala, 2004 Cr LJ 605 (SC) : Air 2004 (SC) 536 : 2004(1) SCC 215 : 2003(9) JT 89 : 2003(4) Crimes 497 : 2003(8) Supreme 1210.

3. Cases.—Where the accused took off the clothes of a woman, threw her on the ground and then sat down besides her but said nothing, he committed an offence under this section. 116 PLR 1912 : 14 Bom LR 961 : 13 Cr LJ 858. But where evidence proves that the accused stripped a girl nearly naked and was lying upon her, when her cries attracted people to the spot, he committed an offence under Sections 376, 511 and not merely under this section. 8 Ind Cas 257 : 42 PWR 1910 Cr. In such cases Magistrates should not try the case under Section 354, in order to give themselves jurisdiction. UBR (1892-1896) Vol. I, 234 ; UBR (1897-1901) Vol. I, 84. Where the only evidence against the accused is that he removed his cloth and showed his private parts to a lady, that by itself will not amount to an offence under Section 354. It may amount to indecency but not to assault or use of criminal force. (1963) 1 Cr LJ 391. Whoever uses criminal force to a female, young or old intelligent or imbecile he is guilty under the section. 1972 Cr LJ 658, but see 1982 Cr LJ 19 (putting of hand on the belly of a female without the intention to committing offence) : 1972 All Cr R 274. (catching woman by neck) ; 1982 Raj Cr C 297 (abusing and chasing this girl and ladies).

Where the accused committed house trespass and used criminal force to outrage the modesty of the informant he is guilty under Sections 354 and 451 Penal Code. (1979) BLR 11. The integral part of the complaint was given to go by and it was held that improvements and orientations made after the FIR throw a great doubt as to the truth of the prosecution story. 1979 CLR (SC) 696.

Quashing of proceeding. Although FIR itself does not disclose offences under Sections 323 and 354, IPC against the revisionist, the Investigating Agency proceeded with the investigation on the very date of lodging of inordinately delayed FIR and examined all the five witnesses on the very date of initiation of the P.S. case in question under Sections 323, 354, 309 and 34, IPC. On completion of investigation the charge-sheet was, however, submitted on 09.05.2002 in a very mechanical fashion. On perusal of the DB the perfunctory nature of investigation is manifestly clear. Further, it is also a clear case of sheer non-application of mind on the part of the I.O. Rather, he has neglected to scrutinize the materials brought on record in its proper perspective prior to formation of his opinion that a prima facie charge under Sections 323, 354, 309 and 34, IPC has been well established. None of the five witnesses examined by him stated anything implicating the revisionist as the molester of the alleged victim and there was also nothing in the statements to suggest that the de facto complainant was assaulted by the revisionist. In fact, the de facto complainant herself has also not levelled any allegation of molestation or assault against the revisionist within the four corners of the FIR.

In such a factual scenario, Court has no hesitation in holding that contents of the FIR even taken at their at face value accepting in its entirety do not constitute prima facie offences under Sections 354 and 323, IPC against the accused revisionist. Court is also to hold further that the evidence collected in support of allegations made in the FIR also do not make out any case under Sections 354, 323 and 34, IPC against the accused revisionist. In submission of charge-sheet claiming that offences under Sections 354 and 323, IPC have been established prima facie against the accused is of no consequence since evidence and materials so collected by the I.O. were not properly appreciated by the I.O. for the reasons best known to him.

Therefore, viewing the entire matter on the anvil of the viability of the persecution case, this Court convinced to hold that it is a baseless case of a mala fide and malicious prosecution and as such continuance of this criminal proceeding would be a sheer abuse of the process of the Court. So, Court of the clear opinion that it is a fit case where the entire proceeding including the charge-sheet should be quashed so far as it relates to the accused revisionist in exercise of the power under Section 482, Criminal Procedure Code. Biplab Kumar Chatterjee vs. State, 2010 (3) CrLJ 2638 (Cal).

It is to be further noted that as per the prosecution version when P.W.1 was fetching the water all the accused attacked her and abused her and committed the offense under Section 354 I.P.C. and upon interference of PW.3 she was also attacked and assaulted physically committing them under Section 354 IPC and her modesty was outraged. But P.W. 1 did not speak anything about this outraging of modesty of PW3 at all. She only spoke about the physical assault against PW3 by the accused. Therefore, it is not safe to convict the accused under the circumstances as stated by PWs 1.3 and 6. Public Prosecutor, High Court of A.P. Hyderabad. v. Potharlanka Venkateswarlu and Others. 2002 Cri LJ 3145 AP : 2002(4) All Cri LR 466 : 2002(1) Andh LT (Cri) AP 395.

The accused numbering 6 were charged for sexually assaulting a minor girl of 14 years of age but medical evidence was weak and there were infirmities in evidence of victim. Three accused were already acquitted as they were not specifically referred to by the victim before the Court. Three remaining accused were given benefit of doubt under Section 376/109 but were convicted under Section 354 as an offence of outraging the modesty of woman was made out. State v. Chandrayya Hannumanthappa Mellapanavar, 2003 Cr LJ 258 (Kant) : AIR 2002 Kant HCR 2962 : 2003(1) All Cri LR 623.

In a MP case, where the prosecutrix simply stated that the accused had committed "ulta kam" with her, it was held that all "ulta kam" did not mean sexual intercourse but on facts of case offence of outraging the modesty of woman was made and his conviction was altered to one under Section 354, IPC. Narayan v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 268 (MP) : 2003 Cri LR (SC&MP) MP 16 : 2002(4) MPHT 190.

The accused propelled complainant into his car against her wishes. The complainant resulted advances made by the accused. It was held that the fact that he said "thank you" when he was dropped near Railway Station could be no ground for drawing adverse inference against prosecution. The victim has stated her case on oath.

which was corroborated by her complaint to the police and therefore the acquittal of accused was liable to be set aside. State of Maharashtra v. Satyendra Dayal Khare, 2004 Cr LJ 3399 (Bom) : 2004 All MR (Cri) 2339.

In a charge for gang rape it was alleged that accused entered the house at night and raped the victim and took away some small item of jewellery from her person. Delay in prosecution resulted into total lack of medical evidence, forensic evidence and other supportive evidence. The prosecutrix, though a rustic woman, her evidence was Cogent and clear. It was held that accused though entitled to benefit of doubt under Section 376 but were liable to be convicted under Section 354/34 and Section 451/34. State v. Desgowda, 2004 Cr LJ (NOC) 53 (Kant) : AIR 2004 Kant HCR 228 : 2004(2) All Cri LR 999 : 2004(1) Kant LJ 94.

Accused had entered the house of victim and sexually assaulted the victim but offence of rape was not proved. The Court held him liable under Section 354/451 (tresspassing and outraging of modesty). Mangara Harijan v. State, 2004 Cr LJ (NOC) 128 (Orissa) : 2004(2) Crimes 364 : 2004(2) JCJR 23 : 2004(27) OCR 869.

The accused allegedly. He modested breast of complainant. It was held that the failure on the part of defence to take out any contradiction with regard to her molestation by accused and that the conviction of accused under Section 354 was proper. Babulal Sao v. State of Bihar, 2004 Cr LJ 2465 (Jhar) : AIR 2004 Jhar HCR 1314 : 2003(3) East Cri C 140.

When the victim was returning from the "coconut cope" and going to her village, the accused with an intention to commit rape on her, forcibly caught hold of her, threw her on the ground and when tried to remove her saree, she raised alarming cry and the accused grew wild and gave a blow with his knife on her right upper arm causing severe bleeding injury. On hearing the cries the witnesses came at the place of incident and saw the accused running away. The statement of victim was corroborated with medical evidence and statements of other witnesses. Conviction of accused was held proper. Baltina Dharma Rao v. State, 2005 Cr LJ 362 (AP) : 2006(2) ALD (CRL) 784 : 2005(1) Andh LT (Cri) 381.

The parents reached the sugarcane field when accused was in process of attempting molestation and immediately he ran away from the place. There was no evidence in support of allegation of rape and accused was acquitted of charge under Section 376 but he was held liable for conviction under Section 354/511, IPC. State of Karnataka v. Khaled, 2004 Cr LJ (NOC) 10 (Kat) : AIR 2004 Kant HCR 36.

4. Evidence and Proof.—A charge under this section is one which is very easy to make and very difficult to rebut, and also one which experience shows woman are sometimes apt to make from one motive to another without the slightest foundation. So when such charges are made, it is necessary to see whether they are supported by independent evidence besides that of the woman herself, or are corroborated by her conduct and the surrounding circumstances and are consistent with ordinary probabilities. UBR (1892-1896) Vol. 1, 229 : UBR (1897-1901) Vol. 1, 325 ; ILR (1963) 13 Raj 650 : 1963 Raj LW 288.

Prosecution exaggarating the story, so the benefit must go to the accused and hence the conviction cannot be altered from under Section 354 to 362. AIR 1977 SC 1614 : 1977 Cr LJ 1116 ; 1983 SCC (Cr) 316 : 1983 Cr LR 554 ; 1980 WLN (UC) 334 and unreliable testimony ; 1978 WLN (UC) 423 ; 1976 WLN (UC) 1. But see (1979) Raj Cr C 12.

Related witnesses. Full of contradictions. The High Court has also attached unnecessary importance to the fact that one witness stated that the assault continued for 8 to 10 minutes while another said it was around three minutes. The doctor's evidence was discarded on the ground that his testimony was of poor quality and does not inspire confidence. The injury appeared to be manufactured one. The judgment is full of contradictions. As stated above, the High Court at one place noticed that it is improbable that the accused person who was cousin of PW. 4 tried to molest her. In the same breath the High Court in another place has held that the accused persons to molest PW. 4 at a particular moment took her to the Arhar field and this was done with her prior consent. The High Court goes further to say that there was no planning in the act and had appeared to be chance meeting which led to it. The absurdity of the High Court's conclusions can be gauged from the fact that the High Court found it unnatural that two girls of almost of the same age group were walking and as to why one of them would move ahead and the other would come behind is unnatural. The High Court further has held that PW. 3 stated in Court that PW. 4 on her return told him that accused persons has teased her in the field. The High Court found fault with the statement on the ground that he did not tell before the police that the girl did not tell PW. 3 that the accused persons held her hands. So far as the High Court's conclusions that there was non-mention of the source of light in the FIR it needs to be noted that the accused persons were not strangers to the witnesses. They were closely related. State of Uttar Pradesh vs. Sheo Lal, AIR 2009 SC 1912 : 2009 CrLJ 1162 : 2009 (1) Crimes 388 : 2009 (11) SCC 513 : 2009 (3) JT 540 : 2009 (2) SCR 343 : 2009 (2) Scale 582.

The evidence of prosecutrix was found unreliable. Hence any part of her evidence is risky to be relied upon. The possibility of prosecutrix being a willing party to entire episode cannot be ruled out. The prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt, that accused has committed an offence under Sections 354 or 323, IPC. Hence conviction and sentence set aside. Tulshiram Murlidhar Gave v. State of Maharashtra, 1994 B Cr C 198 (Bom).

In a case of molestation, the complaint itself who lodged after consultation and legal advise. FIR did not contain details of incident and the complainant in her testimony gave more graphic account of how incident took place. It was held that the evidence of complainant could not be rejected on account of so-called improvement made in evidence was illegal. State of Maharashtra v. Satyendra Dayal Khare, 2004 Cr LJ 3399 (Bom) : 2004 All MR (Cri) 2339.

Ordinarily a lady would not "put her character at stake" may not be wrong but cannot be applied universally. Each case has to be determined on the touchstone of the factual matrix. Pandurang Sitaram Bhagwat v. State of Maharashtra, 2005 Cr LJ 880 (SC) : AIR 2005 (SC) 643 : 2005(1) Crimes 104 : 2005(1) JT 92 : 2005(2) SCC 44 : 2004(8) Supreme 916 ; See also State v. Anthony Mikolas, 2006 Cr LJ 1582 (Kant).

5. FIR.—In Tarachand v. State of Rajasthan 2001 CriLJ 3604 (Raj) : 2001(1) CCR 524 (525). FIR was lodged by parents of victim girls who were Primary School students of tender age against accused. Head master of the school. Though in FIR the names of victim girls were not mentioned, but the words "daughter and niece" were used for whom it was alleged that they were frightened of attending the school because of culpable acts of the accused. FIR was proved by informant in his evidence. Nothing was elicited to show that the informant bore animosity or any grudge against the accused and in cross-examination, the informant admitted to have not disclosed the names of his daughter and niece due to shyness. It was during investigation that the Police discovered incriminating facts against the accused. The Court held that "the contents of the information other than those leading to any discovery of incriminating fact would not be admissible in evidence and would not be taken help by defence and that being so, merely because the FIR did not disclose names or particulars of each and every event, no corroboration from the FIR should have been sought regarding the presence of any version given by prosecution witness produced in witness box or any other witness. The FIR is not an encyclopedia. In these circumstances, I donut find any congruity or delay in lodging the report so as to cast aspersion on the veracity of the prosecution case or even the written report".

6. Delay in filing complaint.—In the instant case where the accused slapped the posterior of the prosecutrix, there was some delay in filing the complaint before the Magistrate but that by itself was not sufficient to reject the complaint put forward by the prosecutrix. She recounted the entire incident immediately to the Chief Secretary and other officers and raised objections and also sought for stringent action against the accused.` When she failed in all these attempt, she and her husband filed the criminal complaint before the Chief Judicial Magistrate. Conviction was not interfered. Kanwar Pal S. Gill v. State (Administration UT, Chandigarh) v. Mrs. Rupan Deol Bajaj, IAS, 2005 Cr LJ 3443 (SC) : AIR 2005 (SC) 3104 : 2005(6) JT 452 : 2005(6) SCC 161 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1420 : 2005(5) Supreme 218.

So far as the delay in lodging the FIR question is concerned, the delay in a case of sexual assault, cannot be equated with the case involving other offences. There are several factors which weigh in the mind of the prosecutrix and her family members before coming to the Police Station to lodge a complaint. In a tradition bound society prevalent in India, more particularly, rural areas, it would be quite unsafe to throw out the prosecution case merely on the ground that there is some delay in lodging the FIR. State of Himachal Pradesh vs. Prem Singh, AIR 2009 SC 1010 : 2008 (1) SCC 420 : 2009 CrLJ 786 : 2008 (15) SCR 1058 : 2009 (15) Scale 132.

7. Abduction and outraging modesty.—From the evidence on record. It clearly appears that the prosecution has proved its case beyond all reasonable doubt against the accused appellant Shoukat, as all the ingredients, which have been mentioned above to prove the offense under Section 366 IPC, have been proved by the prosecution in the manner that the accused appellant Shoukat first induced the prosecutrix PW1 Rampyari by deceitful means that there was a Jappa, but actually there was no such Jappa and relying on the statement of accused appellant Shoukat, prosecutrix accompanied him in the night and when they were going, on the way, the accused appellant seeing lonely place outraged her modesty and thus, it is not a mere case of abduction, but purpose for which abduction was done by the accused appellant has also been proved. In these circumstances, the findings of the learned trial Judge convicting the accused appellant Shoukat for the offense under Sections 366 and 354 IPC are liable to be confirmed. Hence, the argument that no case for the offence under Section 36 IPC is made out against the accused appellant Shoukat stands rejected. Shoukat and Another v. The State of Rajasthan, 2002 Cri LJ 364 : 2002(2) Raj LW 1128.

Applying the principle of appreciation to this case, it is seen that the informant does not complain that the present petitioner aimed the blow to her breast. Rather, she has very categorically stated that the petitioner pressed the Lathi (Katha) on her neck and stood on it. Then the petitioner's wife dragged him. The injury was caused to her breast for the action of the accused persons. It thus, appears that the injury to her breast was caused accidentally. The injury, which was sustained by the injured on her breast has not been attributed particularly to the present petitioner in the sense that she has not stated that due to his assault she sustained the injury. Rather she has stated that due to the assault of the accused persons, she sustained the injury. In this case, this Court comes to the conclusion that applying to the standard laid down by the Apex Court in Rupan Deol Bajaj vs. Kanwar Pal Singh Gill, AIR 1996 SC 309 = 1995 SCC (Cr) 1059, it cannot be held to be an affront to the normal sense of feminine decency. It is further noted that in this case there is no suggestive overtuous regarding sex. Therefore, the offence under Section 354 is not made out. The conviction of the petitioner under Section 354, IPC is not sustainable. As far as offence under Section 323 is concerned, learned trial Court as well as the learned appellate Court has come to a concurrent finding of fact which requires no interference. Kelu Cheran Behera vs. State of Orissa, 2010 (2) CrLJ 2280 (Orissa).

8. Conviction.—It is obviously unjust to convict an accused under this section, without calling upon him for his defence in respect of the particulars which differentiate the offence from that stated in the charge against him under Section 352. 1 LBR 287 ; see also 15 Cr LJ 366 : 23 Ind Cas 734.

The entire case was based on sole testimony of prosecutrix. FIR by prosecutrix that rape was committed on her which was subsequently resiled. Hence conviction set aside and benefit of doubt was allowed to accused. Malkhan Singh v. State of U.P., 1995 JIC 690 (All).

Petitioners youngsters used criminal force to outrage modesty of a woman—They embraced complainant—Thus assault being intentional—Evidence of witnesses being cogent and credible—Delay in FIR was fully explained—Conviction was upheld. Pratap Chandra Mohanty v. State of Orissa, (1994) 3 Crimes 179 (Ori).

Where the accused was convicted and sentenced for the offence under Sections 354 and 506, Penal Code, to three month's rigorous imprisonment for each offence. Held, that the intimidation by throwing a knife formed part of the assault in this case ; consequently, the sentence under Section 506 was illegal and must be set aside. 12 Cr LJ 242 : 10 Ind Cas 771. The fact that A is in love with B and is jealous of C does not authorise him to pull B's hair and hand. An assault of this kind made in the presence of several persons is calculated to outrage the woman's modesty and is punishable under Section 354 of the Penal Code. 13 Cr LJ 53 : 13 Ind Cas 389 : 4 Bur LT 268. Every assault on a woman or every use of criminal force to a woman does not necessarily fall under Section 354, IPC, namely, an assault or use of criminal force to a woman with intent to outrage her modesty. In order to construct an offence under that section ,it is necessary that the assault or use of criminal force must be used with intent to outrage a woman or knowing it to be likely that he would thereby outrage her modesty. 31 CWN 983 : 103 Ind Cas 553 : 28 Cr LJ 697 : AIR 1927 Cal 505. An offence under Section 354 is only committed when a person assaults or uses criminal force to a woman intending to outrage or knowing it to be likely that he will thereby outrage her modesty. Where it is clear that the woman either had no modesty to mention or that it was not such as would be outraged by any of the acts which are attributed to the accused, such as offence cannot be said to be committed. 108 Ind Cas 81 : 29 Cr LJ 325 : AIR 1928 Pat 326. Intention to outrage or knowledge that assault is likely to outrage modesty of girl is necessary under Section 354. Per M.C. Ghose in 142 Ind Cas 297 : 1933 Cr C 203 : 34 Cr LJ 308 : AIR 1933 Cal 142. Offence under Section 354 can be committed on girl of five and half years though she has not developed sense of modesty. 142 Ind Cas 297 : 1933 34 Cr LJ 303 : AIR 1933 Cal 142.

The language of Section 354 does not indicate that the legislature wanted to limit its applicability only to females above a certain age as there who had attained sufficient maturity of thought or understanding. 1963 (2) Cr LJ 390 : ILR (1963) 2 Punj 723 : AIR 1963 Punj 440 (F.A.). (Victim of assault, a girl of 7 months). Where the accused threw down a girl, puts hand in her mouth and got on her chest to have intercourse with her but was prevented from doing so by arrival of some persons, his act amounts not only to preparation but an attempt to commit rape. 34 PLR 832 : AIR 1933 Lah 1002. Criminal assault of a daring nature on innocent woman should merit a substantial sentence of imprisonment. AIR 1934 Lah 36. See 1980 Chand LR (Cr) 29 ; 1914 All Cr R 163 ; 1980 Chand LR (Cr) 163 (in case of age or first offence relied or probation of good behaviour).

The accused attempted to commit rape. Section 375 IPC defines rape whereas Section 376 envisages punishment for rape. There is explanation in Section 375 IPC to the effect that penetration is sufficient to constitute the sexual intercourse necessary to the offence of rape. So, the natural corollary is that provisions of Section 376 / 511 IPC would be attracted in case the accused tried a penetrate his penis in the vagina of prosecutrix. In the present case, from the testimony of the prosecutrix, it is revealed that neither the accused undressed himself nor he undressed the prosecutrix. The only attribution to the accused is that he caught hold of the prosecutrix, laid her on the ground and then caught hold of her neck.

In the present case, there is neither allegation of ejaculation of accused nor undressing both the prosecutrix and himself. So, I am of the view that the finding of the learned trial Court whereby the accused stands convicted under Section 376 and / IPC is without any basis and the accused stands acquitted under the said provision of law.

The above said ingredients are complete, in the present case. By invoking the provisions of Section 222 Criminal Procedure Code, the accused stands convicted under Section 354 IPC. Pawan Kumar vs. State of Haryana, 2010 (2) CrLJ 2077 (P & H).

The accused gently slapped on the posterior of the prosecutrix in the presence of some guests. This act on the part of the accused would certainly constitute the ingredient of Section 354, IPC. It was proved that the accused used criminal force with intent to outrage the modesty of the complainant and that he knew fully well that gently slapping on the posterior of the prosecutrix in the presence of other guests would embarrass her. Knowledge could be attributed to the accused that he was fully aware, that touching the body of the prosecutrix at that place and time would amount to outraging her modesty. Had it been without any culpable intention on the part of the accused, nobody would have taken notice of the incident. The prosecutrix made such a hue and cry immediately after the incident and the reaction of the prosecutrix is very much relevant to take note of the whole incident. The accused being a police officer of the highest rank should have been exceedingly careful and failure to do so and by touching the body of the complainant with culpable intention he committed the offence punishable under Sections 354 and 509, IPC. Kanwar Pal S. Gill v. State (Admn., UT, Chandigarh) v. Mr. Rupam Deol Bajaj, IAS, 2005 Cr LJ 2005 Cr LJ 3443 (SC) : : AIR 2005 (SC) 3104 : 2005(6) JT 452 : 2005(6) SCC 161 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1420 : 2005(5) Supreme 218.

9. Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not Compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate and may be tried summarily.

10. Charge.—"I (name and office of the Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That on or about the......day of.......at........you assaulted (or used criminal force to) AB, a woman, intending to outrage (or knowing it to be likely that you would thereby outrage) her modesty, and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 354 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

"And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge."

11. Sentence.—Whipping Act has no application to an offence under Section 354, IPC, where the accused is 18 years old. AIR 1942 Bom 78 : 43 Cr LJ 475. Sentence not held to be harsh in AIR 1965 Pat 8.

When accused is convicted under Section 354, IPC, which was challenged in appeal. The conviction under a well-reasoned judgment. Since cannot has suffered in terms of harassment and expenditure and had not abused conversion of bail the sentence already undergone would meet ends of justice. Raess v. State of U.P., 1995 (32) ACC 58 (All).

Petitioners was facing trial for offence under Section 354, IPC. Assault and criminal force to any woman intending to outrage her modesty—Essence of a woman's modesty in her sex—Culpable intention of the accused was the crux of the confidence. Reaction of woman is very relevant. Custodial sentence restricted to the period already undergone. Fine of Rs. 250/- imposed in default 2 weeks RI. Pratap Chandra Mahant v. State of Orissa, (1995) 2 CCR 514 (Ori).

When accused by entering into house of neighbour in day time caught hold of both hands of lady to outrage her modesty, no lenient view can be taken even if it was his first offence. Murma v. State ofU.P.. 1997 Cri LJ 274 (Alld).

In a case which occurred in 1988, the accused was 20 years of age when the offence was committed. He was in custody for some time. As per record available he was as an agricultural coolie. A sentence for a period already undergone with fine of Rs. 1000/- which was to be given to the prosecutrix was imposed. State of Karnataka v. Khaleel, 2004 Cr LJ (NOC) 10 (Jhar) : AIR 2004 Kant HCR 36.

The incident happened in 1988. Despite the accused holding a high position in the State police, the various Courts found him guilty of the offence punishable under Sections 354 and 509, IPC and that by itself is setting a model for others and would enhance the faith in the judicial system. The accused had completed the period of probation. There was no occasion for any complaint or violation of any of the terms of the bond. At this juncture, it is not just and proper to resort to any other punishment. Kanwar Pal S. Gill v. State (Admn. UT Chandigarh), 2005 Cr LJ 3443 (SC) : AIR 2005 (SC) 3104 : 2005 (6) SCC 161 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1420 : 2005 (5) Supreme 218 : 2005 (6) JT 452.

12. Acquittal.—The eye-witnesses produced did not support the prosecution case. Neither any recovery memo or recoveries produced nor any witness to the accused was examined. The defence evidence of fiduciary transaction between accused and husband of complainant remained unchallenged. Hence not safe to rely on the testimony of complainant. Acquittal. Om Prakash v. State of Haryana, (1995) 1 CC Cases 413 (P & H).

When prosecution story appeared to be artificial and delay in lodging complaint not explained, accused entitled to benefit of doubt. A. Ramu v. Ramasway, 1993 Cri LJ 2544 (Mad).

Where evidence of victim and other witnesses as to incident involving accused therein was full of contradictions and unreliable therefore accused persons entitled to be acquitted. Moola Singh v. State of Rajasthan, 2005 Cr LJ 1347 (Raj).

In a case of attempt to commit rape, abnormal delay of 13 days in filing FIR, it was stated that Sarpanch was contacted the next day and he advised the informant to lodge report if he wanted to. The report was not lodged immediately thereafter. Sarpanch was not examined. The witnesses who were examined were close relatives of the prosecutrix. There were a number of contradictions in their statements and there was corroborative evidence. Accused was held entitled to benefit of doubt and was acquitted. Tan Sukh v. State of Rajasthan, 2004 Cr LJ (NOC) 96 (Raj). See also Pandurang Sitaram Bhagwat v. State of Maharashtra, 2005 Cr LJ 860 (SC) : 2005(1) ALD (Crl) 1 AP : 2004(2) Andh LT (Cri) 579 : 2005(2) Bank Cas 68 : 2005(1) Rec Cri R 100 : 2005(1) Cur Cri R 486.

13. Re-trial.—Where there was appeal against conviction and retrial after lapse of 9 years. Direction of appellate court to retrial it would not be conducive to justice if retrial is allowed to continue. Kaur Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 2 CC Cas 263 (P&H).

Case was triable by Court of Sessions which came into force on 15.2.1992 but amendment of Section 354 in IPC (Substantive law) came into force on 1.4.1992—Substantive law always prevails over procedural law—Matter remanded back to lower court. Ardhala Veera Venkata Vidya Sagar v. State, (1994) 2 ALT 8 : 1994 (1) ALT (Cr) 615 (AP).

Amendment in Cr PC making offence under Section 354, IPC, which was triable by Court of Session came into force on 15.2.1992—Amendment in IPC, came into force on 1.4.1992—Offence committed on 18.3.1992, i.e., earlier to amendment in IPC. Substantive law of IPC, always prevails over procedural law of Cr PC.—Held, thus offence committed is triable only by Magistrate of first class and not by Court of Session even though procedure of law was amended earlier. Matter remitted back to Magistrate for trial. Ardhala Veera Venkata Vidya Sagar v. State, (1994) 1 ALT (Cri) 615 : (1994) 2 ALT 8 (AP).

14. Probation.—Release of the convict under Section 3 of the Probation of Offenders Act—It was, hence, held that Courts should not be lenient in awarding punishment for the said offence after amendment and provisions of Probation of Offenders Act should not be invoked readily. Public Prosecutor v. Godise Devaiah, (1994) 1 ALT (Cri) 76 : 1994 Cr LJ 349 (AP).

15. Intention.—The accused caught prosecutrix and pulled her hand. She put up resistance established by shouts raised by her, injuries on her hand and broken pieces of bangles on the spot. This was corroborated by evidence of eye-witness. The same is sufficient to prove knowledge and intention to outrage modesty on part of accused. Hence, acquittal set aside and accused sentenced to pay fine and part of which may be paid as compensation to prosecutrix. State of Maharashtra v. Manohar, 1994 Cri LJ 2536 (Bom).

16. Quashing of.—Although FIR itself does not disclose offences under Sections 323 and 354, IPC against the revisionist, the Investigating Agency proceeded with the investigation on the very date of lodging of inordinately delayed FIR and examined all the five witnesses on the very date of initiation of the P.S. case in question under Sections 323, 354, 309 and 34, IPC. On completion of investigation the charge-sheet was, however, submitted on 09.05.2002 in a very mechanical fashion. On perusal of the DB the perfunctory nature of investigation is manifestly clear. Further, it is also a clear case of sheer non-application of mind on the part of the I.O. Rather, he has neglected to scrutinize the materials brought on record in its proper perspective prior to formation of his opinion that a prima facie charge under Sections 323, 354, 309 and 34, IPC has been well established. None of the five witnesses examined by him stated anything implicating the revisionist as the molester of the alleged victim and there was also nothing in the statements to suggest that the de facto complainant was assaulted by the revisionist. In fact, the de-facto complainant herself has also not levelied any allegation of molestation or assault against the revisionist within the four corners of the FIR.

In such a factual scenario, Court has no hesitation in holding that contents of the FIR even taken at their at face value accepting in its entirety do not constitute prima facie offences under Sections 354 and 323, IPC against the accused revisionist. Court is also to hold further that the evidence collected in support of allegations made in the FIR also do not make out any case under Sections 354, 323 and 34, IPC against the accused revisionist. In submission of charge-sheet claiming that offences under Sections 354 and 323, IPC have been established prima facie against the accused is of no consequence since evidence and materials so collected by the I.O. were not properly appreciated by the I.O. for the reasons best known to him.

Therefore, viewing the entire matter on the anvil of the viability of the persecution case, this Court convinced to hold that it is a baseless case of a mala fide and malicious prosecution and as such continuance of this criminal proceeding would be a sheer abuse of the process of the Court. So, Court of the clear opinion that it is a fit case where the entire proceeding including the charge-sheet should be quashed so far as it relates to the accused revisionist in exercise of the power under Section 482, CrPC. Biplab Kumar Chatterjee vs. State, 2010 (3) CrLJ 2638 (Cal).

17. Essential Ingredients of offence.—In order to constitute the offence under Sec. 354 IPC mere knowledge that the modesty of a woman is likely to be outraged is sufficient without any deliberate intention of having such outrage alone for its object. There is no abstract conception of modesty that can apply to all cases. (See State of Punjab vs. Major Singh, AIR 1967 SC 63). A careful approach has to be adopted by the Court while dealing with a case alleging outrage of modesty. The essential ingredients of the offence under Sec. 354 IPC are as under :

(i) that the person assaulted must be a woman;

(ii) that the accused must have used criminal force on her; and

(iii) that the criminal force must have been used on the woman intending thereby to outrage her modesty.

Intention is not the sole criterion of the offence punishable under Sec. 354 IPC, and it can be committed by a person assaulting or using criminal force to any woman, if he knows that by such act the modesty of the woman is likely to be affected. Knowledge and intention are essentially things of the mind and cannot be demonstrated like physical objects. The existence of intention or knowledge has to be culled out from various circumstances in which and upon whom the alleged offence is alleged to have been committed. A victim of molestation and indignation is in the same position as an injured witness and her testimony should receive the same weight. Shekara vs. State of Karnataka, 2009 (1) Crimes 472 : 2009 (4) JT 360 : 2009 (3) Scale 104 : 2009 (2) SCR 744 : 2009 (2) Supreme 301 : 2009 (2) JCC 1074.

18. Rape is most serious offence then outraging modesty.—Section 354 is attracted when a person assault or uses criminal force to outrage the modesty and the offence is punishable with imprisonment upto 2 years. Offence of rape is actually entering the private part of a man into the private part of woman. Thus, these three offences stand on different grades. The offense under Sections 354 and 509 are minor in relation to the offence under Section 376, IPC. The offence under Sec. 509 is complete as soon as the accused makes certain sound or gesture even though he does not assault or uses any force against the woman. Offence under Section 354 is complete as soon as assault or criminal force is used against the woman even though no attempt is made to commit rape. Offence of rape punishable under Sec. 376 is the most serious offence against a woman. Normally, to commit the offence of rape, the accused assaults and uses criminal force and it is followed by the penetration. In view of this, when a person is convicted for the offence under Section 376, IPC there is no logic or reason to separately convict and sentence the accused for the offence punishable under Section 354 also, if it pertains to the same woman and the offence is committed in the same transaction. It is possible that the accused may assault on another, during the same transaction. In that case he may be convicted and sentenced for both the offences separately. But in the present case, the accused committed rape on the prosecutrix. No other woman or any other transaction was involved in this case. Therefore, there could be no justification for the conviction of the accused for offence under Sec. 354 also when he is convicted for the offence punishable under Section 376, IPC. Salim Alim Shamsher Shaikh vs State of Maharashtra, 2010 (4) CriLJ 4064 (Bom).

19. Attempt to rape—Outrage Modesty of Woman—An attempt to commit an offence can be said to begin when the preparations are complete and culprit commences to do something with the intention of committing the offence and which is a step towards the commission of the offence. The moment he commences to do an act with the necessary intention, he commences his attempt to commit the offence. This is what exactly provisions of Sec. 511 IPC require. In the present case accused has made preparations, his preparations were complete when he had put off his pant and took out his male organ in order to fulfill his lust, he put his male organ into the mouth of the prosecutrix and then struck against her private part or vice versa the accused had commenced his act and it was subjected towards the commission of offence, but in the meantime he was interrupted by the calls of the mother of the prosecutrix and fled away from the spot. Thus, series of acts inevitably leads to the commission of the offence which accused neither foresaw nor intended, happens to prevent this. Therefore, there is no escape but to hold accused guilty of the offence of attempt to rape and outraging the modesty of the prosecutrix. Kamal Kumar v. State of H.P., 2009 CriLJ 36 (HP).

Sec. 355. Assault or criminal force with intent to dishonour person otherwise than on grave provocation.—Whoever assaults or uses criminal force to any person, intending thereby to dishonour that person, otherwise than on grave and sudden provocation given by that person shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Synopsis

1. Amendment 2180
2. Notes 2180

1. Amendment.—In India for "British India" the word "India" have been successively substituted by Adaptation of Laws Orders of 1948 and 1950 and Act 3 of 1951, Section 3 and Sch.

2. Notes.—Accused separately charged with kidnapping and abduction can be tried for each of such offences in one trial. 146 Ind Cas 305 : 37 CWN 1074 : AIR 1933 Cal 676.

Procuration of minor girl. Provisions of Ss. 359 and 361 clearly shows that the legislature did not confine to constitute the offence only if a minor girl is taken away from the place where she used to reside but the emphasis is upon taking away the girl from the "lawful guardianship". Sections 359 and 361, IPC do not spell-out any territorial jurisdiction for committing the offence. Thus the rigour of the law travels with the ward/subject and any person involving himself or herself in the offence of kidnapping or procuring a minor girl at any point of time would also come within the purview of Sections 359 and 361, IPC. Therefore, even if the victim girl was initially enticed by the co-accused, giving company to the main accused in the half-way for taking the girl to different places would be sufficient to affirm conviction of appellant-accused under S. 366A as well. Taru Das v. State of Tripura, 2008 CriLJ 3143 (Gau).

Sec. 360. Kidnapping from India.—Whoever conveys any person beyond the limits of India without the consent of that person, or of some person legally authorised to consent on behalf of that person, is said to kidnap that person from India.

Scope.—The offence of kidnapping from British India, consists, according to this definition, in conveying any person out of the protection of law without his consent, vide 8 MLT 91; 1910 MWN 262 ; 20 Bom LR 372 : 19 Cr LJ 602 or the consent of some person legally authorised to consent on his behalf ; or with such consent, when it is not freely or intentionally given, but is obtained by deception or under any of these circumstances which have been explained ; vide Section 90 to invalidate a consent). This offence is sometimes committed by means of assault, and in sometimes attended with restraint. But this will not always be the case. For example, a labourer who has been induced to embark on board of a ship by false assurances that he shall be taken to a country where he shall have good wages, but when the captain of the ship intends to sell for a slave, or otherwise illegally to dispose of, may be conveyed beyond the limits of British India and so kidnapped without being either assaulted or restrained. This offence may be committed on a child, or on a grown up man or woman. The carrying of a grown up person by force from on place in British India to another ; and the enslaving him within the British territories, are offences sufficient for under the heads of restraint and confinement.

The enticing a grown up person by false promises to go from one place in British India to another place also within British India may be subject for a civil action and under certain circumstances for a criminal prosecution. But it does not come under the head of kidnapping. The offence can only be committed on a grown up man by conveying him beyond the limits of the British territories in India.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Sec. 361. Kidnapping from lawful guardianship.—Whoever takes or entices any minor under "sixteen" years of age if a male, or under "eighteen" years of age if a female, or any person of unsound mind, out of the keeping of the lawful guardian such minor or person of unsound mind, without the consent of such guardian, is said to kidnap such minor or person from lawful guardianship.

Explanation.—The words "lawful guardian" in this section include any person lawfully entrusted with the care or custody of such minor or other person.

Exception.—This action does not extend to the act of any person who in good faith believes himself to be the father of an illegitimate child, or who in good faith believes himself to be entitled to the lawful custody of such child, unless such act is committed for an immoral or unlawful purpose.

2. State amendment, Manipur.—In its application to the State of Manipur for the word "eighteen" substitute the word "fifteen".—Act 80 of 1949, read with Act 81 of 1971.

3. Object.—The object of this section and cognate sections is at least as much to protect children of tender age from being abducted or seduced for improper purposes, as for the protection of the rights of parents and guardians. 8 Cal 971. The object of the section is to protect the minor children from being seduced for improper purposes as to protect the rights and privileges guardian having the lawful charge or custody of the minor wards. AIR 1973 SC 819.

The object of Section 361 seems as much to protect the minor children from being seduced for improper purposes as to protect the rights and privileges of guardians having the lawful charge or custody of their minor wards. The graveman of this offence lies in the taking or enticing of a minor under the ages specified in this section, out of the keeping of the lawful guardian without the consent of such guardian. The words takes or entices any minor . . . . out of the keeping of the lawful guardian of such minor' in Section 361 are significant. The use of the word 'keeping' in the context connotes the idea of charge, protection, maintenance and control; further the guardian's charge and control appears to be compatible with the independence of action and movement in the minor, the guardian's protection and control of the minor being available, whenever necessity arises. Section 361 is designed to protect the sacred right of the guardians with respect to their minor wards. On plain reading of this section the consent of the minor who is taken or enticed is wholly immaterial it is only the guardian's consent which takes the case out of its purview. Nor is it necessary that the taking or enticing must be shown to have been by means of force or fraud. Persuasion by the accused person which creates willingness on the part of the minor to be taken out of the keeping of the lawful guardian would be sufficient to attract the Section. Parkash v. State of Haryana, 2004 Cr LJ 595 : AIR 2004 SC 227 : 2004(1) SCC 339 : 2003(10) JT 58 : 2004(1) Crimes 98 (SC) : 2003(8) Supreme 555 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 290.

The gravemen of the offence lies in the taking or enticing a minor under the age specified in the section out of the keeping of lawful guardianship without consent. AIR 1961 Jab LJ 870.

4. Application.—"This offence consists in taking a minor, or a person of unsound mind, out of the keeping of his lawful guardian, without the consent of such guardian. This mode of kidnapping, like that defined in the last proceeding section, may be committed with assault or the use of criminal force, and without being attended with any restraint. A child, for example, who is decayed from its guardians, who soon forgets his home, and who consents to remain with the kidnapper, cannot be said to have assaulted or restrained, but it is nonetheless kidnapped. The consent of the kidnapped person is immaterial and it is not necessary that the taking, or enticing should be shown to be by means of force or fraud".—Morgan and Macpherson.

5. Essence of the offence.—The essence of the offence of kidnapping as defined in this section is the taking of the minor out of the keeping of the guardian without the guardian's consent. 17 PR 1916 Cr ; 4 WR 6 ; 10 WR 33 ; 3 NWP 146 ; 95 Ind Cas 372 ; 27 Cal 1041 ; 28 Cr LJ 820.

Consent of the minor who is taken or enticed is wholly immaterial, it is only the guardian's consent which takes the case out of the purview of Section 361, IPC. Nor is it necessary that the taking or enticing must be shown to have been by means of force or fraud. Persuasion by the accused person which creates willingness on the part of the minor to be taken out of the keeping of the lawful guardian would be sufficient to attract the section. The use of word 'keeping' in Section 361 is designed to protect the sacred right of the guardians with respect to their minor wards. Parkash v. State of Haryana, 2004 Cr LJ 595 (SC): (2004) 1 SCC 339 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 290 : AIR 2004 SC 227 : 2004(1) SCC 339 : 2003(10) JT 58 : 2004(1) Crimes 98 (SC) : 2003(8) Supreme 555 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 290.

Motive has nothing to do with the offence under this section. 31 All 448 ; 18 Ind Cas 653. No hard and fast rule can be laid down as to the circumstances which should be considered sufficient for holding whether the accused is guilty of such 'taking' as is punishable under the law. Each case has to be decided on its own facts. 1951 Jab LJ 870. It is difficult to advance direct evidence of intention in most cases. It can only be inferred from circumstances. AIR 1955 All 78 : 1955 Cr LJ 252. Use of bruten force or fraud in kidnapping is not necessary 1961 Jab LJ 870 (the word takes or "entices" are comprehensive enough and are of widest importance so that no one' who is responsible for removing in children the keeping of his or her guardian whether physically or inducent, may escape from the penalty of law). See also 1978 Cr LJ 1494 (if the ingredients of the offence under Section 363, IPC, are proved along with the intention or knowledge that the girl might be compelled to marry against her will, a charge under Section 366, IPC, is established) ; AIR 1955 SC 574 ; AIR 1956 SC 116 ; (1970) 2 Cr LJ 1348 : AIR 1976 Guj 178 ; AIR 1968 Punj 439 ; (1969) 71 Punj LJ 672 ; AIR 1967 All 158 ; AIR 1965 SC 942 (overruling AIR 1958 Ker 121 : 1958 Cr LJ 637 ; AIR 1973 SC 2313 ; 1977 Cr LJ 1255 : 1977 Kant LJ 45 ; 1966 Guj LR 378 ; 1976 Cr LJ 363. The fact that the kidnapped minor girl is of easy visha is no defence to a charge under this section. 1976 Cr LJ 363. The two words "takes" and "enters" are intends to be read to the so that each takes to some extent its to him and content from each other. AIR 1973 SC 2313 : 1973 Cr LJ 1541 ; 1983 Cr LJ 1819 : 1983 Cr LJ 459.

Kidnapper induced minor girl to marry him and kidnapped her for this purpose from lawful guardianship of her parents—Minor girl even consented to marry him without consent of her parents—Such inducement for unlawful purpose of marrying a minor girl is illegal attracting Section 361—Mere persuation or enticement is sufficient for penal action even if use of force or fraud is not proved. Meharunnissa Khan v. Kamlesh Naik, 1994 B Cr C 111 (Bom).

It requires movement of any person from one place to another by force or by deceitful means. In instant case, there was no use of force for purposes of taking. Further, no deceitful misrepresentation was made. Hence, offence of kidnapping is not made out. Santosh Kumar v. State of UP, 1994 (31) ACC 587.

6. Age.—Although it may be recognized that ossification is an important test for determining the age. yet having regard to the practical difficulties which would attend the application of this test, it cannot be said that ossification is an indispensable test for determining the age of a girl. 15 Pat 817 : AIR 1937 Pat 263 : 38 Cr LJ 673. Even if the person kidnapped may be below the age of majority under the Majority Act, the offence of kidnapping will not fall under this section, if the kidnapped minor girl was below the age specified in the section. AIR 1955 SC 374 : 1955 Cr LJ 1296 : 51 Cr LJ 1186 : AIR 1960 Cal 406 ; 1964 (2) Cr LJ 102 ; 1966 All WR (HC) 572 (benefit of doubt in case of doubtful proof of age).

7. Scope.—The section and the explanation are express and exhaustive in their terms, and to constitute the offence of kidnapping or abducting, the following things must be proved. A taking and enticing a minor under fourteen years of age, if a male, or under sixteen years of age, if a female, or any person of unsound mind from the custody of the following persons ; (1) the natural guardians ; (2) the legal guardians, if the natural guardians be dead ; or (3) a person lawfully entrusted with the care and custody of a minor. The last kind of guardians includes all persons other than those mentioned in (1) and (2) who, for the time being, may be lawfully entrusted with the care and custody of a minor, such as a school master or a friend at whose house the minor may be staying or such like person standing in a similar degree of relationship. But this section has no application to self constituted guardians not to persons such as waifs or strays who are taken up and maintained by charitable institutions. 4 Pat LJ 74. The offence of kidnapping from lawful guardianship is complete when the minor is actually taken from lawful guardianship, and it is not an offence continuing as long as minor is kept out of such guardianship. 26 M 454 : 2 Weir 296. A child, ten years of age, is prima facie subject to guardianship, and no one is at liberty to take away such child without permission properly obtained. 3 Bom 178. The offence of kidnapping is not necessarily complete as soon as the minor is removed from the house of the guardian. When the act of kidnapping would be complete would appear to be a question of fact to be determined according to the circumstances of each case. 27 Cal 1041 : 4 CWN 645 (FB). Where a minor girl was driven from her parental roof and was found some days thence, in the company of the accused no offence of kidnapping is established. 1912 MWN 538 : 13 Cr LJ 598 : 16 Ind Cas 166. The husband of a Hindu minor girl is her lawful guardian. It amounts to kidnapping even if, without any criminal intention, the father takes away his minor daughter from the lawful guardianship of the husband. 17 Cal 298. A person who is in fact the father of a child and therefore in law is entitled to the lawful custody of the child cannot come within the scope of this section even if he takes the child from the keeping of his mother. AIR 1938 Mad 656 : 1938 MMN 385 : 47 MLW 568 : (1938) 1 MLJ 453. To bring a case within the purview of the expression "lawfully entrusted" in explanation to Section 361, it must be clearly shown that not only the mother of girl requested the alleged guardian to take the girl under his protection but that he accepted the trust. 1930 Cr LJ 649 : AIR 1930 Sind 164. According to Hindu Law, the husband's sapindas are the guardians of a minor widow in preference to her father and his relations. 27 PR 1915 Cr. The question whether the taking of a minor girl out of the custody of her lawful guardian was or was not complete at a given moment is a question for determination with reference to the circumstances proved in each particular case. It may no doubt be difficult in some cases of kidnapping from lawful guardianship to determine the precise moment at which the taking is complete. Speaking generally, the keeping of the guardian would be at an end when the person of the minor had been transferred from the custody of the guardian or some person on his behalf into the custody of some person not entitled to custody of the minor. 55 PLR 1916 : 25 PWR 1916 Cr : 17 Cr LJ 236 : 34 Ind Cas 652. The pledging of girl to secure a loan is not a legal contract and may not be enforced in law but if a minor is retained in the custody of a person with the consent of the lawful guardian he will not commit the offence of kidnapping under Section 361, Penal Code. 10 Pat LT 326 : 119 Ind Cas 72 : 30 Cr LJ 580 : AIR 1929 Pat 316 : 1922 Cr C 97. Where a married girl under the age of 18 left her parent's home of her own free will and went to the accused's house and asked him to take her away to some other place as she wanted to avoid going to her father-in-law's house and the accused took her to another town, it was held that the offence committed was not of abduction but one of kidnapping from lawful guardianship as it could not be said that the girl had abandoned her guardian with the intention of not returning to him but simply with a particular purpose. 1953 All LJ 78 : AIR 1953 All 412 : 1953 Cr LJ 924. Kidnapping is an offence of guardianship and the moment the minor is taken or enticed away out of the keeping of her lawful guardian, the offence is complete and is per se punishable unlike abduction where a particular purpose is necessary irrespective of the fact whether there is evidence that the kidnapping was with the intention of compelling her to marry against her will. AIR 1961; Bom 282 : 63 Bom LR 408 : 1961 (2) Cr LJ 578 : 1962 All Cr 14.

The accused enticed away a minor married girl under the age of 18 from the keeping of the lawful guardianship of her husband, without the consent of the guardian. The action in the case commenced on a complaint made to the police by the husband. This would be an offence under Section 363, Penal Code. The same facts would also constitute an offence under Section 498 of the Penal Code and by virtue of Section 199 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. No Court can take cognizance of it except on a complaint made by the husband of the woman. (1954) MLJ (Cr) 594 : (1964) 2 MLJ 430 : 1964 All WR (Supp) 48 : 1964 All Cr R 521.

The word "takes" in Section 361 means "cause to go" "to escort" "to get into possession". In order to prove an offence under Section 363, the prosecution must show that the accused took some active part in the girl leaving her lawful guardian's custody and taking shelter with him. 1960 Ker LJ 273 ; 29 Cut LT 602 : ILR 1963 Cut 850.

Where a girl of less than 18 years is taken away from the keeping of her father by the accused with the object of marriage or reduction, he is guilty of an offence of kidnapping punishable under Section 366, Penal Code, notwithstanding the fact that the girl accompanied him of her own accord and not a result of force or misrepresentation. 1962 (1) 841 (Punj) overruled (1963) 2 Punj 678 : 1963 Cut LJ 454 : 1964 (1) Cr LJ 220 : AIR 1964 Punj 83.

Even where the minor girl is kept by her father at the house of his relative, she still continues to be in the lawful guardianship of the former. But when the girl (who though a minor attained the age of discretion and is on the verge of attaining majority and is a senior college student) from the house of the relation where she is kept, herself telephones the accused to meet her at a certain place, and goes there, to meet him and finding him waiting with his car gets into that car of her own accord, and the accused takes her to various places and ultimately to the Sub-Registrar's office where they get into an agreement to marry registered and there is no suggestion that this was done by force or blandishment or anything like that on the part of the accused but it is clear from the evidence that the insistence of marriage came from her side, the accused by complying with her wishes can by no stretch of imagination be said to have 'taken' out of the keeping of her lawful guardianship that is the father. (1965) 1 SCWR 512 : AIR 1965 SC 942 ; see also 1964 BLJR 914.

The most important ingredient of this section is taking or enticing away a minor or a person of unsound mind from keeping of the lawful guardian. Before a person is said to have kidnapped a minor, there must be some proof of his having done something which led to removal of the minor from the keeping of his/her guardian. In the statement of the petitioner there is nothing to suggest that the respondent induced Raj Bala in any manner to take this step. The statement of the petitioner does not indicate how the respondent was the pre-intimate or the immediate cause of victim going out of the keeping of the petitioner. It is not shown that the respondent took some active step in persuading or inducing Raj Bala to leave her home. It is obvious that she left her home before stepping into the car of the respondent. Who induced her to leave the house has not been indicted in the statement of the petitioner. It can be, therefore, concluded that Raj Bala left her home and came to the car of the respondent in the company of her mother and brother without there being any persuation, pressure, inducement and force proceeding from the respondent. As soon as Raj Bala came out of the house in the company of her mother and brother, the act of taking her out from the guardianship of the petitioner was complete before they sat in the car of the respondent. It may be that the part played by the respondent in providing the car could be regarded as extending the facility to Raj Bala, her mother and brother, but that part cannot be regarded as taking out the minor from keeping of the lawful guardian. Madan Lal v. (Dr.) Jaswant Batra, (1994) 1 CC Cases 383 at p. 386 (P & H).

8. Word "takes or entice".—The word "taking" in this section is nothing but physical taking. 15 Cr LJ 630. The taking away must be by some over act. 27 Ind Cas 181. The word "taking" is not confined to mere physical taking. It signifies some act done which is the proximate cause of the person going out. AIR 1928 Mad 585 : 54 MLJ 456. Abduction need not be forcible. 3 WR 9 ; AIR 1949 Orissa 22 : 50 Cr LJ 650 ; 27 Cal 1041 ; AIR 1928 Pat 159 : 28 Cr LJ 820. The offence is completed as soon as the minor is actually taken away from lawful guardianship. AIR 1926 Pat 493 : 5 Pat. 536 : 7 PLT 812 : see also AIR 1930 Oudh 289 ; AIR 1950 Cal 406. The law is that to constitute the offence of kidnapping, the taking need not be by force, actual or constructive. AIR 1958 Ker 8 : ILR 1957 Ker 781 : (1957) 1 Mad LJ (Cr) 662 ; There is an essential distinction between the two words 'take' and 'entice'. The mental attitude of the minor is not of relevance in the case of taking. The word 'take' means the cause to go, to escort or to get into possession. The word 'entice' involves an idea of inducement by exciting hope or desire in the other. AIR 1955 Andhra 59 : ILR 1955 Andhra 290 : 1955 Cr LJ 581 ; see also AIR 1958 Ker 121 : 1957 Mad LJ (Cr) 516 : ILR 1957 Ker 591 : 1958 Cr LJ 637. (It must be shown that the prisoner took some active step by persuasion or otherwise to cause the girl to leave the house).

The two words "takes" and "entices" as used in Section 361, IPC are intended to be read together so that each takes to some extent its colour and content from the other. If the minor leaves her paternal home completely uninfluenced by any promise, offer or inducement emanating from the guilty party, then the latter cannot be considered to have committed the offence as defined in Section 361, IPC. Parkash v. State of Haryana, 2004 Cr LJ 595 (SC) : (2004) 1 SCC 339 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 290 : AIR 2004 SC 227 : 2004(1) SCC 339 : 2003(10) JT 58 : 2004(1) Crimes 98 (SC) : 2003(8) Supreme 555 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 290.

The word 'take' means, so more than the sense in which one would use the word if the one was taking on sister to cinema. The extent to which the girl is a consenting party is a matter for consideration under the question of sentence. AIR 1964 Punj 83 : 1963 Cr LJ 454 ; AIR 1968 Punj 439 ; (1969) 71 Punj LR 688 (the word 'take' implies want of wish and absence of desire of the person taken) ; AIR 1973 SC 2313 ('takes' does not necessarily mean 'taking by force') 1977 Cr LJ 1255 (evidence lacking about soliciting or persuading). In AIR 1965 SC 942 (overruling AIR 1949 All 710 in part) it was pointed out that there is a distinction before 'taking' and allowing a minor to accompany a person ; see also 1976 Cr LJ 363 (want of wish and absence of desire of the person taken) ; 1979 Ch Cr C 83.

When from evidence of girl itself it is established that she accompanied accused of her own will without any compulsion of accused, no offence of kidnapping is made out. Gourish v. State of Goa, 1997 Cri LJ 1018 (Bom).

9. Minor.—The age or mental incapacity of the person taken is a matter of fact as to which the accused may either have no opinion or may have no erroneous opinion. It was decided in Reg. v. Prince, LR 2 CC 154, that even a bona fide belief reasonably entertained that a girl was over sixteen, was no defence".—Mayne's Criminal Law, Section 469 ; see also AIR 1929 Pat 651; 12 Mys LJ 133 ; AIR 1929 All 82 : 1929 All 82 : 1929 ALJ 111 : 30 Cr LJ 218 Minority is determined by Section 3 of the Majority Act. 37 M 567; AIR 1962 Manipur 5 : 1962 (1) Cr LJ 49 ; AIR 1957 Punj 78 : 1957 Cr LJ 475 (value of ossification test) ; 1961 Jab LJ 76 : 1961 MPLJ 267 ; 1960 Mad WN 674 : AIR 1958 Ori 224 : 24 Cut LT 261 : 1958 Cr LJ 1211 ; AIR 1958 Ker 8 : 1957 Mad LJ (Cr) 662 : ILR 1957 Ker 781 : 1958 Cr LJ 83 (Proof of age—medical evidence—use of).

The age limit was raised term 14 to 16 in girls and from 16 to 18 in case of boys by the Amending Act 42 of 1949. So kidnapping a girl above 16 years of age from her guardian's keeping is not an offence under S. 361. AIR 1955 SC 574 : 1955 CrLJ 1296.

When evidence of mother of prosecutrix and that of her school headmaster corroborated by medical evidence show age of prosecutrix below 16 years, it is to be relied upon. Vishnu v. State of Maharashtra, 1997 Cri LJ 1724 (Bom).

10. Unsound mind.—It may be that this section ought to include person who have been made unconscious ; but an unconscious person cannot be said to be of unsound mind. AIR 1939 Lah 224 ; 40 Cr LJ 706.

11. Consent of minor.—"Consent of the minor" is of no avail. AIR 1930 Cal 437 : 51 CLJ 352 ; see also AIR 1930 All 19 : 31 Cr LJ 85 ; 18 Cr LJ 18 : 17 PR 1916 (Cr) ; AIR 1926 Lah 547 : 26 Cr LJ 851 : 95 Ind Cas 931 ; AIR 1926 Lah 677 : 27 Cr LJ 1018 : 96 Ind Cas 874 ; AIR 1927 Nag 279 : 28 Cr LJ 659 ; AIR 1929 All 703 : 30 Cr LJ 985 ; AIR 1959 Ker 197 : 1959 Cr LJ 716 ; AIR 1965 Raj 90 : 1965 (1) Cr LJ 483.

A minor may not be competent to give her consent to her taking but a minor is certainly competent to leave the protection of the guardian of his or her own accord. AIR 1957 Cal 589 : 1957 Cr LJ 1114 ; AIR 1968 Punj 438; 1976 Cr LJ 363 (guardians conduct).

12. Keeping out of the lawful guardian.—The minor does not cease to be in keeping of the guardian unless the guardian himself abandons the minor or the minor having attained years of discretion voluntarily and definitely abandons the protection of the guardian. AIR 1949 Orissa 22 : 50 Cr LJ 650 ; AIR 1950 Cal 406 ; AIR 1926 Cal 467 : 26 Cr LJ 977. The word "keeping" is a word of wide import and would cover a case where a minor is merely within the protection or care of the said guardian or depend upon him for his maintenance, support or substance whenever necessity arises. AIR 1955 All 78 : 1955 Cr LJ 252 ; AIR 1955 Andhra 59 : ILR (1955) Andhra 290 : 1955 Cr LJ 581.

The mere fact of a minor is away from house, say on a public street, or in a market or such other place does not mean that she is not in the keeping of the guardian. 1980 WLN (UC) 268 ; AIR 1967 All 158 : 1967 Cr LJ 311. When a minor leaves the protection of her guardian of her accord and marries the accused subsequently, there can be no conviction, 1978 Cr LJ 1494.

13. Constructive guardianship.—A girl who has been turned out by her husband and was free to go any where she liked could not be said to be in the constructive guardianship of her husband, and the accused who takes her to his house, is not guilty of kidnapping from lawful guardianship, although she is below 16 years of age, 167 Ind Cas 676 : 38 Cr LJ 401 : 1936 A Cr C 221 : 1936 AWR 1065 : AIR 1937 All 182.

14. Lawful.—The word "lawful" means that which is opposed to unlawful, viz. legal, proper, right, without fraud, pressure or constraint. This word does not necessarily mean that the person who contrusts a minor to the care or custody of another must stand in possession of a person owing to legal duty or obligation to the mother. It is sufficient if the entrusting is effected without illegality or the commission of any unlawful act by a person legally competent to do so 4 Pat LJ 74 : 49 Ind Cas 481. The mother of an illegitimate child is her lawful guardian. 8 Cal 971. The minor must be under the guardianship of some one, otherwise the offence is not committed. 13 Cr LJ 528. In matters of lawful guardianship, preference should be given to those who are entitled to guardianship under the Guardians and Words Act. 15 Cr LJ 640 ; Rat Un Cr C 820. In the last two cases eternal relatives were preferred to paternal relatives and the latter were convicted for taking away the minor from the guardianship of the former. According to Hindu Law, husband's relatives are the lawful guardians of the minor widow. 27 PR 1915 Cr. Where husband of a minor girl sold her, the purchaser is her lawful guardian. 7 PR 1911 Cr. A minor brother cannot be the guardian of his sister. AIR 1922 Lah 75 ; AIR 1921 Lah 316 : 3 LLJ 588 : 67 Ind Cas 831 ; but see AIR 1929 Lah 835. Where a minor girl leaves her husband's house without any persuation, inducement or blandishment held out to her by the accused, and then, she goes to him, he cannot be convicted of an offence under this section. 73 Ind Cas 260 ; see also 1 LBR 205 ; 87 Ind Cas 513 : 30 CWN 215 ; but see 36 Ind Cas 580 : 14 ALJ 792. When a father sent his daughter to live in a house with few of his relatives and one of their relatives married the daughter in that house without the consent of the father. Held, that there was no taking out of lawful guardianship. 14 Cr LJ 630. The husband of a

Hindu minor girl is her lawful guardian and her father cannot take her away without her husband's consent without committing an offence of kidnapping. 17 Cal 298. In this section, the Legislature has advisedly preferred the phrase "keeping of the lawful guardian" to the word "possession" which frequently recurs in the Code in lawful connection with the inanimate objects. The word "keeping" connotes the fact that it is compatible with independence of action and movement in the object kept. It implies neither prevention nor detention but rather maintenance, protection and control, manifested not by continual action, but as available on necessity arising. This relation between the minor and the guardian is certainly not dissolved so long as the minor can, at will, take advantage of it and place herself within the sphere of its operation. 6 Bom LR 785 : 1 Cr LJ 93. Where minor is taken away from de facto guardianship with consent of alleged civil guardian, Sessions Judge should enquire into question of civil guardianship before deciding the case. AIR 1931 Cal 446 : 32 Cr LJ 888 : 58 Cal 897 : 35 CWN 195. The words "lawful guardian" in this section are used in a wider sense. Every person entrusted with the care or custody of a minor is a lawful guardian. AIR 1934 Pat 170 : 1934 Cr C 367 : 15 PLT 229 : 35 Cr LJ 814. It includes the "de facto" guardian, 52 Cr LJ 1238 : AIR 1951 Assam 122. The husband of a muslim minor girl while taking her to his home a short visit to her mother's home or an uncles home is the rightful and lawful custodian of the minor wife within the meaning of Section 361. AIR 1952 Tri 27. The term does not include a person with whom the minor by consent of legal guardian resides. 12 Mys LJ 133. The test of lawful guardianship is that the infant or minor should be in a position to apply to his guardian for protection. AIR 1929 Sind 249 ; 17 Cr LJ 236. Mother of a Mahommedan girl of 7 of age, is her guardian and not her husband. 27 CWN 531. The expression "lawful guardian" in this section includes a de facto guardian, AIR 1942 Pat 212 : 44 Cr LJ 590. Where a minor leaves the immediate custody of her lawful guardian for a temporary purpose such as a visit to friends, she will deemed to be still in his keeping for the purpose of this section. Ibid. Mere de facto guardianship cannot be set up so as to convict the real civil law guardian of an offence under this section. 43 Cr LJ 918 : AIR 1943 Pat 109. Where a minor abandons the house of her guardian of her own accord and has no intention of returning to the house, she cannot be held to continue in the keeping of her lawful guardian. AIR 1941 Oudh 567 : 42 Cr LJ 728.

The words 'lawful guardian' is apparent from the language of Section 361 are of wider connotation than the words "legal guardian." AIR 1958 Bom 381 : 60 Bom LR 329 : ILR 1958 Bom 505 : 1959 Cr LJ 1296 (father forcibly removing the girl from the custody of the mother given under decree of divorce) ; see also AIR 1958 Bom 359 : ILR 1954 Bom 784 : 1954 Cr LJ 1032.

Under Section 6 (a) proviso of the Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act 1956 though the father is the natural guardian the mother is entitled upto 5 years. Under the Muhammadan Law, the mother is entitled only to the person of her minor upto a certain age according to the sex of the child. But she is not natural guardian of the minor. AIR 1918 PC 11 ; AIR 1968 Ker 21 : 1968 Cr LJ 62.

The terms "lawful guardian" does not include a person who has himself gained possession of the minor by committing an offence under this section. 1974 Punj LR 370. Distinction between the "lawful guardian" and "legal guardian". AIR 1962 Pat 21 :

1962 BLJR 41. Offences by temporary guardian under this section is committed when the removal of the boy below the age of 14 is made out of the keeping of the lawful guardian. 1964 Bihar LJ 914 (AIR 1929 Pat 316 cited).

15. Consent.—In order to constitute an offence under this section there must be taking of the minor out of the guardian without the guardian's consent. A consent given on a misrepresentation of fact is one given under a misconception of fact within the meaning of Section 90 of the Penal Code, and the consent of a guardian so obtained is not useful as consent under this section. 17 PR 1916 Cr. The consent of the girl does not affect the offence. 2 WR 61 : 2 WR 5 ; 7 WR 36 ; Reg. v. Mankletow. Dears CC 159. Where a girl originally goes to an institution with the consent of her mother who is her guardian, if the mother subsequently changes her mind, the detention of the girl by the institution does not constitute an offence of kidnapping. AIR 1939 Sind 152 : 40 Cr LJ 698.

The consent required is a free consent given by the guardian without fear or misconception of facts, not wrested out of him by intimidation or coercion. Vide 28 All 664. Consent of the prosecutrix is not relevant except in reduction of sentence. AIR 1968 Punj 439 ; 1976 Cr LJ 369.

16. Charge.—A charge of kidnapping from lawful guardianship should contain the name of the guardian. 1 Wyman's Rev. Civ. and Crim. Reporter 16. In a charge, the Judge should use the words of the section and must not substitute phraseology of his own. 13 CWN 754.

17. When the offence is completed.—The offence under this section is completed the moment a minor as described in this section is taken out of the custody of a lawful guardian and is not a continuing one. So there cannot be abetment of this offence by conduct which commences only after the minor has once been completely taken out of the keeping of the guardian. 38 All 664 : 14 ALJ 765 ; see also 6 PR 1894 Cr. The offence is complete when the minor is actually taken away from lawful guardianship and it is not an offence continuing as long as a minor is kept out of such guardianship. 26 M 454. The intimacy that had developed between the accused and the girl had played a considerable part in the whole affair of elopement and the minor girl could not have left the home but for the instigation or co-operation or accompaniment of the accused. AIR 1961 MP 104 : 1961 (1) Cr LJ 513.

18. Explanation.—The explanation to this section is not intended to limit the protection which the section gives to parents and minors. It is intended to extend that protection by including in the term "lawful guardian", any person lawfully entrusted with the care and custody of a minor. 24 M 284 ; 1 Weir 359 : 2 Weir 458 : 10 MLJ 405. The lawful entrustment contemplated by the explanation to this section, may be proved not only by oral evidence, but also by surrounding circumstances and the conduct of the parties concerned. The section cannot be constructed as contemplating a formal declaration of trust in order to lawfully entrust a person with the care and custody of a minor. A person should be regarded in the eye of law as having been lawfully entrusted with the care and custody of a minor, if he has acquired control over the minor lawfully and in such circumstances as would imply trust, even though he may not have been formally entrusted with the care and custody of the minor by a third person. 15 Pat 817 : 169 Ind Cas 48 : 38 Cr LJ 673 : 18 Pat LT 535 : AIR 1937 Pat 263. A guardian may be lawful without being a legal guardian. The expression "lawful guardian" must be liberally construed. The entrustment may be by a legal guardian ; it may be written, oral, express or implied. ILR (1942) Nag 34 : AIR 1941 Nag 66 : 41 Cr LJ 356. The entrustment may be inferred from a well defined and consistent course of conduct governing the relations of the lawful guardian alleged in the indictment and of the minor. AIR 1962 Pat 121 : 1962 (1) Cr LJ 449. Wife turned out by husband is not in his care or custody. AIR 1933 All 182 : 38 Cr LJ 401. But a lawful guardian cannot be convicted by setting up de facto guardianship and extending the meaning of lawful guardian. AIR 1943 Pat 104 : 43 Cr LJ 918 ; 35 CWN 195 : 32 Cr LJ 888 : AIR 1931 Cal 446. The conception of a dual guardianship is by itself not repugnant to law and there may be cases where there are more than one guardian. The guardianship of a father or mother does not cease while the minor child is in the possession of the another person who has been lawfully entrusted with the care and custody of such minor by the father or mother. There is nothing in law to prevent the father or mother of a minor, the care and custody of such minor to more than one person at a time. 15 Pat 817 : 169 Ind Cas 48 : 38 Cr LJ 673 : 19 Pat LT 535 : AIR 1937 Pat 263. The fact that a father allows his child to be in the custody of a servant for a limited purpose and for a limited time, cannot determine the father's rights as guardian or his legal possession for the purpose of the criminal law. Such a temporary guardianship does not exclude the higher legal guardianship of the father. In such cases, the Court must consider all the facts and see whether they are consistent or not with the continuance of the father's legal possession of the minor. If they are not inconsistent the minor must be held to be in the father's possession or keeping even though the actual possession should be temporarily with a friend or other person. Ibid. Where a minor girl comes to the house of her father with the consent of her husband, her father is her de facto guardian. 11 Cr LJ 9 : 4 Ind Cas 543 : 13 CWN 754 ; see also 8 SLR 182 : 16 Cr LJ 117 : 27 Ind Cas 181. The word "include" is not intended to limit the protection which the section gives to parents and minors, but rather to extend that protection by including in the term lawful guardian or any person, lawfully entrusted with the care or custody of the minor. AIR 1922 Lah 380 : 68 Ind Cas 620. Where a Hindu minor is living with a person who is not her nearest male relative, the latter commits an offence under this section if he takes the minor away from the guardianship of such relative without his consent. The technical plea of legal guardianship can be raised only by a guardian appointed by a Civil Court. 42 All 146 : 18 ALJ 64. The mere fact that the minor leaves the protection of her guardian does not put her to of the guardianship keeping. The physical control of the minor is not always necessary to constitute "keeping" or custody. 12 Mys LJ 133. Without the explanation the guardianship is limited to lawful guardianship. By the explanation the term 'guardian' has been extended to any person lawfully entrusted with the care and custody of another. The term 'entrust' implies the giving, handing over or confiding of something by one person to another. It involves the idea of active power and motive by the person reposing the confidence towards the person in whom the confidence is reposed. The term "lawfully entrust or entrusted" means a declaration of trust and the handing over or the giving of confiding of a minor to the care and custody of another by a person competent to do so unaffected by any illegality or impropriety coupled with the assent, express or implied of the person in whom the trust is vested or imposed. Neither the declaration of the trust itself nor its acceptance need be necessarily in writing : it is sufficient if the declaration is verbally made and given or if it arises from a course of conduct consistent only with the existence of such antecedent declaration and accepted verbally or by necessary implication arising from the conduct of the party so entrusted with duty imposed. 4 Pat LJ 74 : 1919 Pat 33. Intention to give child in marriage in contravention of Act 19 of 1929 is "unlawful purpose". 143 Ind Cas 873 : 11 Rang 81 : 34 Cr LJ 696 : AIR 1933 Rang 98 (FB).

19. Exception.—The exception of this section simply is that the section does not extend to the act of any person who in good faith believes himself or herself to be entitled to the lawful custody of the child. There is no question whatever of any authority to remove the girl from the control of her lawful guardian. AIR 1938 Cal 475. A woman should not be convicted of kidnapping her own minor children from the lawful guardianship of their father, when she believes, in good faith herself entitled to the lawful custody of the children. 1 Weir 384 ; 2 Weir 665. The word "unlawful" is not synonymous with "illegal" "immoral". It means what is not justifiable by law. A father of an illegitimate child who removes it from its mother in about 10 days of its birth for the purpose of hushing up the scandal and for its welfare, does so not in good faith, but mala fide and unlawfully. He is not protected by exception to this section. 62 Cal 629 : 39 CWN 396. Where the father deceitfully enticed his own child from the custody of his mother, he cannot be convicted under this section. AIR 1938 Mad 656 : 39 Cr LJ 93. In such a case it is for the prosecution to show that the act was committed for an immoral or unlawful purpose. Ibid. A minor girl leaves her husband' house without any persuasion, inducement, blandishment held out to her by a man so that she would get fairly away from home and then goes to him, he can not be deemed to have infringed the law, even if he does not restore to her lawful guardian. AIR 1965 SC 942 (overruling AIR 1958 Ker 121).

20. Cases.—The mother of Mohammedan minor girl of fifteen is her lawful guardian even if she attains puberty. 60 PR 1905 Cr. The prosecution must prove that the accused knew that the kidnapped person was under lawful guardianship. 27 PR 1887 Cr. Paternal relatives of a minor Hindu girl are not justified in removing her from lawful guardianship by fraud or force for the purpose of getting her married. Rat Un Cr C 320. Where the two accused took a minor girl from her husband in Bikhanir detained her there for a month, then brought her to Karachi by train, where they detained her for three days, the offence was completed at Bikhanir. 7 SLR 17 : 20 Ind Cas 599 : 14 Cr LJ 439. Where a girl under sixteen years of age left the guardianship of her husband and father-in-law on her own free will and not for the first time, and after that stayed with accused quite voluntarily and without any force having been exercised or deception practised upon her, held, it did not amount to taking or enticing the girl out of the keeping of her lawful guardian, nor did it amount to compelling her by force or inducing her by deceitful means to go from any place, and it was not an offence within the meaning of Sections 351, 362 and 366, Penal Code. 12 ALJ 265 : 23 Ind Cas 473 : 15 Cr LJ 265 ; see also UBR 1912, 2nd Qr 136 : 14 Cr LJ 109 : 18 Ind Cas 669. The consent of kidnapped person is immaterial, and it is not necessary for a conviction under Section 361, that the taking or enticing should be shown to have been by means of force or fraud. 2 WR Cr 5 ; 2 WR Cr 61 ; 3 WR Cr 9 ; 3 WR Cr 15 ; 7 WR Cr 36. For conviction of kidnapping under Sections 361 and 363 of the Penal Code, that the accused took or enticed from lawful guardianship the person kidnapped must be established. 10 WR Cr 53 ; 16 WR Cr 42. To entice away a child playing on a public road is to kidnap it from lawful guardianship. 7 WR Cr 98. It is not incumbent on the prosecution in a case of kidnapping under Section 361, Penal Code, to prove that the accused knew that the minor had a lawful guardian. It is for the accused to prove ignorance of the fact of the existence of a lawful guardian, when he raises that plea, though it does not follow that such ignorance will be a complete answer to the charge of an offence under Sections 361 and 363. 27 PR 1887 Cr. Motive has nothing to do with the offence of kidnapping though it might have much to say to the punishment. 6 ALJ 682 : 3 Ind Cas 480 : 31 All 448 : 10 Cr LJ 295. The right of a paternal relation of a minor girl to select a husband and perform her marriage is not according to the Hindu Law, absolute as against the guardian. Rat Un Cr C 820. When the legal guardians for marriage of a Hindu girl gets her married, he will not be committing an offence under Section 362, even if he takes money from the other side. AIR 1960 All 479 : 1960 Cr LJ 1054. The burden of proof the intention of the accused to kidnap from the lawful guardian is on the prosecution. 1960 Bom LR 744 ; 1977 Cr LJ 1235 ; 1972 Mad LW (Cr) 75.

When victim having attained age of discretion wilfully left her father's house and voluntarily accompanied accused, it cannot be said that accused did over act for inducement and was guilty. Baldeo v. State of U.P., 1993 Cri LJ 1915 (Alld).

When medical evidence show that hymen of girl was intact and there being no outword sign of injuries or violence supporting sexual intercourse, no rape was committed. Vishnu v. State of Maharashtra, 1997 Cri LJ 1724 (Bom).

Girl willingly accompanying accused without any compulsion of accused, does not constitute offence of kidnapping. Gaurish v. State of Goa, 1997 Cri LJ 1018 (Bom).

When prosecutrix was to appear at M.A. Examination—Incident of kidnapping occurred meanwhile—Prosecutrix going with accused of her own free will. FIR, not mentioning that she was minor. FIR mentioning that she was of unsound mind and thus she could not take right decision which was not tenable hence was held that when prosecutrix of her own free will without any pursuation from accused abandoned guardianship of her parents and joined accused, proceedings in the case is liable to be quashed. Balabhadra Prasad Das v. State of Orissa, 1995 Cr LJ 1288 (Ori).

21. Abetment of kidnapping.—A Hindu wife removing her infant daughter and marrying her without her husband's consent is guilty of abetment of kidnapping. 8 Cal 969 : 11 CLR 6. The only evidence against the accused person, charged with abetment of kidnapping was first, that he was at the house of certain prostitutes who kidnapped a girl, secondly that he was the first man, who had connection with the girl, thirdly that he carried her about from place to place, and fourthly, that he endeavoured to conceal himself and that he himself absconded. Held, that there was no evidence to show that the accused abetted the offence of kidnapping. 2 CWN 81. There can be no abetment of kidnapping by conduct commencing only after the minor has been completely taken out of the keeping of the guardian when the guardian keeping of the minor is at an end. 6 PR 1894 Cr.

22. Sentence.—Kidnapping of victim girl below 18 years of age from her lawful guardianship—Intention to marry compulsorily against her will not proved—Occurrence was 5 years old—Both accused and victim girl leading happy marital life. offence under Section 361 and not under Section 366 made out. Sentence of two years imprisonment reduced to period already undergone. Biswanath Mallick v. State of Orissa, 1995 Cr LJ 1416 (Ori).

23. Procuration of minor girl.—Provisions of Ss. 359 and 361 clearly shows that the legislature did not confine to constitute the offence only if a minor girl is taken away from the place where she used to reside but the emphasis is upon taking away the girl from the "lawful guardianship". Sections 359 and 361, IPC do not spell-out any territorial jurisdiction for committing the offence. Thus the rigour of the law travels with the ward/subject and any person involving himself or herself in the offence of kidnapping or procuring a minor girl at any point of time would also come within the purview of Sections 359 and 361, IPC. Therefore, even if the victim girl was initially enticed by the co-accused, giving company to the main accused in the half-way for taking the girl to different places would be sufficient to affirm conviction of appellant-accused under S. 366A as well. Taru Das v. State of Tripura, 2008 CriLJ 3143 (Gau).

Sec. 362. Abduction.—Whoever by force compels, or by any deceitful means induces, any person to go from any place, is said to abduct that person.

Synopsis

1. Scope 2195
2. Abduction 2196
3. Proof of abduction by deceitful means 2197

1. Scope.—"This section does not define an offence. It is merely a definition of the word "abduction" which occurs in some of the penal provisions which follow—abduction differs from kidnapping, because there may be abduction without a removal of the person from the protection of the law, or even from lawful guardianship. It may be observed on the things which constitute abduction according to this definition, that to compel by force a person to go from any place is not an offence specifically under this Code, although it may necessarily involve the commission of an offence, an assault at least, and probably, wrongful restraint. To induce a person by deceitful means to go from any place is ordinarily not an offence, but only a subject for a civil action. Neither of these things are specially punished as offence here ; they merely constitute the definition of abduction. An abduction is made an offence only when it is committed with certain aggravating circumstances".—Morgan and Macpherson ; see also 8 PLR 1924 : 24 Cr LJ 921 ; 22 Ind Cas 730 ; 15 WR 4. The rule of practice, amounting almost to a rule of law, that in cases involving sexual intercourse, the corroboration of the woman's story must be obtained does not apply in case of abduction, because the offence of abduction is complete if the accused takes the woman away by deceitful means intending to seduce her to sexual intercourse. AIR 1942 Bom 71 : 43 Cr LJ 529 : ILR 1942 Bom 384. In the case of a grown up woman, it would be an offence to carry her away by force against her own will even with the object of restoring her to her husband. AIR 1942 Lah 89 : 43 Cr LJ 529 : ILR 1942 Lah 470. "To induce" means "to lead into" it connotes a leading of the woman in some direction in which she would not otherwise have gone. There must be a change of mind caused by an external pressure of some kind. AIR 1934 Sind 164 : 36 Cr LJ 231. This section merely defines what "abduction" is. It does not define an offence. Abduction becomes an offence only when it is accompanied by one of the three intentions described in Sections 364, 365 and 369, Penal Code. AIR 1950 Assam 37. 'Abduction' requires two essentials (1) forcible compulsion or inducement by deceitful means and (2) the object of such compulsion or inducement must be the going of a person from any place. 1953 Cr LJ 1790 : AIR 1953 Punj 258. Apart from the elements of force to fraud that may be involved in abduction and which elements may attract punishment under other section of the Code, abduction per se of an adult person is not punishable under the Code. AIR 1959 Mad 274 : ILR 1959 Mad 320 : 1959 All Cr R 187 : 1959 Cr LJ 852. In case of an offer to find bridegroom for major girl and the girl accompanying the accused, no offence under Section 366 is committed as there was no compulsion. 1952 MRLPJ (Notes) 7.

Under Section 362, the force of deceitful means should be employed towards the person sought to be abducted and not towards any other person. 1956 All LJ 849 : 1956 All WR (HC) 526.

If the offence of abduction falls within the categories dealt with by Sections 364 to 369 except as, Sections 366B and 368 by reason of other additional elements apart from force or fraud it will be an offence punishable under these section. 1971 Cr LJ 1222. There can be no abduction when no inducement is made or force is used in taking away a person. AIR 1971 SC 2664 : 1971 Cr LJ 1458.

2. Abduction.—When a man by a promise of marriage induces a woman to leave her house, but does not marry her or get her married he is guilty of deceiving her as mentioned in this section. 4 ALJ 482. In order to constitute an offence under this section the woman must be compelled by force or induced by deceitful means to leave her husband's home. 11 PR 188 Cr.

Section 362 IPC, only defines abduction and is not substantive offence. Gopa Ram v. State of Rajasthan, 1996 Cri LJ 2987 (Raj).

The offence of abduction is a continuing offence and a girl is being abducted not only when she is first taken from one place to another. 12 ALJ 91 ; 7 SLR 128 ; 14 Ind Cas 599. When the accused uses deceitful means in abduction a woman from one place to another, he is guilty of an offence under this section. But if he repeats the same deceitful means in order to abduct her again from the latter place to a third place, he commits a second offence under this section. 24 Ind Cas 599 ; 40 All 507. A person who compelled a girl by force to go away from the place where her mother-in-law was, evidently with the intention to have sexual intercourse with her, is liable to be punished for committing an offence under Section 366 read with this section. 9 MLT 406 : 10 Ind Cas 290. Bare abduction, without the intention pointed out in the different sections dealing with the subject, is not per se an offence. 6 CWN 208.

Where an accused person deceitfully married a girl with the intention of prostituting her, held, that the fact of his marriage dishonestly contracted with an illicit view did not prevent his act of inducing the girl to leave her home from amounting to abduction under Section 362, or entitled the accused to be acquitted of an offence under Section 366, Penal Code. 7 PR 1881 Cr. A conviction for abduction was quashed no force or deceit having been practised on the person abducted. 2 WR 7 Cr. Where an accused person dishonestly induced a girl to marry him and leave her home with the view of causing her to prostitute herself. Held, that the fact of such marriage did not exculpate him from being guilty of abduction under Section 362, Penal Code, or of an offence under Section 366, 7 PR 1881 Cr. Neither under the Penal Code nor under the Frontier Regulation is it an offence for a married woman to abet her own abduction. 40 PR 1866 Cr. ; 6 PR 1871 Cr; 14 PR 1875 Cr; 11 PR 1883 Cr. Where the kidnapped girl goes with the accused on his false representation, an offence under this section has been committed. 73 Ind Cas 510 : 24 Cr LJ 622 : AIR 1923 Lah 158. Abduction in itself constitutes no offence and only becomes an offence when certain criminal intents are proved. 75 Ind Cas 297 : 24 Cr LJ 921. Abduction itself is not an offence but becomes so when taken in connection with other factors which form the subject matter with other sections of Chapter XVI of the IPC, 29 PLR 444 : 109 Ind Cas 127 : 10 Lah LJ 325 : 29 PLR 479. The offence of kidnapping from lawful guardianship is not a continuing offence. As soon as the minor is actually removed from the custody of his or her guardian, the offence is committed. The offence is not a continuing one as long as the minor is kept out of guardianship. AIR 1931 All 55 ; AIR 1951 Raj 33 : 52 Cr LJ 217.

There is no question of any kidnapping from the lawful custody if the real gravamen of the offence is that the accused induced the prosecutrix by threatening her with a pistol to go with him to the room in his fields. AIR 1972 SC 2661 : 1973 Cr LJ 179.

3. Proof of abduction by deceitful means.—In order to prove abduction by deceitful means, it is not enough for the prosecution merely to establish that there was a misrepresentation of some kind but they have also to prove that there was misrepresentation by which the person abducted was himself deceived. 41 CWN 287.

The expression "deceitful means" is wide enough to include the induction of a girl to leave her guardian's house on a pretext. AIR 1951 Raj 33 : 52 Cr LJ 217 : 1950 RLW 340. An offence of abduction can be said to have been committed only if the prosecution is able to prove against the alleged offender that he has by force compelled or by deceitful means induced another person to go from any place. 1959 Raj LW 269. Deceit is proved when a woman leaving her husband's place willingly but subsequently discover intention on part of accused of selling her for concubinage. 6 Sau LR 329.

1. Amendment.—The words "British India" have been successively substituted in India by the word "India" by Adaptation of Laws Orders, 1948 and 1950 and Act 3 of 1951, Section 3 and Sch.

2. Scope or object.—This section and Section 366 are intended not only to protect the rights of parents and lawful guardians of minor, but also to protect the minors as well. So the willingness of the minor or of the temporary guardian does not protect the accused. 12 ALJ 133. It is well settled that the taking away of a minor from the lawful custody is not the same thing as keeping the minor out of such custody ; the act of taxing away is completed as soon as the minor is taken out of his or her guardian. 48 Cr LJ 799 : 231 IC 457. This section must be strictly construed. 42 PLR 25. An offence under Section 363 of the Penal Code is made out if (i) the person kidnapped was a minor ; (ii) the minor was in keeping of lawful guardian (iii) the accused took or induced such person to leave out of such lawful keeping and such taking was done with the consent of the lawful guardian. 1952 MWN 231 : (1952) 1 MLJ 536. To sustain a conviction under Section 363, the prosecution has to prove that the accused had some active part in the minor leaving the guardian's house. The offence under Section 363 is not a continuing one, and it really consists in the initial act of taking her from the keeping of her lawful guardian. 1959 Ker LR 656 : 1959 Ker LT 684. In a case under Sections 363 and 366 Penal Code, the prosecution story was that I, a minor girl of Ajmer, on suggestion by the accused P and N to go with them to Bombay, left her father's house and met P near Plaza Cinema. P took her towards clock tower when he got a Tonga to take her up to water through where P and N met I and then all the three in the same tonga went to Kishengarh. Held, in revision by the High Court against conviction of N under Section 366, that the offence of kidnapping was not complete till I left for Kishengarh but he had been rightly found under Section 366. 1956 AMLJ 14.

Section 366 is an aggravated offence under Section 363. 1954 Mad WN 810 ; 1954 All WRHC 296 : 1955 Cr LJ 168. (Where a person is guilty under Section 366A, he cannot be convicted at the same time of the minor offence under Section 363 or Section 366).

A mere reading of the FIR shows that the petitioner had taken shabana after getting the consent of her lawful guardian to a function at the house of Poonam. Instead of taking her to the house of Poonam, she took her to the Bus-stand from where she went to Delhi. Before leaving, she had given instructions to Balraj to take Shabana back to her parents house. In this situation the petitioner had no criminal intention while taking away Shabana from her house. She was taken with the consent of her guardian and was sent back from the bus-stand the moment Shabana refused to accompany her to Delhi. If Balraj tried to prevail upon Shabana to go with him, which act in fact was never committed, the petitioner cannot be made liable. No offence is thus disclosed against the petitioner. In this situation, the continuation of any prosecution on the basis of the FIR registered at Police Station Sadar, Sonepat, shall be an abuse of process of law. Neelam v. State of Haryana, (1994) 1 SLJ 719 at pp. 719, 720 ; 1994 (3) CC Cases 34 (P & H).

Absence of any direct evidence of kidnapping. The appellants were arrested along with the victim girl. The said circumstance has no help to the case of prosecution. In the absence of any direct evidence of kidnapping, it cannot be ruled out that the girl might have gone to Kuju on her own or with some other persons. It may also be possible that on the same day appellants might have gone to Kuju and after seeing the victim girl at Kuju Chowk, they might have started talking to her and by that time police might arrive there and arrested them. Thus, from the aforesaid circumstance, it cannot be inferred that the present crime has been committed by the appellants and none else.

It is well settled that statement under Section 164 CrPC is not a substantive piece of evidence. It can be used only to corroborate or contradict the statement of witness. It is equally well settled that the statement under Section 161 of the CrPC of a witness can be used only for contradicting him. Under the said circumstance, the aforesaid two statements of Sarita Kumari under Sections 161 and 164 CrPC cannot become the basis for conviction. Held, the Court below had committed serious illegality by convicting the appellants on the basis of aforesaid statements. Rajesh Kumar & Anr. vs. State of Jharkhand, 2010 (3) CriLJ 3512 (Jhar).

Prosecutrix was rescued by witness when accused persons forcefully took her towards village. Statement of prosecutrix inspiring confidence and corroborated by evidence of eye-witnesses. Prosecutrix on date of incident was less than 18 years of age. Plea of alibi as projected in defence is neither put to any of prosecution witnesses nor it can be proved by preponderance of probability. Held, conviction of accused persons is proper. Chander Singh & Ors vs State of Himachal Pradesh, 2010 (4) CriLJ 4031 (HP).

Accused persons took prosecutrix on point of knife from one place to another. No evidence showing that either of accused persons extended any premise or allurement to prosecutrix.

As regards charge under Sections 363 and 366 of IPC, in order to prove kidnapping the prosecution was required to prove that the appellants had taken or enticed the prosecutrix out of the keeping of her lawful guardian. The object behind Section 361 of IPC, which defines kidnapping, is to protect the minor children from being seduced for improper purposes and to protect the rights and privileges of guardians having lawful charge or custody of their minor wards. What is necessary is either taking or enticement, of the minor. Taking would include causing to go or getting into possession whereas enticement involves an idea of inducement, by igniting hopes or desire in the other. One does not entice other, unless the latter attempts to do a thing which he or she would not otherwise have done. In order to bring home conviction for kidnapping, there must be proof of the accused having done something which led to the girl going out of the keeping of her guardian. The words 'takes' and 'entices' as used in Section 361 of IPC need to be read together so as to take colour and content from each other.

In the present case, there is no evidence of either of the appellants having extended any promise or allurement to the prosecutrix. This is not the case of the prosecution that either of the appellants had promised to marry the prosecutrix or held out any other promise to her. The case of the prosecution is that the appellants had threatened the prosecutrix by putting knives on her person and being afraid of them she accompanied them to Merrut. That part of the deposition of the prosecutrix where she claimed that she had been threatened and two knives had been put on her person when she was taken from Delhi to Merrut cannot be believed and is obviously false. The truth appears to be that since the prosecutrix was previously known to the appellants, and had become friendly to one of them, she of her own abandoned the guardianship of her parents and eloped with the appellants. Though the prosecutrix has been found to be less than 16 years old, it cannot be said that she was not capable of knowing what she was doing. She was not of such an age so as to be unable to decide what was good and what was bad for her. Had the prosecutrix been about 10 months older, even the offence of rape would not have been made out against the appellants in the facts and circumstances of the case. In my view the facts and circumstances brought on record clearly show that the prosecutrix willingly accompanied the appellants and stayed with them till they were caught by the police. The prosecutrix knew and had the capacity to know the full import what she was doing. It is, therefore, difficult to say that the offence of kidnapping has been made out against the appellants in the facts and circumstances of this case.

Held, it cannot be said that accused persons took prosecutrix with them so as to force or seduce her to illicit intercourse. Offence of kidnapping has not been made out against them. Mohd. Imran Khan & etc. vs. State, 2010 (2) CrLJ 1756 (Delhi).

The accused was convicted under the sections for having subjected the prosecutrix to forcible sexual intercourse. It was observed that prosecution had failed to prove that accused played any active part in taking the prosecutrix out of the keeping of her lawful guardian. Held, that prosecutrix had voluntarily gone to accused's house to contact matrimonial alliance with him without the accused playing any overt or covert role therein. At the relevant time the prosecutrix had attained age of discretion. The appeal was, therefore, accepted and sentence set aside. 1987 Cri LJ 1266 (Him Pra).

Major girl leaving her parents of her own will does not commit any offence under Section 363 or 366. Oroos Fatima alias Nisha and another v. Senior Superintendent of Police, Aligarh and another, 1993 Cri LJ 1 (Alld).

When infant girl raped and thereafter body thrown into a well, offence is made out under Section 366 and not under Section 363. Siddik Singh Pritam Singh v. State of Maharashtra, 1993 Cri LJ 2919 (Bom).

For the purpose of Section 363, the intention of the offender, his motive the means employed by him and the consent of the girl are all irrelevant. AIR 1961 Jab LJ 870 ; AIR 1961 MP 104 : 1960 Jab LJ 1071. The appellant was not convicted when he was a close relation of the kidnaped girl and had absolutely no intention or motive to take her away. 1980 Cr LJ 121. The offence of kidnapping under Section 363 consists solely of taking a minor from the keeping of her lawful guardian, and no intention needs to be established. AIR 1964 Punj 83 : 1963 Punj 678 : 1963 Cr LJ 454 ; 1961 Jab LJ 870 (the intention of the offender, the motive and the means adopted by him and the consent of the girl are all irrelevant). The age of the minor is less than 16 years if male and less than 18 years if female, the minor was taken or enticed away from the keeping of his or her lawful guardian without the consent of the guardian. 1975 WLN (UC) 112 ; 1972 Mad LW (Cr) 169 : 1972 Mad W (Cr) 75. The section will not apply where neither taking away nor enticement established. (1971) 2 SC Cr R 16 : 1971 Cr LJ (N) 6 ; 1971 Cr LJ 1365. Some kind of inducement was held out by the accused or that he took an active part in the formation of the intention of the minor to leave the house of the guardian—are the ingredients of the offence. AIR 1965 SC 942 : (1965) 2 Cr LJ 31 ; 1971 SCC (Cr) 29. See also 1983 All Cr LR 629.

The accused was charged with kidnapping of prosecutrix, a minor girl, by means of intimidation that she would be killed/or with the intention that she may be compelled to marry him against her will. One day when her father and brother were not in the house, the prosecutrix took Rs. 1100/- and left with the accused. The Investigating officer recovered the girl but could not recover money. No satisfactory proof of the age of the prosecutrix was furnished. Held, that accused was not responsible for the prosecutrix leaving her house and could not be said to have committed offence under Section 363/366. 1987 Cri LJ 910 (Del).

Case under Section 363 is warrant case. Usha K. Pillai v. Raj Kumar Srinivas, 1993 Cri LJ 2669 (SC) : AIR 1993 (SC) 2090 : 1993(3) JT 254 : 1993(2) Scale 734 : 1993(2) Crimes 336.

The accused took away such minor out of such keeping without consent of lawful guardian. Such taking away with knowledge of the guardian with his tacit consent offence of kidnapping. Mohd. Murshid v. State of Bihar, (1995) 1 East Cr C 97 (Pat) (RB).

It has already been held that it was notorious and one can take judicial notice that the margin of error in age ascertained by radiological examination is two years on either side. Hence taking such error into consideration it cannot be said that age as ascertained by medical examination would conclusively establish petitioner No. 3 to be of below 18 years. S.K. Delal alias S.K. Raja v. State of Orissa, (1994) 1 OLR 20 (Ori).

Trial was of the accused for rape and murder of a minor girl. The accused cannot be held guilty by showing that he committed the similar offences on other occasion. Jag Mohan alias Birju v. State, (1995) 1 Crimes 188 (Del).

3. Lawful guardianship.—A de facto guardian of minor, whose guardianship is not against the wishes of the de gure guardian, is a lawful guardian. 12 Cr LJ 239 : 10 Ind Cas 281. According to Mahommedan Law the occurrence of puberty determines minority and the mother's right to custody. But for the purposes of this section regard must be had only to the definition of minority in Section 3 of the Majority Act. 37 M 567. In the absence of mother, mother's mother and not father is lawful guardian of minor girl. AIR 1959 Madh Pra 99 : 1959 Jab LJ 218 : 1959 Cr LJ 327. According to Hindu Law the husband's relations, if any, exist within the degree of a sapinda, are the guardians of a minor widow in preference to her father and his relations. 27 PR 1915 Cr. The testimony of the kidnapped person, if satisfactory, legally suffices for a conviction for kidnapping. 7 WR Cr 104. To constitute the offence of kidnapping, it must be shown that the person was abducted from lawful guardianship which is the guardianship of a person who is lawfully entrusted with the care or custody of a minor. 2 NWP 286. A minor girl left her parent's house with the intention of asking the accused to take her away and of by her. Held, the question was whether the female minor, when she left her guardians house, had given up the intention of returning home ; that in this case, the girl, when she left her parents house, had no such intention of not returning as to remove her from their guardianship, and that the accused was therefore guilty of the offence of kidnapping from lawful guardianship. UBR 1909 3rd Qr Penal Code 27 : 4 Ind Cas 901 : 11 Cr LJ 81. When the mother from whose custody a Mahommedan minor girl was removed by the accused was proved to have married in a stranger family and consequently lost her right of guardianship, held, that the conviction under Section 363, IPC, could not be sustained. 1930 Cr C 1057 : 51 Cr LJ 476 : 128 Ind Cas 181 : 32 Cr LJ 90 : AIR 1930 Cal 665. Where an act of restraint or confinement in an attempt to kidnap has been exercised in furtherance of the attempt and goes to form part of that offence, and it is not done with any intention or object which can be separated from the general intention to kidnap, it will constitute an integral part of that offence and should not form the subject of a separate conviction and sentence. 6 NWP 293. Until a Mahommedan girl attains her puberty, her mother is entitled under the Mahommedan Law to the guardianship of the girl in preference to her husband. So a mother cannot be convicted under this section for removing such a girl from the custody of her mother-in-law. 32 Cal 444 : 2 Cr LJ 328 ; see also 21 PLR 1906 : 3 Cr LJ 296 : 60 PR 19. If the accused removed the girl from the custody of the husband while taking the minor wife to his home from a short visit to her mother's house or an uncle's home and it was not proved that the removal was at the instance of the mother who could terminate the guardianship of the husband, no offence could be said to be committed, AIR 1952 Tri 27.

Father is natural guardian of minor child and if not prohibited by Court's order debarring him to have custody of child can take away the child from custody of his wife while she is living in her parent's house. No offence under Section 363 is made out even if he does so by forcibly entering into the house of father-in-law. The High Court has in such a case set aside the cognizance under Section 363 but taking of cognizance under Section 452 was maintained. Ashok Kumar Seth v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 642 (Orissa) : 2002(94) Cut LT 447 : 2003(23) OCR 425.

Although consent of the person kidnapped is no defence to a charge under Section 363, where the accused and the girl were neighbours and for this reason became fond of each other and when her marriage was about to take place the accused decided to take her away and she agreed, held, that it is not a bad case of kidnapping though technically it amounts to such and that the accused should not be punished severely. 96 Ind Cas 874 : 27 Cr LJ 1018 : AIR 1926 Lah 667. One P who was formerly a Christian changed her religion and became a convert to Hinduism. She left the house in which she was living during the absence of her husband who had gone to another place. When the latter came back he demanded his children but they were not handed over to him. Held, that on these facts there is no question of an offence under Section 363. 102 Ind Cas 209 : 28 Cr LJ 513 : AIR 1927 Lah 496. Whether the offence of kidnapping is complete when the person has been taken out of the custody of the lawful guardian is a question of a fact to be determined according to the circumstances of each case. Unless there is specific allegation of the respondent having taken any step in taking the minor out of the possession of her father.—In the instant case, the very fact that Raj Bala was accompanied by her mother and brother indicates that she left the house voluntarily with their blessings. While saying so it has to add here that it is correct that the consent of the minor is immaterial and 'taking' would be complete if a minor is taken out of the possession of the father without his consent. But in the peculiar circumstances of this case, where there is no specific allegation of the respondent having taken any step in taking her out from the possession of her father. It is not inclined to hold that the ingredients of Section 361, IPC, have been satisfied. Madan Lal v. Dr. Jaswant Singh, (1994) 53 DLT 326 at p. 329 ; (1994) 1 CCR 392 (Del).

4. From India.—Where the accused induced certain woman to leave British India for Ceylon, on the misrepresentation that they were to be married to his son, and after arriving at Ceylon made them work as coolies on the estate. Held, that the woman must be held to have been taken without their consent, and the accused were guilty of an offence under this section. 6 Ind Cas 503 : 1910 MWN 262 : 8 MLT 91 : 11 Cr LJ 368. Under the Hindu law the father and after his death, mother is the natural guardian, (1970) 37 Cut LT 187.

5. Age of the girl.—In a prosecution under Section 363, age of the girl is a material point because unless it is shown that she was below 18 years of age at the relevant time there could be no case of kidnapping within the meaning of Section 333. AIR 1957 Him. Pra. 42 : 1957 Cr LJ 847 ; AIR 1931 Lah 401 ; AIR 1939 All 708 ; 1962 MPLJ 137 (Notes). The prosecution must prove that on the date of the incident the girl was under eighteen years of age. AIR 1956 Nag 74 : ILR 1956 Nag 282 : 1956 Cr LJ 263. Where the prosecution failed to prove beyond all reasonable doubt the age of the prosecutrix was below 18 the accused was acquitted under the section. 1977 Raj Cr C 362.

After hearing the learned Counsel for the parties and giving my thoughtful consideration to their respective arguments and also perusing the record. Court has found that document is not based upon material to prove date of birth of both the girls because admittedly, the dates of birth were not registered/recorded by the father of the girls with the Chowkidar of the village in a register of Births and Deaths or in the office of C.M.O. of the area. It is also not recorded from the original admission register, rather date of birth has been obtained from the certificate of 8th Class. Moreover, the learned Counsel for the State could not point out any other error in the judgment of the trial Court, which has formed an opinion in favour of the accused/respondents on the basis of evidence. It is well settled by the Supreme Court that if two views are possible in a case of acquittal, then the view which has been taken in favour of the accused/ respondents should be maintained. State of Haryana vs. Ramesh Kumar, 2010 (2) CrLJ 1812 (P & H).

The appellant belonged to the same Caste and Gotra of the prosecutrix and was a frequent visitor to the house of the prosecutrix. There was a love affair between them and the Court also observed that she did not ever resist her being repeatedly deflowered by the appellant Sunil. In this background, close and careful determination of the age of the prosecutrix is imperative. Doctor, who had clinically examined the prosecutrix, found that her secondary sex characters were well developed.

Doctor who examined the prosecutrix referred her for verification to the Dental Surgeon and the Radiologist. The failure of getting the prosecutrix examined from the Dental Surgeon or the Radiologist despite the fact that she was referred to them by doctor is a serious flaw in the prosecution version. The prosecution also failed to produce any Admission Form of the school which would have been primary evidence regarding the age of the prosecutrix.

The School Leaving Certificate produced by the prosecution was also procured. six days after the incident and three days after the arrest of the appellant. As per that certificate also, she joined the school in the middle of the session and left the school in the middle of the session. The attendance in the school of 100 days is also not reliable.

The prosecutrix was admitted in the school by her brother. The said Ashok Kumar was not examined. The alleged School Leaving Certificate on the basis of which the age was entered in the school was not produced.

The father of the prosecutrix has also not been able to give correct date of birth of the prosecutrix. In his statement he clearly stated that he is giving an approximate date without any basis or record.

On consideration of the totality of the facts and circumstances of this case, it would unsafe to convict the appellant when there are so many infirmities, holes and lacunas in the prosecution version. The appellant is clearly entitled to benefit of doubt and consequently the appeal filed by the appellant deserves to be allowed. The appellant is directed to be released forthwith, if not required in any case. The appeal is accordingly disposed of. Sunil vs. State of Haryana, 2009 (4) Crimes 321 (SC) : 2009 (14) JT 644 : 2009 (14) Scale 370 : 2009 (8) Supreme 20 : 2009 (9) SLT 92 : 2010 (1) JCC 140.

The prosecutrix of 5 was taken to the toilets undressed and bent down upon her but did not attempt to rape her. Held, offences under Sections 363/366 were made out but not one under Section 376 IPC. (1986) 2 Crimes 334 (Del).

Accused was convicted under the sections for have subjected the prosecutrix to forcible sexual intercourse. As per evidence of the mother of the prosecutrix, age of prosecutrix was calculated to be above 18 years and as per medical officer age appeared to be 16 years on the basis of the general development of the body. It was thought that determination of age on the basis of ossification test was considered in law to be proper evidence and was being relied upon by courts in India when proved in a proper manner. 1987 Cri LJ 1266 (Him Pra).

Whether the prosecutrix was below 18 years, at trial—FIR also not proved—These being fatal to prosecution case—As regards age of prosecutrix Medical Expert gave opinion that there can be error of three years in age and that her age could be 18 years—Thus prosecution is bound by this opinion and also it does not stand 'proved beyond' reasonable doubt that her age was below 18 years on the date of incident. Appeal failed. State of Rajasthan v. Nand Lal, (1995) 1 RCD 137 (Raj).

The girl of 18 years was taken by the accused to another place and was raped. Ossification tests report proved that the prosecutrix was more than 18 years of age but school certificate showed that she was below 16 years of age. No evidence was available to show as to on what basis and at whose instance the date of birth was written in the school register. The conviction of accused for rape etc. was set aside. Makhan v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 2777 (MP) : 2003(9) All Ind Cas 202 : 2003(4) Crimes 396 : 2003(3) MPHT 284 : 2003(3) MPHT 284 : 2003(3) Rec Cri R 674.

Where the mark-sheet showing the age of the prosecutrix below 18 years was never filed along with the challan nor it was exhibited or stressed by the prosecution the reliance placed by the trial Court on untendered, non-exhibited and unproved mark-sheet for holding that the age of the prosecutrix was below 18 years was erroneous and could not be sustained in the eyes of law. The opinion of the Radiologist that the age of the prosecutrix was 14 to 16 years and there could be a variance of two years. 6. Cases.—Magistrate should not give themselves jurisdiction by trying under Section 363, cases which really fall under Section 366, IPC. The form of a kidnapping which is punishable by Section 366 is a seriously aggravated form which only Session Courts and District Magistrate in the exercise of their special powers, have jurisdiction to try UBR (1897-1901) Vol. I, 328. To establish kidnapping, there must be evidence that the minor was taken out of the keeping of the lawful guardianship without her consent. 14 Cr LJ 149 : 19 Ind Cas 140 (FB) : 6 Bur LT 21. Where a Hindu sold his wife a girl of 16 years of age to S, a barger, with whom she was living, and, where the girl, while living with S, was persuaded by the accused to leave the house of S and go away with another man. Held, that S was the lawful guardian of the girl within the meaning of Section 361 and that, the accused was rightly convicted under Section 363, IPC. 7 PR 1911 Cr : 154 PLR 1911 : 10 Ind Cas 97 : 12 Cr LJ 211 : 31 PWR 1911. 9. Sentence.—It is not necessary under this section that the sentence of fine must be imposed along with imprisonment. What is essential under this section, is that an offence under this section should not be punished with fine. AIR 1949 All 587 : 50 Cr LJ 884. Long pendency of matter. The social impact of the crime, e.g. where it relates to offences against women, dacoity, kidnapping, misappropriation of public money, treason and other offences involving moral turpitude or moral delinquency which have great impact on social order, and public interest, cannot be lost sight of and per se require exemplary treatment. Any liberal attitude by imposing meager sentences or taking too sympathetic a view merely on account of lapse of time in respect of such offences will be result-wise counter productive in the long run and against societal interest which needs to be cared for and strengthened by string of deterrence inbuilt in the sentencing system. Ankush Maruti Shinde vs. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2009 SC 2609 : 2009 (6) SCC 667 : 2009 (6) JT 358 : 2009 (7) SCR 182 : 2009 (6) Scale 388 : 2009 (3) Supreme 760 : 2009 (4) SLT 470;; See also Bikram Dorjee vs. State of West Bengal, AIR 2009 SC 2539 : 2009 (2) Crimes 354 (SC) : 2009 (7) JT 325 : 2009 (6) Scale 325 : 2009 (6) SCR 884 : 2009 (3) Supreme 772.

Imposition of sentence without considering its effect on the social order in many cases may be in reality a futile exercise. 11. Conviction.—Where accused was convicted under Sections 363, 366 and 376, IPC, which was challenged in revision petition.—The age of prosecutrix was found to be 15 years by ossification test. There can be error of 3 years in either way as per Doctor's opinion. The evidence of prosecutrix showed that appellant never forced her for sexual intercourse. Hence conviction under Section 376, IPC, was not sustainable. Further the prosecutrix was taken away from her house in the night by another accused and the appellant met her at Railway Station. Hence conviction for other offence is also not sustainable. Sribatcha Khamari v. State of Orissa, (1994) 2 Crimes 476 (Ori).

Where prosecutrix was 17 years old girl. Prosecutrix and accused having intimacy prior to incident. She deposed to have been sexually assaulted by accused without her consent—On night of incident she was sleeping alongwith parents and sister of accused and accused took her to his village assuring to marry her after incident accused himself took her back to her village. It was held that committing sexual intercourse without her consent was not probable. Conviction was held non- sustainable. Samrao v. State of Maharashtra, (1994) 2 Crimes 125 (Bom).

Where the case was of kidnapping of four years old boy for ransom. Boy seen in company of accused persons at several places—Eye-witnesses being natural and trustworthy—They identified accused persons in identification parade and latter demanding ransom sent to father of boy which proves that boy was kidnapped from lawful guardianship of his parents—Admission of guilt by one accused—Contents of latter showing that boy was killed—Hence conviction was upheld. Radha Ballabh v. State of U.P., 1995 SCC (Cr) 797 (SC) : 1995(4) JT 206 : 1995(3) Scale 205 : 1995(2) Crimes 473.

Where there was controversy regarding age of prosecutrix—Prosecutrix stating her age to be 15-1/2 years—As per medical evidence her age being between 14 to 16 years--Material (Birth certificate) suggesting that the age of girl on the date of occurrence was 15 years. Hence conviction and sentence was not interfered with. Mohammad Kasam v. State of Punjab, (1995) 3 Crimes 5 (P & H).

Allegation was of taking forcibly and committing rape—One of the accused lady having friendly relations and there was other male—Male accused committed rape while female took her away—Male accused convicted and female released. Sushil Mandal v. State of M.P., (1994) 2 Crimes 739 (MP).

The question was as to whether the sentence awarded to the appellant by the trial court while convicting him for offense under Section 363, IPC, in the facts and circumstances of the case, is appropriate and if not, what sentence should be awarded so as to meet the ends of justice. Considering the facts and circumstances of the (sic), acquittal of the appellant under Sections 366, IPC and 376, IPC and the fact that appellant has already undergone sentence for more than 1 year and 9 months, held that the ends of justice would be met if the appellant is sentenced to the term already undergone by him. *Vishnu Kumar v. Where there is positive evidence to show that the accused took away the minor victim never to return thereafter or by heard of, the offence of kidnapping within the meaning of Section 363, IPC is all proved and therefore, conviction of the accused thereunder does not require interference. Ghanshyam Punjiyar v. State, 2004(2) Crimes 428 at p. 431 (Pat) : 2004 CR LJ 2642 : 2004(19) all Ind Cas 445 : 2004(4) Cur Cri R 4 : 2004(2) MPHT 153.

The accused persons were apprehended near the spot where the ransom amount was supposed to be paid. The accused person's presence at the place where they were arrested is a strong circumstance against the accused appellants. There was no apparent plausible reason for their presence alongside the railway track, loitering around a place which is quite far away from the place where they were residing viz., Hosadurga. Their conduct in running away when they saw the police party is also indicative of their guilty mind and is an important piece of evidence showing their conduct. No plausible explanation was given by the accused appellants for their presence at the spot where they were arrested, which was nearby the place indicated in the demand for payment of the ransom amount. Evidence of the eye-witness who had seen the boy playing with the accused before his death could not be discarded on account of estimated time of death given by the doctor when the dead body was decomposed and examined after two days. There was no infirmity in the statement of the eye-witness to disbelieve him. Conviction of accused was held proper. A.N. Venkatesh v. State of Karnataka, 2005 Cr LJ 3732 (SC) : AIR 2005 (SC) 3809 : 2005(3) AndhLT (Cri) SC 264 : 2005(3) Crimes 231 : 2005(5) Kant LJ 321 : 2005(7) SCC 714 : 2005(6) Scale 348 : 2005(5) Supreme 746.

12. Evidence.—The girl was below 18 years—Prosecutrix was a consenting party and admissibility of entry in birth and death register. It was finally held that these are public documents and admissible in evidence. Bijendra Singh v. State of Haryana. (1994) 1 Recent Cr R 469 (P&H).

When accused was convicted under Sections 363 and 376 sentenced to 3 years RI and 7 years RI. Both the sentence to run concurrently petition challenging of the same was filed. The victim stated to have been raped several times and her testimony was supported by PWs and the doctor. The prosecution version was fully corroborated by the medical evidence also. Hence no leniency or indulgence could be granted to the accused for such an offence. Appeal dismissed. Ram Nath Mandal v. Union of India, (1994) 3 CC Cases 209 (Del).

No incriminating evidence. As against co-accused, there is no admissible incriminating evidence against them. Their inculpatory disclosure statements are totally inadmissible in evidence as nothing has been recovered or discovered by the police pursuant thereto and cannot even be read as evidence against them under Section 8 or Section 10 of the Evidence Act.

Held, said accused would be entitled to acquittal. Ashok Kumar alias Govind vs. State, 2010 (2) CrLJ 2329 (Delhi).

The medical evidence is not proving rape. Story narrated by victim child aged 11-12 years was not reliable. The Sessions Judge has acted on basis of imagination and has thrown to winds all the recognised principles of criminal law that the prosecution has to prove its case beyond a shadow of reasonable doubt. Mere suspicion does not take the place of evidence. Accused deserves acquittal. Omi v. State of U.P., 1994 All LJ 93 : 1994 Cr LJ 155 (All).

Minor girl was induced and taken away to different places and raped throughout the period till recovered. There was corroboration of same by medical evidence as well as her evidence. Hence decision of trial court upheld Shyam Sunder v. State of M.P., 1995 Cr LR 222 (MP).

Where there is clear evidence that the prosecutrix left her parents house out of her own sweet-will leaving behind a letter showing the reason for her leaving the house; travelled alone to Railway Station where the accused who was previously known to prosecutrix and he had visiting terms with her family; she was found habitual to sexual intercourse and also pregnant at the time of her medical examination, her mother's evidence shows that she was a major girl; no reliable documentary evidence has been led to show her below 18 years of age; she never complained against the accused despite so may occasions available to her, the only conclusion can be drawn that she was major and a consenting party and none of the offence is made out. Sita Ram v. State, 2004 Cr LJ 4320 (4325) (Raj) : 2004(4) Raj LW 2588 : 2004(4) WLC 99.

Where the report of the Radiologist shows that the victim girl was above 12 years but below 15 years and the delay in registration of case through written complaint by the mother of the girl to Superintendent of Police on refusal to register a case by the local police stands explained, the girl was recovered from the village of the accused at his instance, the accused was convicted under Section 363 and 366, IPC but his conviction under Section 378, IPC was not sustained. 2004(2) Crimes 611 (MP).

The eye-witness, her grandmother, on noticing the absence of her grand daughter aged 5-1/2 years went in search, heard the cries of the child and she rushed to the house of the accused from where the sound of cries was coming and she found that the child victim was naked and the accused was lying on top of her. Her evidence was found credible, the evidence of the eye-witness could not be discarded merely because nobody else heard the cries of the victim or came forward hearing it and as such conviction of the accused was held sustainable. Parkash v. State of Haryana, 2004 Cr LJ 595 (SC) : 2004(1) SCC 339 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 290 : AIR 2004 SC 227.

The prosecutrix left her parents' house out of her own sweet will, left behind the letter showing the reason for her leaving the house and went away with the accused. She was found habituated to sexual intercourse and also pregnant at the time of her medical examination. The facts and circumstances clearly showed that she was a willing and consenting party for the sexual intercourse and from the evidence of her mother it appeared that she was 18 years of age, the accused was held entitled to acquittal. Sita Ram v. State, (2004) 3 Crimes 463 at p. 470 (Raj) : 2004 Cr LJ 4320 (Raj) : 2005(1) Rer LJ 77 : 2004(3) Raj Cri C 1352 : 2005(1) Raj LR 228.

Where the evidence of the minor victim girl as to how the accused persons kidnapped her from the school and confined her in the forest was corroborated by the evidence of her three class-mates who have given proper identification of the accused by their description and the accused were known to the class-mates of the victim girl, merely because some of the PWs were involved in criminal cases their evidence could not be subject to total rejection, and as such the High Court was justified in setting aside the acquittal recorded by the trial Court and therefore, the conviction and sentence imposed on the accused could not be interfered with. Shashidhar Purandhar Hegde v. State of Karnataka, 2004 Cr LJ 4677 at pp. 4681, 4682 (SC) : (2004) 4 Crimes 202 (SC) : (2004) 12 SCC 492 : AIR 2004 SC 5075.

The accused was immediately arrested and the clothes worn by him were sent for chemical examination. He fail to gave any explanation for presence of blood and semen stains on his clothes. The accused was found moving around during night with a child on his shoulder by a witness. 13. Consenting party.—In Varadarajan v. State of Madras, AIR 1965 SC 942 : 1965 (2) Cri LJ 33, a college girl who was a minor telephoned the accused and met him and thereafter went to the sub-Registrars office for registering marriage agreement. The supreme court held that the fact of her accompanying the accused was quite consistent with her own desire to be the wife of the accused on which the desire of accompanying him wherever he went was of cause implicit. The supreme Court found that she has willingly accompanied him and he was not guilty of taking away the girl out of the keeping of her father.

In State of Kerala v. Rajayyan, (1995) 2 Ker LJ 537 : 1996 Cri LJ 145, a minor girl of her own volition left her home and joined the accused to get the marriage registered. It was held that the ingredients of section 361 and 366. A were not at all attracted.

In Suresh Babu v. State of Kerala, 2001 Cri LJ 1483 (Ker) : 2001(1) CCR 233 (236) : 2001(2) Crimes 313 : 2001(1) Femi-Jurisce 302 (Ker). The prosecutrix aged about 16 years entered into an agreement of marriage and lived together as husband and wife and the accused had sexual intercourse with the prosecutrix on several occassions. It was held that the accused could not be said to have kidnapped or enticed her.

Prosecutrix 18 years old. No protest against the accused by prosecutrix—Remained together in crowded places, buses and on train, no offence under Section 363, 366 and 376, IPC, made out. Prosecutrix is consenting party. Mohammad Imteaz alias Sannu v. State of Haryana, (1994) 2 Recent CR 456 (P & H).

This Apex Court find that the High Court was justified in its conclusions about the prosecutrix having accompanied the accused on her own and being a consenting party to the sexual acts. As rightly contended by learned counsel for the State, if the age of the prosecutrix was below 16 years, the consent would be of no consequence. But the High Court's findings as regards the age of the prosecutrix cannot be said to be without any basis. The High Court has analysed the oral evidence and the documentary evidence to come to a conclusion that the date of birth of the prosecutrix as claimed by the prosecution has not been established. Held, there was inconsistency in evidence of prosecutrix. She appeared to have accompanied accused of her own accord and she was a consenting party to sexual acts. That being so, we find no merit in this appeal which is accordingly dismissed. State of H. P. v. Suresh Kumar @ Chhotu, AIR 2009 SC 1109

Where prosecutrix was going with accused in a train and lived with him—There was filed complaint from her—Age of prosecutrix was also not established—Evidence of her parents about age not dependable. 14. Motive.—Prosecution for offence under Section 363 IPC—Evidence clearly indicating the guilt of the accused.—Hence conviction not vitiated on account of absence of the motive. Pulabai v. State of Maharshtra, (1995) 1 CCR 333 (Bom).

15. Acquittal.—Accused convicted under Section 366, IPC—Which was challenged in appeal. It was held that the victim was below 18 years of age when accused has been acquitted of charge under Section 376, IPC, he cannot be convicted for mere offence of kidnapping under Section 363, IPC. Hence conviction altered to that under Section 363, IPC. Anandhan v. State, 1995 Cr LJ 832 (Mad).

No incriminating evidence. As against co-accused, there is no admissible incriminating evidence against them. Their inculpatory disclosure statements are totally inadmissible in evidence as nothing has been recovered or discovered by the police pursuant thereto and cannot even be read as evidence against them under Section 8 or Section 10 of the Evidence Act. Held, said accused would be entitled to acquittal. Ashok Kumar alias Govind vs. State, 2010 (2) CrLJ 2329 (Delhi).

Two eye-witnesses examined by the prosecution who happen to be the brother and the friend of the deceased did not support the prosecution version and resiled from their statement made during investigation. Therefore, the residual question is the acceptability of two dying declarations. The trial Court did not place any reliance on the dying declarations.

The discrepancy pointed by the trial Court is that in Exh. PD there is mention about one incident of rape on her on 28.07.1989 in a hotel at Sector 22 Chandigarh by Honey and two other accused. She does not state in the dying declaration in Ex PJ that she was raped on July 17th and stated that accused Honey had simply taken her to Rose Garden. In Exh. PJ she does not mention the date of the first incident as July 17th but states that her friend Rajni was also with her and they were taken to some unknown hotel while Honey raped her and accused Longoal raped Rajni. She also did not mention the second incident to have taken place on 28th July and stated that it was 2/3 days ago and not yesterday, when the boys took them to a hotel in Sector 22 and raped them. There are several inconsistencies and contrcdiations in the Exh. PD1 and PJ1.

Above being the position, when two Courts on analysis of the evidence found the respondents not guilty, there is no scope for interference in this appeal. The reasons indicated by the trial Court and affirmed by the High Court discarding the two dying declarations do not suffer from any infirmity. The appeal fails and is dismissed. State of Punjab vs. Chatinder Pal Singh, AIR 2009 SC 974 : 2008 (16) SCR 23 : 2008 (15) Scale 359.

Where though offences of kidnapping and rape were committed in the year 1987 but the date of committing rape had been mentioned in the charge 11/12.1.1986 thereby prejudicing the defence and it was found from the entire evidence that the victim girl was not a truthful witness, the trial Court was held to have committed an illegality in placing reliance on the testimony of the victim girl and other witnesses in convicting the accused. Dharam Pal v. State, 2004(3) Crimes 220 at pp. 222, 223 (All) : 2004 Cr LJ 3879 : AIR 2005 (SC) 4122 : 2004(6) SCC 513.

In a case of kidnapping and sexual assault on a child victim age 5-1/2 years the plea of false implication on account of family disputes between the accused and father of the victim is not tenable, as it is highly improbable that from making false implication a child of 5-1/2 years would be used as a pawn unmindful of the disrepute she would have to suffer in public with a stigma for the rest of her life. Parkash v. State of Haryana, 2004 Cr LJ 595 (SC) : (2004) 1 SCC 339 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 290 : AIR 2004 SC 227 : 2003 (10) JT 58 : 2004(1) Crimes 98 (SC).

16. Abetment.—Appellant compelling and coercing the prosecutrix to accompany the co-accused—Threats were advanced and offered cycle to co-accused to leave village hence playing of active role in abetting crime established.—Appeal was held dismissed and conviction and sentence was upheld.' Mohamrmd Kasam v. State of Punjab, (1995) 3 Crimes 5 (P & H).

17. Kidnapping and abduction.—The Investigating Officer has not investigated the case properly and not even a single person of various places where she was allegedly taken has been produced in support of the prosecution story. The evidence which has come on record leads to only one conclusion that Kumari Jesi (P.W.2) was not taken against her will nor was subjected to rape as alleged by her. The fact that in her first statement Ex. D1 her version has been that she left her house all alone and went to Ahmedabad without any persuasion from the accused is very significant. It supports the defence arguments that subsequently, at the instance of her father, she was made to change the whole story. Consequently, the accused cannot be found guilty under Sections 363, 366 and 376, I.P.C. Kasan v. State of Rajasthan 2002 Cri LJ 1460 (Raj.) : 2002(3) All Cri LR 794 : 2002(2) Rec Cri R 648.

Attempt to kidnapping.—Accused was caught red handed while trying to forcefully take away victim child from school premises i.e. lawful authority. There is nothing on record to show that the accused person had any intention to murder or to dispose of the victim child in a manner so as to put him in a danger of being murdered. The I.O. himself, stated that during the investigation he could not ascertain the purpose of kidnapping the boy. It has not been established that the attempt to kidnap was done with a view to murder or to dispose of the victim child in a manner so as to put him in danger of being murdered. It appears that the offence committed by the accused was an offence covered by the Section 361, IPC i.e. kidnapping from lawful guardian. Therefore, the conviction and punishment should have been made under Section 363, IPC for committing the offence under Section 361, IPC.

Therefore, in the absence of any ingredient regarding intention to murder, or to put the victim child in danger of being murdered, the conviction and sentence recorded under Section 364, IPC was not proper. However, as discussed above, from the evidence on record, it has been established that the appellant tried to take away the victim child, who was a minor at the relevant time from the lawful guardian. Therefore, by the alleged act, the appellant aforesaid tried to kidnap the said minor boy from his lawful guardian. Hence, it was a case of kidnapping simpliciter and as such the accused appellant committed the offence under Section 361, IPC, which is punishable under Section 363, IPC. The gravity and punishment of the offence under Section 363, IPC being lesser than the punishment prescribed by Section 364. Laxmi Chakraborty and etc vs State of Tripura, 2010 Cri LJ 1360 (Gauhati).

18. Proof of kidnapping.—Since in the present case, the prosecutrix PW2 Pinky was only 16 years of age, therefore, the offence of kidnapping punishable under Section

366, IPC is well proved against the accused appellants Sofar the participation of the accused appellants Hariram and Ramsharan is concerned, from the statement of the prosecutrix PW2 Pinky, it is also very much clear that they were found on its Raihway station chura and they went along with the accused appellant Rajan and prosecutrix from Churu to Delhi and they also accompanied them from one place to another at Delhi and therefore it cannot be said that no offense was committed by them. Rajan and Others v. State of Rajasthan 2002 Cri LJ 3152 Raj. : 2002(2) Raj Cri C 1035 : 2002(3) Raj LR 788 : 2002(3) WLC 607.

After hearing the learned Counsel for the parties and giving my thoughtful consideration to their respective arguments and also perusing the record. Court has found that document is not based upon material to prove date of birth of both the girls because admittedly, the dates of birth were not registered/recorded by the father of the girls with the Chowkidar of the village in a register of Births and Deaths or in the office of C.M.O. of the area. It is also not recorded from the original admission register, rather date of birth has been obtained from the certificate of 8th Class. Moreover, the learned Counsel for the State could not point out any other error in the judgment of the trial Court, which has formed an opinion in favour of the accused/respondents on the basis of evidence. It is well settled by the Supreme Court that if two views are possible in a case of acquittal, then the view which has been taken in favour of the accused/respondents should be maintained. State of Haryana vs. Ramesh Kumar, 2010 (2) CrLJ 1812 (P & H).

Accused persons took prosecutrix on point of knife from one place to another. No evidence showing that either of accused persons extended any premise or allurement to prosecutrix.

As regards charge under Sections 363 and 366 of IPC, in order to prove kidnapping the prosecution was required to prove that the appellants had taken or enticed the prosecutrix out of the keeping of her lawful guardian. The object behind Section 361 of IPC, which defines kidnapping, is to protect the minor children from being seduced for improper purposes and to protect the rights and privileges of guardians having lawful charge or custody of their minor wards. What is necessary is either taking or enticement, of the minor. Taking would include causing to go or getting into possession whereas enticement involves an idea of inducement, by igniting hopes or desire in the other. One does not entice other, unless the latter attempts to do a thing which he or she would not otherwise have done. In order to bring home conviction for kidnapping, there must be proof of the accused having done something which led to the girl going out of the keeping of her guardian. The words 'takes' and 'entices' as used in Section 361 of IPC need to be read together so as to take colour and content from each other.

In the present case, there is no evidence of either of the appellants having extended any promise or allurement to the prosecutrix. This is not the case of the prosecution that either of the appellants had promised to marry the prosecutrix or held out any other promise to her. The case of the prosecution is that the appellants had threatened the prosecutrix by putting knives on her person and being afraid of them she accompanied them to Merrut. That part of the deposition of the prosecutrix where she claimed that she had been threatened and two knives had been put on her person when she was taken from Delhi to Merrut cannot be believed and is obviously false. The truth appears to be that since the prosecutrix was previously known to the appellants, and had become friendly to one of them, she of her own abandoned the guardianship of her parents and eloped with the appellants. Though the prosecutrix has been found to be less than 16 years old, it cannot be said that she was not capable of knowing what she was doing. She was not of such an age so as to be unable to decide what was good and what was bad for her. Had the prosecutrix been about 10 months older, even the offence of rape would not have been made out against the appellants in the facts and circumstances of the case. In my view the facts and circumstances brought on record clearly show that the prosecutrix willingly accompanied the appellants and stayed with them till they were caught by the police. The prosecutrix knew and had the capacity to know the full import what she was doing. It is, therefore, difficult to say that the offence of kidnapping has been made out against the appellants in the facts and circumstances of this case.

Held, it cannot be said that accused persons took prosecutrix with them so as to force or seduce her to illicit intercourse. Offence of kidnapping has not been made out against them. Mohd. Imran Khan & etc. vs. State, 2010 (2) CrLJ 1756 (Delhi).

19. Kidnapping and Rape.—There are circumstances which strengthen the above conclusion. There is no dispute that the prosecutrix was a student at the material. time Raguvir Singh, inspector (PW-15), the investigating officer in the case, at one stage of his cross examination, denied the fact that he had gone to the concerned school to get the age certificate of the prosecutrix. However, on further cross examination, he had admitted that he had gone to get such certificate but there was difference in the entries regarding the age of the prosecutrix in the school record and the panchayat record. Thus, the school certificate does not appear to have been obtained and produced in evidence. In the absence of any explanation to show that for any reason the school certificate was not material and relevant to prove the age of the prosecutrix, an inference adverse to the prosecution has to be drawn to the effect that had such certificate been produced, that would have demolished the prosecution version regarding age of the prosecutrix. In the given circumstances of the of the case, similar inference deserves to be drawn to the effect that had such certificate been produced, that would have demolished the prosecution version regarding age of the prosecutrix. In the given circumstances of the case, similar inference deserves to the drawn for failure of the prosecution to get clinical/dental/radiological opinion about the age of the prosecutrix. Suresh Kumar v. State of H.P. 2002 Cri LJ 498 (H.P.) : 2002(2) All Cri LR 800.

20. Kidnapping for ransom.—Accused kidnapped victim girl for ransom, as and when he picked up the ransom amount which was kept at a spot as per his directions in the ransom note, he was arrested. He made a disclosure statement and pursuant thereto led the police to the house of co-accused wherefrom Sonam was recovered.

Victim girl did not disclose as to where she was kept was immaterial as she was about 4 1/2 years old when incident took place.

The first is of Mahesh Kumar being apprehended at the spot when he came to collect the ransom money and after he picked up the ransom note he was apprehended at the spot. The prosecution has also successfully proved that after Mahesh Kumar made the disclosure statement he led the Investigating Officer to the house of Ram Ashish from where the young girl was recovered.

Save and except the evidence of the kidnapped child being recovered from the house of Ram Ashish we find no evidence where from his intention or knowledge can be gathered. Mahesh Kumar vs. State, 2010 (3) Cri LJ 3208 (Del).

Accused kidnapped victim girl for ransom. Accused wrote ransom note to father of victim girl only stating that if ransom is not paid, his daughter would be sold.

It is obviously not a case where any threat was extended either to the victim or to her father of causing death or causing injury to the kidnapped child. We note that victim girl has not stated that she was maltreated by either accused.

Thus, the offence made out against Mahesh Kumar does not attract Section 364-A IPC. He has committed the offence punishable under Section 363, IPC as also the offence punishable under Section 367, IPC. Mahesh Kumar vs. State, 2010 (3) Cri LJ 3208 (Del).

The victim and his brother identified accused, but he is not sure as to whether the accused was seen at the forest or in the car, but this witness says convincingly that accused was involved very much in the occurrence. Though the accused persons had never been put on test identification parade, but in the facts and circumstances of the case, it will not have any adverse effect on the prosecution case.

Coming to the fact of this case, we do find that, was kidnapped along with his brother, whereas victim could be recovered in the afternoon and hence, he must have got several occasions to see the face of accused persons and those scenes must have been imprinted so deep not to be wiped out for number of years to come. Under these circumstances, testimonies of the witnesses, on the point of identification are quite acceptable.

That apart, accusation against the appellants further gets established, as one of the co-accused, confessed his guilt in writing which never seems to have been retracted, in his statement made under Section 313 Cr. P.C., has accepted that he had confessed his guilt in writing, wherein it has been stated that after hatching a plan with the other accused persons, they had kidnapped for ransom. Ekram Khan & Ors. vs State of Jharkhand, 2010 Cri LJ 1536 (Jharkhand).

21. Non-disclosure of name of informer.—Recovery of children on secret information given by police informer. Non-disclosure of name of informer by police.

The name of the secret informer who informed the SHO that a man would be disembarking has not been disclosed by any police officer, requiring this Court to disbelieve the testimony of the police officers and the father of the children, has hardly impressed us. The reason is obvious. Inasmuch as criminals have their own network, the police has a network of secret informers and if their names are disclosed, the network of informers created by the police would be breached and the informants life or limb may be endangered. Ashok Kumar alias Govind vs. State, 2010 (2) CrLJ 2329 (Delhi).

22. Circumstantial evidence—Last seen evidence.—In last seen theory, an element of identification is an important and strong factor. If either of the party i.e., culprit or the victim was not identified by a witness of lastly seen saying that they were in the company of each other, the circumstance of last seen fails because in that case it would not be established by the prosecution that who accompanied whom. If in a case based on last seen together, the identity of the culprit or the victim is doubtful or is not established beyond reasonable doubt, the circumstance shall not be held to be proved and the conviction based on such circumstance cannot be sustained. In the present case, the prosecution has failed to prove that it was the deceased who was accompanying the accused on his bicycle on the fateful day. Therefore, the guilt of accused was not proved beyond all reasonable doubt and he was entitled to get benefit of doubt. Sheo Kumar v. State of Chhattisgar, 2009 CriLJ 3165 (Chha).

1. Notes.—The section was inserted by Act 52 of 1959, Section 2 (with effect from 15.1.1960).

2. Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate of the first class.

If the kidnapping or obtaining the custody is in order that such minor may be employed or used for the purpose of begging and exclusively by a Court of Session, in case of maiming a minor in order the minor may be employed or used for the purpose of begging, the Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

3. Kidnapping.—Kidnapping from lawful guardian - It was found that the victim girl Savitri went to the accused Varadarajan on her own accord and both of them after visiting various places, ultimately went to the office of the Sub-Registrar and get an agreement of marriage registered. From the facts and circumstances of that particular case, the learned Judge of the Apex Court viewed that the girl was never taken away from the lawful custody of her guardian and, therefore, the provisions of Section 363, I.P.C. are not attracted. *Palipireddi Satayanarayana alias Sathi Babu v. 4. Kidnapping and Murder.—Evidence of last seen with the accused five days prior to death, however no evidence that he was taken forcibly or by adopting deceitful means. The medical evidence shows that the ante-mortem injuries on the persons of the deceased were not sufficient to cause his death and it was suspected that he died due to poisoning. The viscera preserved by the doctor was not sent to chemical Examiner and therefore, there is no evidence regarding cause of death. There no offense is made out. *Gulab Singh v. 5. Proof required.—(1) The kidnapped or maimed minor under 16 years if a male and under 18 years, if a female, (2) such person was if the kidnapping of a lawful guardian, (3) the accused kidnapped the here you and not being a lawful guardian obtained custody of the minor, and (4) the accused employed or used the minor for the purpose of begging.

6. Charge.—"I (name and office of the Magistrate. Session Judge etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused), as follows :—

"That on or about the.....day of ....at.......you kidnapped AB (a minor male then under 14 years of age or a minor female then 16 years of age or obtained the custody of the said minor).......for employing or using him for the purposes of begging by maiming the minor and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 363A of the Penal Code and within my cognizance" (or the cognizance of the Court of Session).

"And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge."

1. Amendment.—The words "imprisonment for life" were substituted for the words "transportation for life" by Act 26 of 1955, Section 117 and Sch. with effect from 1.1.1956. The word "India" in the illustration has been successively substituted by the A.O. 1948 and A.O. 1950 and Act 3 of 1951, Section 3 and Sch. for the words "British India".

In the instant case the accused was alleged to have kidnapped mother of the informant. The FIR was recorded after much delay and the informant claimed that to have reported the matter about the incident on the next day of the occurrence and he also put his signatures on the statements recorded by the police but the document was not brought on record. No independent witness was examined. Moreover there appeared much contradiction in the evidence of prosecution witnesses as regards the manner of occurrence. Conviction was held not proper. Deori Bankere v. the State of Bihar, 2001 Cri LJ 3579 (Jharkhand).

2. Notes.—For a conviction under this section it is necessary to show that there was a pre-conceived plan for committing the murder. AIR 1938 Cal 51 : 66 Cr LJ 235 : 42 CWN 129. Where a person was abducted by the accused in order that he might be held to ransom, and where it did not follow as a matter of course that he was in danger of being murdered. Held, that a conviction under this section cannot stand. 6 LBR 160 : 91 Ind Cas 240 : 27 Cr LJ 64. In a prosecution under this section, where there was no incriminating evidence whatsoever against the accused beyond the fact that he and the deceased left together and were last seen together, and that the one returned without the other. Held, that although circumstances lead to a high degree of suspicion against the accused, they cannot be said to be inconsistent with any reasonable theory other than that the accused lured him away for the purpose of having him murdered, or being exposed to the danger of being murdered and hence no conviction could be safely had. 9 Lah LJ 396 : 103 Ind Cas 836 : 28 Cr LJ 758 : AIR 1927 Lah 658. In case of abduction of person in broad day light sentence of transportation for life was held not to be too severe. 143 Ind Cas 55 : 10 OWN 7 : 34 Cr LJ 498 : AIR 1933 Oudh 148 ; see also AIR 1933 Lah 1035. Legal evidence is necessary for a conviction under this section. AIR 1939 Mad 593 : 40 Cr LJ 849. In a case under this section the prosecution must prove that there was a misrepresentation and that the particular misrepresentation was the result of a plan to murder and that it was one by which the abducted person was himself deceived and was induced to go. 50 Cr LJ 1008 : AIR 1949 Dacca 21 ; 41 CWN 287. In a case under this section, depending on circumstantial evidence, the question of motive is of great importance. Absence of motive is a circumstance in favour of the accused. It must be proved that the accused had the intention at the time of abduction, that the person abducted should be murdered or should be so disposed of as to be put in danger of being murdered. AIR 1940 Cal 541 : 42 Cr LJ 285 : see also AIR 1939 Mad 593 : 40 Cr LJ 593 ; AIR 1936 Oudh 44 : 37 Cr LJ 12. Only self-exculpatory statements do not warrant conviction. 1935 MWN 951. Where the case for the prosecution is that the person abducted has been murdered by the abductor, there is no scope for a charge under this section. AIR 1940 Cal 561 : 42 Cr LJ 285.

When the accused was one of the persons who were responsible for kidnapping or abducting the deceased, so that he may be murdered or may be so disposed of as to be put in danger of being murdered and the deceased was found lying murdered on the next day, the conviction of the accused was altered from one under Section 302 to Section 364, Penal Code and was sentenced to imprisonment for life. 64 Punj LR 1017.

In order to sustain a charge under Section 364, it is incumbent upon the prosecution to prove that the abductors had the intention at the time of abduction that the person abducted should be murdered or would be disposed of as to be put in danger of being murdered. ILR 40 Pat 809.

Where the modus operandi as disclosed in the letters from the accused demanding ransom from the father of the boy whom they have kidnapped is by putting him in fright of the boy being murdered and there is throughout the likelihood of the boy being murdered in case the ransom money was not paid for one ransom or other, the accused are guilty of the aggravated forms of kidnapping and extortion under Sections 364 and 368. AIR 1957 SC 381 : 1957 Cr LJ 559.

Where on the same circumstantial evidence it is found that the offences under Sections 364 and 386 were actually committed in pursuance of the conspiracy or in pursuance of the common intention, one accused would be equally guilty with the other of the two substantive offences and would be liable to the same sentence. In order to bring home a charge under Section 364 in a trial by jury, the jury must be satisfied that at the time when the accused took away the deceased they had the intention to cause his death AIR 1956 Cal 600 : 1956 Cr LJ 1313. Accused charged under Sections 302 and 364 but acquitted under Section 302 can be convicted under Section 364. AIR 1954 Hyd 88 : ILR 1953 Hyd 756 : 1954 Cr LJ 641. In 1963 SCD 638 : 1963 (2) Cr LJ 170 : AIR 1963 SC 1074, the Supreme Court held that there was no scope for argument that verdict should be interferred with or conviction under Section 302 based on it, altered on hypothetical considerations is not founded on any facts on record.

Where the accused died before he was kidnapped the charge under Section 364, IPC, must necessarily fail. AIR 1975 SC 123. Abduction by itself is no offence. It is an offence when coupled with one of the intentions contemplated by the Penal Code. 1977 UP Cr C 62. Where there is no evidence to show that A was abducted for being murdered or he was ever put in danger of being murdered and the witness are not reliable the conviction is untenable, 1979 Bihar Cr C 41. Proof of age the prosecutrix below 18 when not proved beyond doubt, accused is to be acquitted. 1977 Raj Cr C 362. Where there is no indication that the alleged misrepresentation was the result of the plan to murder ; the appellant can not be held guilty under Section 364. 1975 Cr LJ 950. So far as kidnapping for the purpose mentioned in the section in concerned, it is an aggravated form of offence under Section 363. AIR 1957 SC 381 : 1957 Cr LJ 559 ; see also AIR 1975 SC 1252. The intention must exist at the time of abduction. AIR 1963 SC 1014 : 1963 (2) Cr LJ 170 ; AIR 1979 SC 1410 : 1979 Cr LJ 1089 ; AIR 1979 SC 1280 : 1979 Cr LJ 871.

Charge under Section 148 related to murder taking place other than the place of abduction subsequent to the alleged abduction of the deceased. Common object would not be availed for sustaining the conviction for abduction. AIR 1954 SC 911 : 1984 Cr LJ 814.

Since charge-sheet under Section 364, IPC has been furnished by police in that crime the Session Judge while trying the case may summon anyone as witnesses under Section 311, Cr PC. Hence petition rejected. Ramji Lal v. Dila, 1995 JIC 979 (Alld).

In absence of enmity of deceased with accused there is no evidence to connect the accused with the murder the accused cannot be convicted for taking away the deceased for his medical treatment before his murder. Conviction is therefore set aside. Lakhan Rabidas v. State of Bihar, (1995) 2 East Cr C 127 (Pat).

3. Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session exclusively.

Where one of the offences complained of was under Section 364 triable by Court of Sessions, the Magistrate's action summoning the accused was quashed. 1982 Cr LJ 1170 : 1982 All Cr R 101.

4. Charge.—I (name and office of Session Judge, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That on or about the . . . . day of . . . . at . . . . you kidnapped, (or abducted) AB in order that the said AB might be murdered (or might be so disposed of as to be put in danger of being murdered), and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 364 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.

"And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge."

5. Evidence and proof.—Where there was non-examination of important witness and non-production of important evidence had inherent weakness of the prosecution story.—Order of conviction and sentence cannot be sustained. Mahabir v. State of U.P. (1995) 2 Crimes 575 (All) (DB).

Accused was caught red handed while trying to forcefully take away victim child from school premises i.e. lawful authority. There is nothing on record to show that the accused person had any intention to murder or to dispose of the victim child in a manner so as to put him in a danger of being murdered. The I.O. himself, stated that during the investigation he could not ascertain the purpose of kidnapping the boy. It has not been established that the attempt to kidnap was done with a view to murder or to dispose of the victim child in a manner so as to put him in danger of being murdered. It appears that the offence committed by the accused was an offence covered by the Section 361, IPC i.e. kidnapping from lawful guardian. Therefore, the conviction and punishment should have been made under Section 363, IPC for committing the offence under Section 361, IPC.

Therefore, in the absence of any ingredient regarding intention to murder, or to put the victim child in danger of being murdered, the conviction and sentence recorded under Section 364, IPC was not proper. However, as discussed above, from the evidence on record, it has been established that the appellant tried to take away the victim child, who was a minor at the relevant time from the lawful guardian. Therefore, by the alleged act, the appellant aforesaid tried to kidnap the said minor boy from his lawful guardian. Hence, it was a case of kidnapping simpliciter and as such the accused appellant committed the offence under Section 361, IPC, which is punishable under Section 363, IPC. The gravity and punishment of the offence under Section 363, IPC being lesser than the punishment prescribed by Section 364. Laxmi Chakraborty and etc vs State of Tripura, 2010 Cri LJ 1360 (Gauhati).

The case was based on circumstantial evidence. The "last seen" evidence is a link but it is a weak type of evidence unless corroborated by other evidence. The prosecution has failed to say how the deceased sustained fatal injuries. Hence conviction set aside. Dhanna s/o Lalu Kalbelia v. State of Rajasthan, 1995 Cr LR 698 (Raj).

Accused, alleged to be last seen with deceased girl and this was extra-judicial confession. Alleged cause of death by throttling—These allegations not proved from oral and medical evidence. Accused was held entitled to be acquitted. Arumugham v. State, 1994 Cri LJ 520 (Mad).

Kidnapped child was a prosecution witness and he admits tutoring in cross-examination—Evidence of witnesses declared hostile—Medical evidence not corroborating child's evidence—Evidence of child not reliable and kidnapping held doubtful—On such evidence conviction of accused not sustainable. Pankaj Naik v. State of Orissa, 1994 Cri LJ 829 ; (1994) 2 East Cr C 51 (Ori).

Rape and murder of a girl aged 2 years. The evidence of PW-5 and PW-6 reveals that appellant had been seen around the complainant's house on the previous day and as he was not a resident of this area, he had been quickly singled out. These witnesses further stated the appellant had been seen in the vicinity again after the rape and murder and he had accordingly been apprehended and handed over to the police and two chains worn by deceased had been taken from his pockets. PW-13 also identified the chains in Court. It is true that in the cross-examination of these two witnesses, several improvements vis-a-vis their statements under Sec. 161 of Criminal Procedure Code had been pointed out by the defence Counsel, but the fact that the appellant had been present in the vicinity of the house and had been arrested, soon after the incident has been admitted even by the defence.

Another significant piece of evidence is the statement of PW-7 who testified to the fact that about 2:30 a.m. on the night of the murder he had gone out of the house to urinate and had seen the appellant outside and on being questioned, the appellant had threatened him with dire consequences with the result that he had not informed anybody till the third day after the police had come to the village to verify the facts. He too stated to the fact that two chains had been recovered from the pocket of the appellant. It is true that several improvements have been made by the three primary witnesses but there is absolutely no reason as to why they would involve the appellant in a false case as admittedly he was a stranger to the locality and they bore him no ill will.

We have also gone through the evidence of PW-12 relating to the recovery of the frock pursuant to a disclosure statement made by the appellant under Sec. 27 of the Evidence Act. Nothing could be spelt out from the cross-examination of this witness except that the recovery had not been made from a closed place, though he explained that there was very little movement of human beings in that area as no one was residing close by. This witness also identified the frock that had been recovered. It is equally significant that the strands of fibre recovered from the place of incident had been matched with the material of the frock and were found to be from the same source.

It is true that in a criminal matter the onus of proof lies almost exclusively on the prosecution. As already mentioned above, however, the appellant has not been able to give any explanation in his statement under Sec. 313 of Criminal Procedure Code as to what he had been doing in that locality. On the contrary he admitted his presence by stating that he had been caught by the neighbours on suspicion of the murder and beaten up, and had suffered several injuries in the process. The medical evidence on the contrary reveals that these injuries could also have been sustained while raping and killing the young child.

The evidence that the appellant was a paedophile with extremely violent propensities also stands proved on record in that he had been convicted and sentenced for an offence punishable under Sec. 354 in the year 1998 and later for offences punishable under Secs. 363, 376, 379, 302 and 201 of the IPC for the rape and murder of a young child and had been awarded a sentence of imprisonment for life under Sec. 302, and several other terms of imprisonment with respect to the other Secs., though, an appeal in this connection was pending as on date. It is also extremely relevant that the appellant, had, in addition, been tried for the murders of several other children but had been acquitted on the 28.07.2005 with the benefit of doubt. The present incident happened three days later. We accordingly dismiss the appeals but modify the sentence of death to one for the rest of his life in terms of the judgment in Shraddananda's case.

Where mother of child stated in evidence that her son was murdered, there is no need to make any enquiry into moral life of mother. State of U.P. v. Raghubir Singh, 1997 (1) Crimes 53 (SC).

The allegation was that accused had kidnapped victim child of four years of age from house of parents and took him to village and pushed him into well whereby his death was caused. Extra judicial statement made to the witnesses was not genuine and voluntary and other evidence was not sufficient to connect the accused with the offence alleged. The accused was held entitled to the acquittal. Sarala v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 1195 (Mad) : 2003(1) Cur Cri R 38 : 2003(1) Mad LW (Cri) 54.

When there is enmity between informant and accused due to land dispute it is natural that he will not send his son with him and if son is taken away by accused the informant instead of filing the FIR will not go in search of the body. In a case of kidnapping a boy of 8 years conviction of accused was held improper when the motive for commission of the offence was not shown and the evidence led by prosecution suffered from intermine improbabilities and discrepancies. Kaptan v. State of UP, 2004 Cr LJ 1556 (All) : 2004 All LJ 492 : 2004(48) All Cri C 94.

In another Allahabad case, the prosecution alleged that the victim, after attending Court proceedings went along with accused and did not return. There was long-standing enmity between the complainant, brother of victim and his family and the accused. There was no evidence to show that victim went along with complainant and other witnesses to attend case of the alleged date of incident. The delay of two months in lodging FIR was not explained. It was held that conviction of accused was not proper. Kaliyan Singh v. State of UP, 2004 Cr LJ 4262 (All) : 2004 All LJ 2727.

6. Acquittal.—Several accused were involved—Acquittal was of respondent accused and there was State appeal—Sole witness not implicating respondent for abduction or murder—Guilt of respondent was not fully established-Acquittal of respondent was hence affirmed. State of M.P. v. Amar Singh, 1994 Cri LJ 619 (SC) ; AIR 1994 SC 650.

Where though offences of kidnapping and rape were committed in the year 1987 but the date of committing rape had been mentioned in the charge 11/12.1.1986 thereby prejudicing the defence and it was found from the entire evidence that the victim girl was not a truthful witness, the trial Court committed an illegality in placing reliance on the testimony of the victim girl and other witnesses in convicting the accused. Dharam Pal v. State, 2004(3) Crimes 220 (All).

The accused was alleged to have abducted wife of informant in order to murder her by entering into his house at night after breaking tin door but independent witness did not support prosecution case and became hostile and the same was done by some of witnesses also. The fact that inmates of house did not wake up by the sound produced by breaking of tin door made prosecution case doubtful. The conviction of accused was set aside as investigating officer did not find any sign or clue of commission of murder of wife of informant. Chhota Tael v. State, 2003 Cr LJ (NOC) 88 (Jhar) : AIR 2003 Jhar HCR 331 : 2002(3) East Cri C 4.

7. Conviction.—Alleged murder of mother-in-law by throttling her neck and throwing dead body in bush—Convicted under Section 302, IPC, and sentenced to life-imprisonment and under Section 364, IPC for five years Rigorous Imprisonment and under Section 201 for 2 years Rigorous Imprisonment—Appeal filed challenging of the same—The evidence of Doctor and inquest panchname establishes that death was due to throttling. The evidence of PW 3 shows that deceased was in company of accused on the date of occurrence. The Doctor also stated that injuries were sufficient to cause death in ordinary course of nature. Hence guilt of accused is proved conviction and sentence confirmed. Jillela Madhu v. State of A.P., (1994) 2 ALT (Cri) 209 (AP).

The allegation that accused persons armed with guns and arms belt forcibly took deceased in their company and motive was that they were witnesses in a dacoity case against the accused. There was no serious infirmity in ocular testimony of witnesses about abduction of deceased persons and their eventual killing. Accusations attributed to the accused persons squarely attracted mischief of Section 364/34 and their conviction for offence charged was held proper. Yadunandan Mandal v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 2167 (Pat) : 2002(3) BLJ 290 : 2002(3) BLJR 2357 : 2002(3) East CriC 170 : 2002(3) Pat LJR 779.

Due to enmity accused persons were said to have kidnapped victim girl of six or seven years of age and committed her murder. The dead body was not recovered from the place pointed out by the accused and extra-judicial confession made by him was also not found reliable. The conviction of accused under Section 302/34 was held not proper but his conviction under Section 364 was sustained as it was proved that it was accused who had kidnapped the girl. Sibu Jhanghu v. State, 2004 Cr LJ (NOC) 35 (Jhar) : AIR 2004 Jhar HCR 104 : 2003(2) JCR JHA 366 : 2003(1) JLJR 362.

8. Abduction.—Abduction in order to murder. If a person is abducted with the intention that he may be murdered or with the knowledge that he may be put to danger of being murdered, the offence under Sec. 364, IPC would be complete even if the victim, eventually, escapes or is not murdered. Conversely, if the victim is not abducted with the intention of being murdered or with the knowledge that he is likely to be murdered, but if such a victim is eventually, murdered, penal provisions of Sec. 364, IPC would not be attracted to such a case for the gravamen of the charge under Sec. 364 is that kidnapping or abduction has to be either with the intention to murder the victim or with the knowledge that the victim is likely to be murdered.

Where the abductors were armed with weapon and there was no explanation by accused as to why the victims were abducted, it could be presumed that victims were abducted with at least, the knowledge that they were likely to be murdered and thus, the accused were guilty of offence under Sec. 364. When a fact is especially or pre-eminently within the knowledge of an accused, the onus lies on him to offer his explanation for his conduct if his intention was contrary to, or in consistent with what his conduct indicated. When the prosecution succeed in proving certain facts, the Court may presume the existence of certain other facts, which are likely to follow, in normal circumstances, from the proven facts. Such a presumption is available to a Court in the light of the provisions of Sec. 114 of the Evidence Act. Shri Moni Neog and Ors. v. State of Assam, 2006 CriLJ 1944 (Gau).

1. Procedure.—The offence is cognizable, non-bailable, non-compoundable and triable by the Court of Session.

2. Ingredients.—(1) The accused kidnapped or abducted any person.

(2) He kept a person in detention after such kidnapping or abduction.

(3) The accused threatened to cause death or hurt to such person.

(4) Threatened to cause hurt or death to such person in order to compel the Government or any foreign State or international, inter-governmental organisation or any other person to do or abstain from doing any act.

(5) Such kidnapping or abduction was for ransom.

3. Scope and applicability of section.—To attract the provisions of section 364-A, IPC prosecution has to prove that the accused kidnapped or abducted the child, kept him under detention after such kidnapping and that the kidnapping was for ransom. Mere recovery of letter purported to have been written by the accused indicating a demand of Rs. 50,000/- by itself would not be covered under the expression to "pay a ransom". For the purpose of getting paid a ransom a demand has to be made and communicated. Unless the price of retrieval or rescue is made the question to pay a ransom would not arise. Therefore, the essential ingredient to attract the provisions of section 364-A is that there has to be a demand by the kidnapper on the complainant or any of his relations asking for the payment of ransom. "To pay" means to set in motion the demand for payment. Demand cannot be by keeping the letter in one's pocket. It has to be communicated to the person from whom the demand to pay is made. Unless that is done, prosecution cannot succeed in covering its case under section 364-A Netra Pal v. State (NCT of Delhi) 2001 Cri LJ 1669 (Delhi).

In the case of Mohammad Rashid Ansari v. State, reported in (1998) 2 cur Cri R 608 the minor boy was kidnapped. There was allegation of demanding ransom by the accused from the uncle of the kidnapped child but on facts the alleged demand was not established. The demand of ransom having not been established, the court observed that , "In the instant case exept for indicating that there must be some strong reason for the accused appellants to take the boy away in the aforesaid manner, that alone is not, in our opinion enough to make out the theory of ransom."

In the case of Mohan v. State of Tamil Nadu (1998) 5 SCC 363 : (1998 Cri LJ 3276) a boy of 10 years age was kidnapped for ransom. The kidnapper contracted the father of the deceased and demanded Rs. 5 lacs so that the boy could be released otherwise they threatened to kill him. After killing the boy they again contracted the father of the deceased to get a ransom of Rs. 5 lacs and ultimately succeeded in extracting a sum of Rs. 5 lacs from him. It was in this background that the apex court held that it was a case of kidnapping for ransom. In the above case the demand was made by the kidnappers by contracting the father of the kidnapped boy. There was communication of demand by contract.

Accused kidnapped victim girl for ransom. Accused wrote ransom note to father of victim girl only stating that if ransom is not paid, his daughter would be sold.

It is obviously not a case where any threat was extended either to the victim or to her father of causing death or causing injury to the kidnapped child. We note that victim girl has not stated that she was maltreated by either accused.

Thus, the offence made out against accused does not attract Section 364-A IPC. He has committed the offence punishable under Section 363, IPC as also the offence punishable under Section 367, IPC. Mahesh Kumar vs. State, 2010 (3) Cri LJ 3208 (Del).

The victim and his brother identified accused, but he is not sure as to whether the accused was seen at the forest or in the car, but this witness says convincingly that accused was involved very much in the occurrence. Though the accused persons had never been put on test identification parade, but in the facts and circumstances of the case, it will not have any adverse effect on the prosecution case.

Coming to the fact of this case, we do find that, was kidnapped along with his brother, whereas victim could be recovered in the afternoon and hence, he must have got several occasions to see the face of accused persons and those scenes must have been imprinted so deep not to be wiped out for number of years to come. Under these circumstances, testimonies of the witnesses, on the point of identification are quite acceptable.

That apart, accusation against the appellants further gets established, as one of the co-accused, confessed his guilt in writing which never seems to have been retracted, in his statement made under Section 313 Cr. P.C., has accepted that he had confessed his guilt in writing, wherein it has been stated that after hatching a plan with the other accused persons, they had kidnapped for ransom. Ekram Khan & Ors. vs State of Jharkhand, 2010 Cri LJ 1536 (Jharkhand).

4. Evidence and proof.—Where the PWs 3 and 4 were stated to have witnessed a part of the occurrence, i.e. A-1 calling the victim PW 2 and their going towards the vehicle. Though PW 4 resiled from the statement made during investigation, his evidence corroborated the evidence of PWs 2 and 3 to the extent that he had seen PW 2 going in the company of somebody towards the trap Jeep. The trial Court took into account the evidence of PWs 2 and 3 and the fact that the vehicle and the accused persons were confined by the villagers and they were arrested from the spot found the accused guilty while acquitting A-2 to A-4 as the evidence was not found sufficient to convict them under Section 364A of IPC. In appeal the High Court on analysis of factual position, affirmed the view of the trial Court. In the instant case, as the factual position found by the trial Court and the High Court went to show, the object of abduction was for ransom which was clearly conveyed to the victim PW 2 no matter who would pay the same and therefore, the concurrent findings of the courts below did not warrant interference. Malleshi v. State of Karnataka, 2004(4) Crimes 53 (SC) : 2004(8) SCC 95 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 2115 : 2004(8) JT 72.

In the instant case there was no eye-witness and the victim or kidnappee alleged to have been recovered from his own house himself, who could be the best witness, was murdered in some other incident before being produced as a witness in the case, original letters claiming ransom from the son of kidnappee has not been produced, the alleged recovery statement made by the accused as to recovery of the kidnappee has not been proved and there was no test identification of the accused persons despite their claim, the accused persons cannot be convicted for offence under Section 364A of IPC. State v. Shashi Shekhar, 2004 Cr LJ 2961 (All) : 2004 All LJ 1804 : 2004 (2) All Cri R 1088.

Where the two witnesses to the recovery of the boy from the house of the accused and father of the main accused were declared hostile of the prosecution and the mother of the boy merely stated that her son was missing on the day of occurrence, and there was no evidence that demand for ransom was made by the accused persons.

prosecution miserably failed to establish its case for offence under Section 364A of IPC against the accused persons. Mazhar Hussain v. State, 2004(2) Crimes 432 (Pat). See also Pappu v. State, 2005 Cr LJ 3380 (Delhi) : 2006 (1) East Cri C 129.

After making the demand to the kidnapped or abducted person merely because the demand could not be conveyed to some other person, as the accused is arrested in the meantime does not take away the offence out of the purview of Section 364A of IPC. Malleshi v. State of Karnataka, 2004(4) Crimes 53 (SC) : 2004(8) SCC 95 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 2115 : 2004(8) JT 72 : 2004(6) Supreme 609.

5. Sentence.—Held, there was no evidence on record to suggest that the accused was found involved previously in any heinous crime, nor there was evidence that he would be danger to the society, if the death penalty was not awarded. There was no evidence as to who actually caused the death of the deceased though the offence committed by the accused deserved severe condemnation and was the most heinous crime, but on cumulative facts and circumstances of the case, it could not be held that the case fell in the category of rarest of the rare cases, and instead of death penalty, award of life imprisonment to the accused for offence under Section 364A, IPC would be justified. Mannu v. State of UP, 2005 Cr LJ 3469 (All) : 2005 All LJ 2280 : 2005(52) All Cri C 831 : 2005(2) All Cri R 2185.

Rarest of rare. The accused persons were not criminals. They were friends. The deceased was said to have been selected because his father was rich. The motive, if any, was to collect some money. They were not professional killers. They have no criminal history. All were unemployed and were searching for jobs.

Further if age of the accused was a relevant factor for the High Court for not imposing death penalty on accused Nos. 2 and 3, the same standard should have been applied to the case of the appellant also who was only two years older and still a young man in age. Accused Nos. 2 and 3 were as much a part of the crime as the appellant. Though it is true, that it was he who allegedly proposed the idea of kidnapping, but at the same time it must not be forgotten that the said plan was only executed when all the persons involved gave their consent thereto.

It must be noted that the discretion given to the Court in such cases assumes onerous importance and its exercise becomes extremely difficult because of the irrevocable character of death penalty. One of the principles which we think is clear is that the case is such where two views ordinarily could be taken, imposition of death sentence would not be appropriate, but where there is no other option and it is shown that reformation is not possible, death sentence may be imposed.

Sec. 354(3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure requires that when the conviction is for an offence punishable with death or in the alternative with imprisonment for life or imprisonment for a term of years, the judgment shall state the reasons for the sentence awarded, and in the case of sentence of death, the special reasons thereof.

We do not think that the reasons assigned by the Courts below disclose any special reason to uphold the death penalty. The discretion granted to the Courts must be exercised very cautiously especially because of the irrevocable character to death penalty. Requirements of law to assign special reasons should not be construed to be an empty formality.

We have previously noted that the judicial principles for imposition of death penalty are far from being uniform. Without going into the merits and demerits of such discretion and subjectivity, we must nevertheless reiterate the basic principle, stated repeatedly by this Court, that life imprisonment is the rule and death penalty an exception. Each case must, therefore, be analyzed and the appropriateness of punishment determined on a case-by-case basis with death sentence not to be awarded save in the 'rarest of rare' case where reform is not possible. Keeping in mind at least this principle we do not think that any of the factors in the present case discussed above warrants the award of the death penalty. There are no special reasons to record the death penalty and the mitigating factors in the present case, discussed previously, are, in our opinion, sufficient to place it out of the "rarest of rare" category.

For the reasons aforementioned, we are of the opinion that this is not a case where death penalty should be imposed. The appellant, therefore, instead of being awarded death penalty, is sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for life. Santosh Kumar Satishbhushan Bariyar vs. State of Maharashtra, 2009 (6) SCC 498 : 2009 (7) JT 248 : 2009 (9) SCR 90 : 2009 (7) Scale 341 : 2009 (4) Supreme 235 : 2009 (5) SLT 166.

Sentence Reduction. So far as Sec. 364A of IPC is concerned, the only option is given to the Court is to award punishment of death or punishment for imprisonment of life. There is no other option and the lower Court has awarded imprisonment for life. This Court cannot under the provisions of Sec. 364A of IPC reduce that sentence. There is no option, no power given to the Court in that regard. Therefore, the submission of accused of lesser punishment cannot be accepted. Shridhar Yeshwant Bhosale v. State of Maharashtra, 2007 CriLJ 1380 (Bom).

6. Non-disclosure of name of informer.—Recovery of children on secret information given by police informer. Non-disclosure of name of informer by police.

The name of the secret informer who informed the SHO that a man would be disembarking has not been disclosed by any police officer, requiring this Court to disbelieve the testimony of the police officers and the father of the children, has hardly impressed us. The reason is obvious. Inasmuch as criminals have their own network, the police has a network of secret informers and if their names are disclosed, the network of informers created by the police would be breached and the informants life or limb may be endangered. Ashok Kumar alias Govind vs. State, 2010 (2) CrLJ 2329 (Delhi).

7. No incriminating evidence.—As against co-accused, there is no admissible incriminating evidence against them. Their inculpatory disclosure statements are totally inadmissible in evidence as nothing has been recovered or discovered by the police pursuant thereto and cannot even be read as evidence against them under Section 8 or Section 10 of the Evidence Act. Held, said accused would be entitled to acquittal. Ashok Kumar alias Govind vs. State, 2010 (2) CrLJ 2329 (Delhi).

8. Charge.—I, (name and office of the Sessions Judge) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :

That on or about......at...........you kidnapped (or abducted) and kept a person..........in detention after such kidnapping (or abduction) and threatened to cause death or hurt to such person (or caused hurt or dealt on such person) in order to compel the Government (or any foreign State or international, inter-governmental, organisation or any other person) to do or abstain from doing any act to pay a ransom, and you have thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 364-A, IPC and within the cognizance of the Court of Session.

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

9. Common Intention.—It is not the demand of ransom alone, but it is when the conduct of the person who demands ransom that gives rise to a reasonable apprehension that the person for whose release the demand has been made that on failure such person may be put to death or caused hurt, that the provision under Sec. 364-A is attracted. In the present case, there is not even a whisper in the testimony of father of boy that accused No.1 ever intimidated that if the demand of Rs. 30,000/- was not met, harm would be caused to the kidnapped child, and that he was acting with consent of co-accused. Therefore, offending act of accused No.1 does not constitute an offence punishable u/S. 364-A of the IPC. In these circumstances, appellants No. 2 and No.3 also cannot be convicted u/S. 364-A of the IPC. Durgashankar alias Durgalal and Ors. v. State of M.P., 2006 CriLJ 2494 (DB) (MP).

Sec. 365. Kidnapping or abducting with intent secretly and wrongfully to confine person.—Whoever kidnaps or abducts any person with intent to cause that person to be secretly and wrongfully confined, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

1. Scope.—To support a conviction under this section, it must be clearly proved that at the time of the abduction, it was the intention of the accused to secretly and wrongfully confine the person. 18 CLJ 578 : Ind Cas 187 ; see also 92 Ind Cas 213 : 1925 Lah 614 : 27 Cr LJ 229 ; 7 LLJ 529 : 26 PLR 733 : AIR 1925 Lah 614 ; 73 Ind Cas 510 : 24 Cr LJ 622. Where an accused is charged with rape and abduction, the abduction being an aggravating circumstance two separate sentence should not be passed. 89 Ind Cas 912 : 26 Cr LJ 1440 : AIR 1926 Lah 114. "The will of the woman may ultimately be gained over but this will not affect the offence, when the kidnapping or abduction is with the knowledge or intention which the section mentions."—Morgan and Macpherson.

Where a person was abducted by the accused in order that he might be held to ransom and where it did not follow as a matter of course that he was in danger of being murdered. Held, conviction under Section 364 cannot stand, but a conviction under Section 365, IPC, was justifiable as though the main object was to extort money. 6 LBR 160 : 19 Ind Cas 167 : 14 Cr LJ 167 : 6 Bur LT 77. The accused abducted B in order to put pressure upon her friends to restore a young girl whom they had abducted. She was restored a few days after B was abducted and then B was also let go. It was not found that any harm was done to B. Held, that under such circumstances heavy sentence of imprisonment on the accused were not necessary. 89 PLR 1916 : 17 Cr LJ 472 : 36 Ind Cas 152. Where the appellant intended and actually did confine a girl wrongfully while he negotiated with her relations for the payment of a sum of Rs. 690/- which was practically her ransom. Held, this act therefore fell under Section 365 IPC. 73 Ind Cas 510 : 24 Cr LJ 622 : AIR 1923 Lah 158. This section makes punishable the offence of abduction with intent to cause the person abducted to be secretly and wrongfully confined. 7 Lah LJ 520 : 26 PLR 733 : AIR 1925 Lah 614.

For a conviction under this section an intention to secretly confine abducted person is necessary. 92 Ind Cas 313 : 27 Cr LJ 229 : AIR 1925 Lah 614. An offence under Section 365 consists of kidnapping or abducting any person with intent to cause that person to be secretly and wrongfully confined, 109 Ind Cas 677 : 29 Cr LJ 597 : 10 AI Cr R 277. There can certainly be no offence of kidnapping if a person of age is conveyed from one part of British India to another. 137 Ind Cas 290 : 33 Cr LJ 514 : 9 OWN 243.

Accused persons took deceased forcibly along with his jeep and thereafter dead body of deceased was found in well, contradictions in statements of witnesses to prove that accused persons kidnapped deceased forcibly. No evidence to prove motive, either personal enmity or theft for killing deceased, recovery of purse, driving licence and number plates at instance of accused persons not significant. Held, accused entitled to benefit of doubt. Bablu @ Om Prakash vs. State of Rajasthan, 2010 (2) CrLJ 1728 (Raj).

Essence of offence under Section 365 is kidnapping. Therefore where the accused cannot be convicted under Section 363, she cannot be convicted under Section 365. 1957 Cr LJ 688.

An offence under this section is clearly made out when there is a finding that the woman in question has been forcibly dragged out of her house and was kept locked up in a room in the home belonging to the accused. AIR 1954 All 51 : 1954 Cr LJ 46 : 1953 All LJ 421. Where the case of the prosecution is that the person abducted has been murdered there is no scope for the charge under Section 364. ILR (1953) Hyd 322 : 1953 Cr LJ 1517 : AIR 1953 Hyd 249. A mere abduction as such and by itself is not an offence. 1971 Cr LJ 1221 ; see also 1980 All LJ 101.

Intention how proved.—Where a girl was forcibly removed from her father's house by the accused person at the instance of her husband and was taken to the house of her husband's brother-in-law so that her father should not be able to find her, the Court is entitled to come to the conclusion that she was to be secretly confined in that house, and the conviction of the accused under Section 365, IPC, is justifiable. Their intention at the time of abduction can be deduced only from what the accused subsequently did. 163 Ind Cas 301 : 37 Cr LJ 827 : 1936 A Cr C 118 : 1936 Cr C 424 : 1936 ALJ 340 : AIR 1936 All 360. No circumstance to warrant inference that the accused had one of the objects mentioned in Section 366 in view, inference that the accused abducted woman for the purpose of confining her wrongfully and secretly can be drawn. 1953 Raj LW 100 : ILR (1952) 2 Raj 548.

The intention of the abduction has to be judged from the facts and circumstances of the case including the accused did at the time of abduction. AIR 1968 All 170. Person taking part in process with criminal knowledge of kidnapping is guilty to the same extent as the first man who initiates the process of kidnapping. 1983 Cr LJ (NOC 81). 3. Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Magistrate of the first class.

4. Charge.—"I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of accused), as follows :

"That on or about the......day.........at.........you kidnapped (or abducted) one AB with intent to cause the said AB to be secretly and wrongfully confined, and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 365 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance" (or the cognizance of the Court of Session or High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

Sec. 366. Kidnapping, abducting or inducing woman to compel her marriage, etc.—Whoever kidnaps or abducts any woman with intent that she may be compelled, or knowing it to be likely that she will be compelled, to marry any person against her will, or in order that she may be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse, or knowing it to be likely that she will be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine; "and whoever, by means of criminal intimidation as defined in this Code or of abuse of authority or any other method of compulsion, induces any woman to go from any place with intent that she may be, or knowing that it is likely that she will be, forced or seduced to illicit intercourse with another person shall also be punishable as aforesaid".

1. Amendment.—The words within quotations at the end of the section have been inserted by the Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Act, 1923 (20 of 1923), Section 2.

2. Scope.—In order to sustain a conviction under Section 366, IPC, it must be a woman or girl in question was either by force compelled, or by deceitful means induced, to leave the house of the guardian or the person who had the care of her on behalf of her husband. Where the woman however goes willingly and voluntarily with the accused and not as the result of force or deceit, there is no offence under the section and the accused cannot be convicted. 168 Ind Cas 833 : 1937 ALJ 547 : 38 Cr LJ 621 : 1937 ALR 417 : 1937 AWR 203 : 1937 A Cr C 39 : AIR 1937 All 353. Even a forcible abduction does not amount to an offence under this section, unless there are other ingredients, namely, the intention either that the girl should be seduced or forced to illicit intercourse or that she should be compelled to marry against her will. In cases of forcible abduction, there can seldom be direct evidence as to actual intention of the abductor and that intention must be inferred from the circumstances of each case under Section 114, Evidence Act. Human nature being what it is whenever one finds a young man abducting a girl of marriageable age, the first natural presumption must be that he has abducted her with the intention of having sexual intercourse with her forcibly, or with her consent after abduction, or after marrying her. If he has any intention other than that which is suggested by the natural consequence of the case, the burden lies upon him under Section 106 of the Evidence Act, to prove his intention.

AIR 1938 Lah 474. In a case under Section 366 to ask the jury to give a verdict upon both heads of abduction and kidnapping, is a complete misunderstanding of the law. There cannot be any such verdict under this section a verdict based upon such a direction, cannot be upheld. 45 CWN 27. Section 366 applies whether the offence is kidnapping or abduction and the only additional ingredient required is that such kidnapping or abduction is with the object of marriage or seduction. Where according to the evidence it is clear that the girl was taken away by the appellant with the consent of the mother no offence can be made out. 1967 Cr LJ 867. There must be kidnapping or abduction. 1966 SCD 903 ; 1974 Chand LR (Cr) 553 ; 1969 Cr LJ 1310 ; 1968 Cr LJ 1390 ; AIR 1961 Bom 282 ; AIR 1960 All 479.

Accused persons took prosecutrix on point of knife from one place to another. No evidence showing that either of accused persons extended any premise or allurement to prosecutrix.

As regards charge under Sections 363 and 366 of IPC, in order to prove kidnapping the prosecution was required to prove that the appellants had taken or enticed the prosecutrix out of the keeping of her lawful guardian. The object behind Section 361 of IPC, which defines kidnapping, is to protect the minor children from being seduced for improper purposes and to protect the rights and privileges of guardians having lawful charge or custody of their minor wards. What is necessary is either taking or enticement, of the minor. Taking would include causing to go or getting into possession whereas enticement involves an idea of inducement, by igniting hopes or desire in the other. One does not entice other, unless the latter attempts to do a thing which he or she would not otherwise have done. In order to bring home conviction for kidnapping, there must be proof of the accused having done something which led to the girl going out of the keeping of her guardian. The words 'takes' and 'entices' as used in Section 361 of IPC need to be read together so as to take colour and content from each other.

In the present case, there is no evidence of either of the appellants having extended any promise or allurement to the prosecutrix. This is not the case of the prosecution that either of the appellants had promised to marry the prosecutrix or held out any other promise to her. The case of the prosecution is that the appellants had threatened the prosecutrix by putting knives on her person and being afraid of them she accompanied them to Merrut. That part of the deposition of the prosecutrix where she claimed that she had been threatened and two knives had been put on her person when she was taken from Delhi to Merrut cannot be believed and is obviously false. The truth appears to be that since the prosecutrix was previously known to the appellants, and had become friendly to one of them, she of her own abandoned the guardianship of her parents and eloped with the appellants. Though the prosecutrix has been found to be less than 16 years old, it cannot be said that she was not capable of knowing what she was doing. She was not of such an age so as to be unable to decide what was good and what was bad for her. Had the prosecutrix been about 10 months older, even the offence of rape would not have been made out against the appellants in the facts and circumstances of the case. In my view the facts and circumstances brought on record clearly show that the prosecutrix willingly accompanied the appellants and stayed with them till they were caught by the police. The prosecutrix knew and had the capacity to know the full import what she was doing. It is, therefore, difficult to say that the offence of kidnapping has been made out against the appellants in the facts and circumstances of this case.

Held, it cannot be said that accused persons took prosecutrix with them so as to force or seduce her to illicit intercourse. Offence of kidnapping has not been made out against them. Mohd. Imran Khan & etc. vs. State, 2010 (2) CrLJ 1756 (Delhi).

Prosecutrix was rescued by witness when accused persons forcefully took her towards village. Statement of prosecutrix inspiring confidence and corroborated by evidence of eye-witnesses. Prosecutrix on date of incident was less than 18 years of age. Plea of alibi as projected in defence is neither put to any of prosecution witnesses nor it can be proved by preponderance of probability. Held, conviction of accused persons is proper. Chander Singh & Ors vs State of Himachal Pradesh, 2010 (4) CriLJ 4031 (HP).

If the accused played some role at any stage by which he either solicited or persuaded the minor to abandon the legal guardianship it would be sufficient to hold such person guilty of kidnapping. The contention of the accused that he and the minor were in love for number of years and on the date of incident she voluntarily and willingly went with him with a desire to marry, is of no merit. In the instant case, the accused who was a regular visitor to the house of the complainant, took undue advantage of his friendship and persuaded the minor to abandon the guardianship of her brother with a promise of marriage which facts was sufficient to convict the accused under Section 366, IPC. Moniram Hazarika v. State of Assam, 2004(5) SCC 120 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 1545 : 2004 Cr LJ 2553 (SC) : 2004(2) Crimes 254 (SC) : AIR 2004 (SC) 2472 : 2004(3) Supreme 294.

In the instant case, the evidence on record showed that the accused had not used any force in taking the minor victim girl out of her house and that girl herself had taken money out of her house as the accused had no money of his own. Her statement showed that her father was going to betroth her to another boy against her wish. There was no evidence to show that it was the accused who took or induced her out of lawful custody of her father, the conviction of the accused under Section 363/366, IPC cannot be said to be proper. Mahendra Murtiyan Madras v. State, 2004 Cr LJ 539 (Guj) : 2004(2) All Cri LR 325 : 2004 Cri LR (SC Mah Guj) Guj 242 : 2004(2) Rec Cri R 913.

In a MP case, the prosecutrix did not raise any alarm when the accused took her alongwith her wearing apparels. She lived with the relatives of the accused without informing or complaining to the inhabitants of the house nor did she make any attempt to run away. It appeared that she left the lawful guardianship willfully and went alongwith the accused of her own accord and there was no promise or persuasion, inducement or allurement from the accused and even if her age was accepted to be below 18 years, she was at the age of discretion. It was held that the accused is not guilty of kidnapping or abduction. Lakhanlal v. State, 2004 Cr LJ 3962 (MP) : 2004(2) Ker LJ 732 : 2004(4) MPLT 423.

The victim gave three different statements about place of incident and none of them was corroborated by witnesses examined by the prosecution. There was failure on the part of prosecution to prove that victim was taken away by force or by way of deceitful means. The conduct of victim in not raising any hue and cry showed that she accompanied accused at her own and no offence under Section 366 (abduction) was made out. As far as charge of rape was concerned prosecution could not prove beyond doubt that accused had sex with victim and Section 376 become inapplicable in this regard. The trial Court judgment was set aside and accused was acquitted. Mohan v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 1991 (Raj) : 2003(1) WLC 260 (Raj).

5. Seduce.—"Seduce" in this section, means enticing or tempting. It is used in the general sense and not in the limited sense of committing the first act of illicit intercourse. Section 336, would therefore apply to person who has had several intercourses with the kidnapped girl even before the alleged kidnapping takes place, and such person can be charged under this section. It is the illicit nature of the intercourse for which the kidnapping or abduction takes place that constitutes the aggravation of the offence and not the priority in point of time of such intercourse. 59 Bom 652 : 158 Ind Cas 1048 : 36 Cr LJ 1509 : 37 Bom LR 176 : 1935 Cr C 490 : AIR 1935 Bom 189 ; see also 19 NLJ 49 : AIR 1935 Nag 34. Etymologically the word "seduction" is derived from the two Latin words 'se' which means away and 'duced' which means to lead away or draw away. The term 'seduction' therefore implies that this woman is led away or is induced to stray away from the path of rectitude. But when the deviation on the part of the girl is the result of the promptings of her own inclination, and she herself permits or encourages improper sexual relations as opportunity comes her way without the aid of any artifice or vile on the part of the man, it is no seduction. AIR 1958 Punj 323 : ILR 1957 Punj 2003 : 1958 Cr LJ 1097. It is 'seduction' when a man is induced to consent to unlawful sexual intercourse by enticement and persuasion overcoming her reluctance and scruples. Ibid ; see also AIR 1955 Andh 59 : 1955 Cr C 581 : ILR 1955 Andh 260. The words seduced to illicit intercourse "do not refer to the first act of seduced only when she lured into surrendering her chasties. Ibid. The expression "seduced to illicit intercourse" means "induced to surrender or abandon a condition of purity from unlawful sexual intercourse" 38 CWN 71 ; see also AIR 1934 Sind 164 : 1934 Cr C 1266 ; AIR 1934 Lah 227 : 1934 Cr C 458 ; AIR 1955 Cal 100 : 1955 Cr LJ 347. (the direction to the Jury that if the accused found not guilty under Section 366, may be found guilty under Section 363, was a misdirection). Illicit intercourse does not cease to be one merely because it is repeated. If the intention is kidnap the girl in order to seduce her to illicit intercourse the fact of previous intimacy with her is wholly immaterial. 27 ALJ 114 : 113 Ind Cas 765 : 30 Cr LJ 218 : AIR 1929 All 32; but see AIR 1934 Pat 170 : 15 PLT 229 : 35 Cr LJ 814. There is no warrant for holding that the forcing or seducing to illicit intercourse contemplated by Section 366, IPC, has reference only to the first act of unchasity ; an accused forcing or seducing a woman to illicit intercourse cannot claim immunity from conviction on the mere ground that the woman had already sexual intercourse with persons other than her husband. Where it is shown that certain persons other than her husband had sexual intercourse with a woman, but ultimately she is left stranded at a place by certain persons and then the accused come and take her to their place with a view to profit from her sex and her youth by conveying her to some man other than her original seducer the latter persons who take her are guilty under Section 366, 168 Ind Cas 833 : 1937 ALJ 547 : 38 Cr LJ 621 : 1937 A Cr C 39 : AIR 1937 All 353. A person can be convicted of seducing a girl under Section 366, in spite of the fact that he had previous illicit connection with the girl. Seduction does not mean the first act of illicit intercourse. AIR 1952 Sau 19 : 4 Sau LR 151.

6. Seduction.—Seduction implies surrender of her body by a woman who is reluctant or unwilling to submit herself to importunity, whether such surrender is for the first time or preceded by intercourse for money on earlier occasions. AIR 1962 SC 1908. It would then be impossible that a person who instigates another to assist a woman following the profession of a prostitute abets her to do an act with intent that she may or with knowledge that she will be seduced to illicit intercourse. Ibid. If seduction was complete before abduction, renewed illicit intercourse cannot be held to be seduction to illicit intercourse, AIR 1955 Cal 100. If kidnapping is done with the object of seducing her to illicit intercourse it will be an offence under the section. 1968 SCD 438. For the meaning of the word 'seduction'. See AIR 1979 SC 1276 : 1979 Cr LJ 867 (no seduction when she herself permits or encourages improper sexual relation as opportunity comes her way without the aid of any artifice or vile on the part of the man). Submission of her body under the influence of fear or terror is no consent. 1977 Cr LJ 556 ; 1968 Cr LJ 690.

7. Illicit Intercourse.—A charge under this section of abducting a woman with the intention of forcing or seducing her to illicit intercourse, can be sustained only by evidence to show the intent or to raise the presumption that illicit intercourse was likely from the abduction. 23 PR 1868.

The words "illicit intercourse" mean the sexual intercourse between a man and woman who are not husband and wife. The woman need not be a married one. 4 ALJ 482. Under the Buddhist law a man cannot marry a girl under sixteen years of age without her guardian's consent and hence an intercourse between the man and such girl is "illicit intercourse" LBR (1872-1892), 202. When it is proved that the accused took two minor girls from lawful guardianship with the object of seducing them to illicit intercourse, he is guilty of an offence under this section and the consent of the girl is of no avail. 49 Cal 906. Where a marriage between the kidnapped girl and the accused is not possible under any law, it must be presumed that he must have contemplated illicit intercourse and it cannot be suggested that he might have contemplated a lawful marriage. AIR 1938 Cal 551 : 42 CWN 896. Where it is clear from, the evidence that the accused's intention in forcibly carrying a girl of 17 was not only to persuade the unwilling girl to change her mind and to accept him as her groom, but also to marry her, her refusal notwithstanding, and that he kept her confined from 10.30 A.M. to 5 P.M. while the girl was standing and crying and refused to stay and marry him, there can be no other conclusion than that his intention was to compel her to marry him or, if opportunity permitted, to marry her forcibly. Even repeated requests to one who knew her limitations, namely that she was completely within the grip of the requester (accused) when she was imprisoned and was given no food and drink would certainly amount to forcing her to consent ; and even if consent were to be given in such circumstances, that would never amount to consent in law. That is nothing less than "force" in law and it must therefore, be held that the requisite intention was present and that an offence under Section 366, IPC has been committed. ILR 1950 Cut 185 : AIR 1951 Ori 142. A kidnapped minor girl's consent to her marriage with the accused is no consent at all even for the purpose of Section 366. The intention to abduct is to be gathered from the conduct. 1973 Orissa JD 175 ; see also 1978 Cr LJ 1494 (the ingredients of the offence under Section 386 are proved along with the intention to marry against her will, a charge under Section 368 IPC, is established) ; The essential ingredient of an offence under this section is at the time of committing the offence the accused intended or knew that it was likely that the abducted or kidnapped woman might or would be compelled to marry a person against her will or that she might or would be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse. 1980 Mad LJ 56 : 1980 WLN (UC) 268 ; ILR (1968) 18 Raj 635 ; 1961 Jab LJ 870 ; AIR 1964 Punj 357 : 1964 (2) Cr LJ 207.

The accused and his father tried to drag a girl to a taxi. The accused died while his appeal was pending. Two independent witnesses had nowhere said that the father of the deceased accused had got down from the taxi or was present at sites or abetted in any manner to kidnap her—Held, the case is not proved beyond reasonable doubt the accused was given the benefit of doubt. 9. Husband and minor wife.—No offence under this section is committed, if the husband takes away his minor wife from the custody of her father, even where the girl has been put in the custody of her father by Civil Court. 10. Age of the girl.—Age of the girl should be proved by medical witness. He should be asked to prove the age of the girl with utmost precision. AIR 1946 Cal 143 : 47 Cr LJ 325. In a criminal trial the accused must get the benefit of doubt and there can be no conviction under Section 366, Penal Code, unless it can be clearly and unequivocally stated that the age of the girl was below 16 years. AIR 1950 Cal 406. Positive evidence furnished by the Birth Register or the members of the family with regard to age will have preference over the opinion evidence of the doctor. The estimation of age from the teeth by noting the number and position of teeth erupted along with X-Ray examination, with some amount of certainty is possible upto 17 to 20 years and beyond that it is merely a guess-work. Third molars teeth which are six in number erupt between the age group of 17 to 25 years.

Where four "third molars" teeth have not so far erupted in case of kidnapped girl on the date of her examination and the fusion of the epiphysis of her iliac crest has not yet started, the age of the kidnapped girl is under 18 years on the date of occurrence. Her removal on false pretext by the accused from lawful guardianship of the informant amounts to her kidnapping. Md. Mahfooj Ansari, v. The State of Bihar (now Jharkhand), 2005 CriLJ 1771 (Jhar).

If the Court on the evidence hesitates to hold the girl was below 16 (prior to the amendment of Section 361 fixing the outside age limit at 18) on that date the accused cannot be convicted under Section 366 although the Court holds there is alternative evidence that the girl was below 18 years. AIR 1955 SC 574 : 1956 SCC 32 : 1955 Cr LJ 1296.

After hearing the learned Counsel for the parties and giving my thoughtful consideration to their respective arguments and also perusing the record. Court has found that document is not based upon material to prove date of birth of both the girls because admittedly, the dates of birth were not registered/recorded by the father of the girls with the Chowkidar of the village in a register of Births and Deaths or in the office of C.M.O. of the area. It is also not recorded from the original admission register, rather date of birth has been obtained from the certificate of 8th Class. Moreover, the learned Counsel for the State could not point out any other error in the judgment of the trial Court, which has formed an opinion in favour of the accused/respondents on the basis of evidence. It is well settled by the Supreme Court that if two views are possible in a case of acquittal, then the view which has been taken in favour of the accused/respondents should be maintained. State of Haryana vs. Ramesh Kumar, 2010 (2) CrLJ 1812 (P & H).

The question of the age of the prosecution in cases under Sections 366 and 370 is always of importance. AIR 1970 SC 574 for evidentiary value of age given in school certificate. AIR 1970 Punj 450 : 1970 Cr LJ 1 ; AIR 1970 Guj 175 : 1970 Cr LJ 1348.

According to medical opinion age may be 18 or 19—It was held that difference may be of one year and prosecutrix was a major—No offence under Sections 363 and 366, IPC made out. Natthal v. State of U.P., 1995 Cr R 15 (All).

The authority of the apex Court in case of Jaya mala v. Home Secretary Government of J & K AIR 1982 SC 1297 (1982 Cri LJ 1777) may be referred to here. In it the age of the detenu was in question. According to the opinion of the expert, the age of the detenu was around 17 years. The Apex Court observed:-

"However, it is notorious and one can take judicial notice that the margin of error in age ascertained by radiological examination is two years on either side".

In Shanmugham v. State 1984 Cri LJ 1081 a Division Bench of Madras High Court has observed;

"The fusion of bones occures for different persons at different times and the variation is due to the multiplicity of causes, such as the health conditions of the family in which the person was born, the climatic conditions in which he is living, the dietary habits he is accustomed to, the type of life he is leading etc. Consequently, the determination of age on the basis fo radiological examination can only be an approximate factor and it cannot be taken as a decisive and incontrovertible feature. Courts have taken judicial notice of this fact and have always held that the evidence afforded by radiological examination is no doubt a useful guiding factor for determining the age of a person, but the evidence is not of a conclusive and incontrovertible nature and it is subject to a margin of error."

Then there was an authority of the Bombay High Court in Balasaheb v. State of Maharashtra, 1994 Cri LJ 3044 in which the opinion given in Modi's medical Jurisprudence and Toxicology, 22nd Edition was taken judicial notice of that the eror in case of age based on ossification test may be three years. Modi in his 22nd Edition at page 53 quoted from Dr. H.S Mehta's Medical Law and Ethics in India, 1963 who was of the view that of fairly close estimate within a margin of two years may be made, mainly on the progress of the epiphysial union (ossification test).

In Jhala Raju's Medical Jurisprudence, Sixth Edition it was said at page 197.

"Appearance of centres of ossification and fusion of epiphyses are more reliable factors, although opinion based on these factors is also liable to an error of about 2 yeas i.e. one year on either side."

There can be considerable variation regarding the ages at which ossification in the epiphyses appear and at which the epiphyses fuse with the respective diaphyses, Brush observes thus; "From puberty until the consolidation of the skeleton (at 22 to 23 or at the most 25 years) a fairly close estimate within a range of 2 or 3 years may still be made, mainly on the progress of the union of the epiphyses."

Opinion of age based on ossification is liable to an error of 2 years either way. If the opinion is to be exact it should be expressed in the form of upper and lower limits. Thus, if a doctor gives an opinion based on ossification that in his opinion the age of Q is 15 years, that opinion is liable to an error of 2 years up or down. The exact age will be between 13 and 17. See Shakeel v. State of U.P. 2000 Cri LJ 153 (All).

Though the doctor opined that the age of the prosecutrix was between 15 to 16 years, in his report he clearly mentioned that the age of the victim was below 18 years and admitted that in determination of age on the basis of ossification test variation of 2 years or more was possible, and according to radiologist report the age of the victim girl was above 18 years, it could not be held, that the victim girl was under the age of 18 years on the date of incident. Lakhanlal v. State, 2004 Cr LJ 3962 (MP) : 2004(2) Ker LJ 732 : 2004(4) MPLJ 423.

11. Charge of rape.—A charge of rape against the accused cannot be proved by the uncorroborated evidence of the prosecutrix. 17 PWR 1916 Cr ; 54 PLR 1916 ; 73 Ind Cas 513 : AIR 1928 Lah 238 ; AIR 1924 Lah 669 : 75 Ind Cas 986 ; but see AIR 1923 Lah 332 ; AIR 1923 Lah 91 ; AIR 1938 Lah 474.

12. Proof of Outraging Modesty.—The accused appellant Shoukat has been convicted for the offense under Section 366 and 354 IPC. Had there been a simple case of conviction for the offence under Section 354 IPC, the request of the learned counsel for the accused appellant for sentencing him for the period already undergone by him would have been considered, but the case against the accused appellant Shoukat for the offense under Section 366 IPC is well proved as he by deceitful means took the prosecutrix PW 1 Rampyari, who was Nurse (ANM) in the Primary Health Centre, Basni, from her house and then, he outraged her modesty. Shoukat and Another v. State of Rajasthan, 2002 Cri LJ 364 (Raj.).

13. Proof of Abduction.—Where the girl was between 18 and 19 years of age and stated that she left the house of her own - Moreover she raised no objection while going from place to place.

There is no doubt that Lalita accompanied Ranjeet Lohra from Ranchi to Calcutta and she never made any objection or raised any cry which would apparently go to show that she had left her house with her own consent and she was also major at the relevant time. Thus it was found that the offence under Section 366 of the Indian Penal Code is not made out in the instant case. There is also no evidence to show that Lalita had even been induced to compel her marriage, rather she flatly denied about performing the marriage in Kalimandir at Calcutta. Thus considering the above facts and circumstances, it is evident that the prosecution has totally failed to establish the charge under Section 366 of the Indian Penal Code against the appellant and, therefore, he is acquitted thereunder. Ranjeet Lohra v. The State of Bihar, 2002 Cri LJ 329 (Jhar) : 2002(1) ALD (CRL) 383 : 2002(4) All Cri Lr 651 : 2002(1) Andh LT (Cri) AP 352 : 2002(2) Crimes 442.

14. Abduction and Rape.—When element of consent is there, the findings of the learned Addl. Sessions Judge that prosecutrix P.W. 13 Mst. Naru was forcibly abducted or kidnapped by the accused appellants Mohan and Udailal cannot be sustained, especially when the prosecutrix P.W. 13 Mst. Naru was above the age of 18 years on the date of occurrence. The fact that these two accused-appellants used to visit her house also goes to show that she was familiar with them and that is why, she went with them in night to Jogamaya Mata temple in the jeep. The fact that she did not complain to anybody on the way up to Jogamaya Mata temple, also goes to show that she was a consenting party. From the evidence on record, it does not appear that prosecutrix P.W.13 Mst. Naru was in any manner forced or compelled to go with the accused appellants and on the contrary, it appears that she was a consenting party and all the activities right from the very beginning were going on with her consent. Mohan and Another v. State of Rajasthan. 2002 Cri LJ 3438 Raj. H.C.

17. Procedure—Duty of Judge to specifically question jury.—In trying a case under this section, it is the duty of Judges with jury to adopt in part the system which is prevalent in England, and that is to put a specific question to the jury as to the conclusion they have come to in relation to the age of the girl whose maltreatment has been the subject of the charge. The Jury, unless it is specifically put to them, never really understand what their duty is under Section 366. AIR 1936 Cal 675 : 1936 Cr C 932.

18. Cases.—Under the British Law, a man cannot contract a valid marriage with a minor without her parent's consent, and therefore, sexual intercourse without such consent is illicit intercourse within the meaning of Section 365, IPC. UBR (1897-1901), Vol. I, 328. When a man kidnaps a minor girl from lawful guardianship and therefore co-habits with her without marriage, he has, subsequent to the kidnapping, seduced her to illicit intercourse and he has kidnapped in order that she may be seduced to illicit intercourse and he has committed an offence under Section 366 Penal Code, quite independently of any intention or consent on the part of the minor girl. 1 UBR (1902-1903), Penal Code, 15. Carrying off a woman by force is not an offence under Section 366, Penal Code, if there is not evident that the intention was to marry her against her will or to enforce her to illicit intercourse or that it was known to be likely that anything of the sort would result. 12 PWR 911 Cr : 12 Cr LJ 393 : 11 Ind Cas 577 ; see also 12 ALJ 265 : 15 Cr LJ 255. Section 366 of the Penal Code is inapplicable where a girl at the time of kidnapping from lawful guardianship intends to co-habit on her own free will with the kidnapper ; as no intention to seduce to illicit intercourse can be presumed under the circumstances. UBR 1905, Penal Code 17 : 2 Cr LJ 476. The act of taking is completed as soon as the minor is actually taken out of the custody of his or her guardian. 26 All 196 : AWN 1903, 233 : 1 Cr LJ 561. The fact that Rakshasa form is in vogue among the gondas and the subsequent consent by the girl for the marriage cannot prevent the previous act of taking away the girl by force, having sexual intercourse with her, and renewal of her bracelets for preventing the girl, going away from constituting the offences of wrongful confinement and robbery when they are committed and it does not even reduce their culpability but under these circumstances there is no necessity for a heavy sentence. 103 Ind Cas 195 : 28 Cr LJ 659 : AIR 1929 Nag 279. Seduction is not to be confined to the first connection with an unmarried girl. 98 Ind Cas 188 : 27 Cr LJ 1292 : AIR 1927 Sind 97. In a case under Section 366, it is the duty of the prosecution to prove that the abduction took place with the intention mentioned in the section, but then the intention can also be inferred from the conduct of the accused and the circumstances of the case. Ordinarily it is not possible for the prosecution to establish the intention except by proving the conduct. A girl of about 14 years was forcibly abducted by the accused. Held, that no inference except of the intention such as is mentioned in Section 366 is possible. 31 PLR 388 : 123 Ind Cas 528 : 31 Cr LJ 529 : AIR 1930 Lah 92. The word "forced" in Section 366 can also be taken to be used in the ordinary dictionary sense as including 'forced by stress of circumstances'. Also, though the word "seduction" is sometimes used to mean to induce a girl to part with her virtue for the first time the word as used in Section 366 should not be taken to have that narrow meaning but that even though a girl may have by the first act of seduction surrendered her chastity, subsequent seduction for further acts of illicit intercourse can also be taken to be included. 50 CLJ 593 : 1930 Cr C 209 : AIR 1930 Cal 209. It is practically impossible for the prosecution in cases of kidnapping and abduction to establish affirmatively the then intention with which a woman is abducted. But it is a fair and justifiable presumption that when any woman is kidnapped or abducted it is undoubtedly with one or other of the intents specified in Section 366. 120 Ind Cas 606 : 31 Cr LJ 131 : 1930 Cr C 171 : AIR 1930 Lah 163. 19. Proof of inducement.—The mere fact that girl of 15 and a man were found together could not create a presumption that he persuaded her to go to him. Where there is nothing directly to show that he induced her to leave her husband's home and on the other hand it appeared he had previously an intrigue with her, this section is inapplicable. 38 PLR 98.

A girl aged 18/19 years left her house with her own consent. She never made any objection or raised any cry. There was no evidence to show that she had even been induced to compel her marriage rather she flatly denied about performing the marriage. It was held that the prosecution had failed to establish the charge under Section 366, IPC. Ranjeet Lahra v. The State of Bihar, 2002 Cri LJ 329 (Jharkhand) : AIR Jhar HCR 33 : 2001(4) Cur Cri R 237.

20. Charge under Section 366, against two persons.—Where another allegation is made that two persons have joined in taking or enticing another, the direction to the jury should be that the prosecution must prove that the taking or enticing was by the accused persons of either of them. It is necessary to examine the evidence against each accused jointly charged with the particular offence. In dealing with the intention required under Section 366, it is wrong for the Judge to say that if the jury was not satisfied that the offence under Section 366, was made out against both the accused, then alternative is under Section 366A. If the intention required by Section 366 was not proved, the direction should be that the jury was bound to acquit them or one of them against whom intention had not been made out. AIR 1938 Cal 475. Where an accused person is charged with the commission of an offence under Section 366 he can in appropriate case be convicted for abetment. 1956 Madh BLJ 422 : Madh BLR 1956 Cr 78.

21. Sections 363 and 366, chargesframed under both.—When two separate charges are framed against an accused person—one under Section 363 IPC and another under Section 366, IPC, he can be convicted under Section 363, although he is acquitted of the charge under Section 366, 52 Cr LJ 1484 : AIR 1951 Assam 168. Conviction under both the Sections 363 and 366 is bad. The offence under Section 366 is only an aggravated form of an offence under Section 363, IPC, 1979 Bihar Cr C 200 ; see also 1980 Cr LJ 1145 (for jurisdiction of Court); AIR 1969 Raj LW 534 ; AIR 1970 Raj 250.

22. Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable exclusively by Court of Session.

Jurisdiction of ordinary criminal Courts is not taken away inasmuch as the offence under Section 366, IPC is not one of the offences mentioned in First para of Section 45 of the Navy (Discipline) Act, 1934, (1956) 58 Bom LR 157.

23. Charge.—"I, (name and office of the Sessions Judge, etc.) hereby charge you, (name of the accused) as follows :

That on or about the.......day of ....at.........you kidnapped or abducted a woman or by means of compulsion (or criminal intimidation, or abuse of authority) induced to wit........with intent that she may be compelled (or knowing it to be likely that she will be compelled) to marry C, D against her will [or in order that the said A, B may be forced (or seduced) to illicit intercourse] and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 366 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

"And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said charge."

24. Evidence and proof.—In a case under this section the evidence of abducted woman should be taken with caution. AIR 1949 All 139 : 50 Cr LJ 158. Need of corroboration of statement of prosecutrix was emphasised in (1974) Cr LJ 86 ; (1978) 1 Kant LJ 26 ; (1978) 1 Kar LJ 26 ; 1978 Cr LJ 1241 ; (1973) 1 SCC 533 ; 1981 All LJ 139 ; 1983 (1) Crimes 582.

Where the abduction is made by A, who passes the girl to B, who takes forcibly to C and C marries her without consent. It was held that C can not be convicted under Section 366 read with Section 34 in the absence of any evidence to show a prior consent between B and C. 96 Pat LR (SC) 644, but see 1983 All WC 425 : 1983 All Cr R 304 (offence under Section 363 not under Section 366).

Accused, along with two other accused, brought the victim girl from her residence in a car and then she was made to stay along with them in lodge. When the prosecution has established the fact that accused brought the victim girl to the said lodging and stayed with her in the said lodging, then the burden came to be shifted on the accused, of explaining as to what happened thereafter in the said room or, of showing that nothing happened as deposed by prosecutrix. By remaining silent, this accused has not discharged this burden.

The facts constituting forcible sexual intercourse on the victim girl said to have been committed by the accused in the said lodging were within the special knowledge of accused and the victim girl. The victim girl has stated on oath that after she was brought there, accused and also other two persons committed forcible sexual intercourse on her one after another against her will and despite her request that they should not do so. This accused, though has denied the entire evidence of victim girl, has not brought anything in her cross-examination-in-chief to disbelieve her evidence in examination-in-chief as to he committing forcible sexual intercourse on her while she was made to stay in the said lodging.

If the relevant allegations in the complaint and also the evidence of prosecutrix are carefully scrutinised, it could be seen that her evidence falls in line with the allegations in the complaint. Incident of accused and other two other accused taking the prosecutrix from her residence to the said lodging and making her to stay with them in the said lodging is consistent with the allegations in the complaint. Further, as could be seen from the evidence of victim girl, she has given all the minor details of the acts of forcible sexual intercourse committed on her by the accused while she was made to stay in the said lodging. In the absence of any explanation by the accused as to what happened between himself and victim girl after he took her into the room in the said lodging, the positive evidence of victim girl given on oath before the Court which is quite consistent with her allegations in her complaint as to the factum of forcible sexual intercourse committed by him on her being trustworthy, deserves acceptance and the same has been rightly accepted and relied upon by the Trial Court. Besides this nothing is brought on record by the accused through the evidence of either victim girl or any other witness to show that the prosecutrix falsely implicated him at the cost of her reputation. N. Vijaya alias Ameen vs State of Karnataka, 2010 Cri LJ 1050 (Karn).

For burden of proof and appreciation of evidence see AIR 1979 SC 1029 : 1979 Cr LJ 991 (burden on the prosecution to prove all the elements necessary to establish the offence).

In a case where the accused was convicted for offence under Section 366 and 354, IPC about 16 years had elapsed from date of incident. It was held that imposition of sentence of one years R.I. instead of 4 years R.I. under Section 366 and six months R.I. instead of his years R.I. for offence under Section 354, IPC would meet the order of justice. Shoukat v. State of Rajasthan, 2002 Cri LJ 364 (Raj) : 2002(2) Raj LW 1128.

There was no evidence that girl was taken away from lawful guardianship of her parents. Hence ingredients of offence were lacking and offence is not proved. Chouhal Singh v. State of Rajasthan, 1995 Cr LR 237 (Raj).

Where a victim was a grown-up girl. Conviction of accused under Section 366, IPC. Evidence showed that both accused and victim went to District Court premises for swearing an affidavit before Notary and thereafter stayed at Rest House. Hence attempt on her part to marry with accused can be inferred. Conviction of accused not proper. Goverdhan v. State of M.P., 1995 Cr LJ 633 (MP).

Conviction was based on the basis of solitary testimony of prosecutrix which was challenged in appeal. The evidence on record show that she was a woman of bad character and conduct. Further evidence was not corroborated by medical evidence or any other evidence. Hence order of conviction recorded was not maintainable. Rajaram v. State of M.P., (1994) 2 Crimes 1021 (MP).

In an Orissa case, it was alleged that the accused entered the house of prosecutrix, gagged her mouth, lifted her and raped her after taking her to field. Prosecutrix had seen the culprits from close range and, therefore, the possibility of mistaken identity was ruled out. Entire incident had been broadly stated in FIR. The testimony of prosecutrix was reliable and trustworthy. There was evidence which corroborated her evidence. Conviction of accused was held proper. Prasanta Kumar Sahoo v. State of Orissa, 2004 Cr LJ 3501 (Orissa) : 2004(28) OCR 692.

The accused allegedly kidnapped a minor married minor girl, confined her and raped her. The victim made the statement giving clear picture of occurrence in detail about her kidnapping, rape and recovery. The evidence of victim established that it was accused who kidnapped her and committed rape on her. It was held that conviction of accused on sole testimony of victim was proper. Chandra Sekhar Pandey v. State of Bihar, 2004 Cr LJ (NOC) 2 : AIR 2004 Jhar HCR 266 : 2003(3) East Cri C 344.

Where there was prosecution under for charge of abduction and rape—Conviction and sentence—Revision petition for same was filed.—The prosecutrix has not given consistent evidence. Her evidence on point of rape is very vacillating hence not worthy of credence. Conviction and sentence not sustainable. Sadhray v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (1995) 3 CCR 541 (MP).

The accused along with another went to the house of the victim in the night and by deceitful means induced her to accompany him and when they were going, the accused seeing the lonely place outraged her modesty. The name of the co-accused was not mentioned in the FIR. No identification parade was conducted to identify the co-accused and thus the presence of co-accused on scene was doubtful. The co-accused was acquitted but conviction of accused under Section 366 and 354 IPC was held proper. Shoukat v. The State of Rajasthan, 2002 Cri LJ 364 (Raj) : 2002(2) Raj LW 1128.

Confessional statement of accused in presence of police officer is inadmissible in evidence. N. Nagarajan v. State of T.N., 1996 Cr LJ 1007 (Mad).

Burden of proof. Accused, along with two other accused, brought the victim girl from her residence in a car and then she was made to stay along with them in lodge. When the prosecution has established the fact that accused brought the victim girl to the said lodging and stayed with her in the said lodging, then the burden came to be shifted on the accused, of explaining as to what happened thereafter in the said room or, of showing that nothing happened as deposed by prosecutrix. By remaining silent, this accused has not discharged this burden.

The facts constituting forcible sexual intercourse on the victim girl said to have been committed by the accused in the said lodging were within the special knowledge of accused and the victim girl. The victim girl has stated on oath that after she was brought there, accused and also other two persons committed forcible sexual intercourse on her one after another against her will and despite her request that they should not do so. This accused, though has denied the entire evidence of victim girl, has not brought anything in her cross-examination-in-chief to disbelieve her evidence in examination-in-chief as to he committing forcible sexual intercourse on her while she was made to stay in the said lodging.

If the relevant allegations in the complaint and also the evidence of prosecutrix are carefully scrutinised, it could be seen that her evidence falls in line with the allegations in the complaint. Incident of accused and other two other accused taking the prosecutrix from her residence to the said lodging and making her to stay with them in the said lodging is consistent with the allegations in the complaint. Further, as could be seen from the evidence of victim girl, she has given all the minor details of the acts of forcible sexual intercourse committed on her by the accused while she was made to stay in the said lodging. In the absence of any explanation by the accused as to what happened between himself and victim girl after he took her into the room in the said lodging, the positive evidence of victim girl given on oath before the Court which is quite consistent with her allegations in her complaint as to the factum of forcible sexual intercourse committed by him on her being trustworthy, deserves acceptance and the same has been rightly accepted and relied upon by the Trial Court. Besides this nothing is brought on record by the accused through the evidence of either victim girl or any other witness to show that the prosecutrix falsely implicated him at the cost of her reputation. N. Vijaya alias Ameen vs State of Karnataka, 2010 Cri LJ 1050 (Karn).

25. Approbation of Evidence.—Due to the margin stated by the witness it cannot be said that the medical evidence militates against the other consistent evidence regarding the age of the prosecutrix. The Supreme Court decision in Ram Murti's Case, 1970 Cri LJ 991: (AIR 1970 SC 1029) is clearly distinguishable. In that case despite medical advice for X-Ray examination of the prosecutrix to find out her age, it was not got done. The appellant had been acquitted of the offense under Section 376 of the IPC and in the circumstances it was observed that for the offence under Section 366 of the IPC the question of age deserved to be examined more closely. On the material on record the trial court's conclusion that the prosecutrix was under sixteen years is upheld. The testimony of the prosecutrix Ku. Sandhya (PW1) that the appellant thrice had sexual intercourse with her at Kalyan is, in the circumstances of the case, entitled to credence though she had not complained of it to anyone earlier. This omission is explicable as according to the finding of the learned trial Judge she had willingly eloped with the appellant. Manpyara and Others v. The State, 2002 Cri LJ 3046 MP : 2002 Cri LR (SC&MP) MPJ 133 : 2002(1) MPHT 253 : 2002(2) MPLJ 11.

26. Sentence.—Where the kidnapped girl went away with the accused willingly and the medical evidence indicated that although the girl was under 16 years of age she was accustomed to sexual intercourses, held, four years rigorous imprisonment is excessive sentence, AIR 1941 Cal 315 : 42 Cr LJ 649. Where the accused has committed a very serious offence punishable with rigorous imprisonment for 10 years under Section 366 read with Section 114 Penal Code, to let off a person found guilty of such an offence lightly because the other co-accused were let off, is to perpetrate injustice. 1956 Madh BLJ 422 : Madh BLR 1956 Cr 78 ; but see AIR 1954 Pat 218 : 32 Pat 728 : 1954 Cr LJ 565 (where sentence was reduced on the ground of tender ages of the accused).

Accused were charged with committing rape on the prosecutrix. Prosecturix had stated in detail as to circumstances under which she was taken towards the ditch and was ravished there. Her evidence was corroborated by evidence of others. Non-examination of the head constable before whom accused and prosecutrix were taken had lost its importance. Held, that evidence so far discussed clearly brought home the guilt of the offences under Sections 366 and 376. 1987 Cri LJ 940 (Kant).

Criminal appeal under Section 374, Cr PC against conviction and sentence under Section 366, IPC. The circumstances show that victim girl accompanied appellants at her own accord. The prosecution failed to establish guilt of the appellants as stated in the version. Hence conviction and sentence is set aside. Nisar Mohammad and others v. State of M.P., 1994 Cr LR (MP) 182 (N).

Accused sentenced to 7 years RI and fine of Rs. 1,000 and in default RI for one year—Appeal to High Court and sentence was confirmed—Special leave petition under Article 136 of Constitution.—Plea of false story of abduction was rightly rejected by Lower Court and High Court. There were no compelling circumstances warranting interference and conviction and sentence of the appellant. Ganga Dayal Singh v. State of Bihar, (1994) 1 PLJR (SC) 108 ; 1994 Cr LJ 951 ; AIR 1994 SC 859.

Women being forced to prostitution in guise of employment—False provisions of jobs—no sympathy with accused, hence order of sentence was not to be interfered with. Ramu v. State, rep. by Inspector of Police, 1995 Cr LJ 2525 (Mad).

27. Probation of offenders Act if to extend.—In 1979 Cr LR 573 it was held that it is an insulting stultification of the amelioratory legislation viz the Probation of offenders Act to extend its elaborate provisions to such anti-social, and specialist criminals in their act of abducting unsophicated girl of 17 for enforcing her into sexual submission with commercial object.

28. Conviction.—Offence of kidnapping of prosecutrix from custody of her parents—Prosecutrix being less than 16 years her consent is of no consequence—Accused's offence established—She was not forced or adduced to illicit intercourse. It was held that accused is liable to be convicted under Section 366. Santosh Dhodu Chavan v. State of Maharashtra, (1994) 3 Crimes 42 (Bom).

The view of the High Court that prosecutrix above 16 years of age eloped found well based. Her silence about not reporting it can be because of fear of repraisal or to protect her image. Prosecutrix was not a girl of easy virtue and could not have agreed voluntarily to allow respondent No. 1 got married with Respondent No. 2 within 10 to 15 days of her elopement. Hence respondent No. 1 is liable to be convicted under Section 376, IPC but as offence was committed in year 1982 the sentence is reduced to period already undergone. State of A.P. v. P. Narasimha, (1994) 2 Crimes 263 (SC) ; (1994) 4 SCC 453 : 1994(3) JT 576 : 1994(2) Scale 760 : 1994(2) CCR 506 (SC).

Where prosecutrix, studying in 10th standard on date of incident and was minor then the conviction of accused under Sections 366 and 376, IPC was liable to be sustained. Suresh Babu v. State, 2005 Cr LJ NOC 38 (Ker.) : 2005(2) All Cri LR 379 : 2005(2) Rec Cri R 90.

Poor women enticed away on the name of job, to brothels. Delayed filing of complaint—Satisfactory explanation provided—Evidence was fully established that women was being taken away for prostitution—Certain discrepancies of minor nature in evidence was found but—Prosecution case not to be affected by the same—Typographical error in the evidence of a particular witness.—No weight to be attached to such plea, conviction was upheld. Ramu v. State rep. by Inspector of Police, 1995 Cr LJ 2525 (Mad).

The statement of the girl that accused used to give fist blows in her stomach is beyond understanding as that would be seen by others also. In instant case she was willing lady as she had come from her house. Hence conviction under Section 367, IPC, is bad. Santosh Kumar v. State of U.P., 1994 (31) ACC 587.

Rape of minor prosecutrix and her categorical statement that she was sexually assaulted against her wishes. There was found no infirmity in her statement. Delay of one day in filing FIR in such cases not held fatal. Conviction of accused was upheld. Manan Seikh v. State, 1995 JCC 171 (Del).

The accused abducted a girl in order to compel her to illicit intercourse and evidence showed that she had purchased her like a cattle and had control and dominion over her. The accused was present physically when victim was recovered by the police. The conviction of accused was held proper but keeping in view of 76 years of age instead of sending her to jail only fine was imposed. Shamshad v. State of UP, 2003 Cr LJ 1322 (All) : 2003 AllLJ 518 : 2003(46) All Cri C 890 : 2003(1) All Cri R 241 : 2003(3) All indcas 663 : 2003(1) Cur Cri R 335.

When circumstantial evidence regarding offences under Sections 366, 376 and 300, IPC committed by accused and relied by prosecution were found proved and of conclusive nature and were consistent with guilt of accused then accused was held rightly convicted for. Ratan Lal v. State of Rajasthan, 2004 Cr LJ 228 (Raj) : 2004(1) Raj Cri C 139 : 2004(1) Raj LR 774 : 2004(2) Raj LW 1131 : 2004(1) WLC 243.

The accused enticed away a minor girl and committed rape on her. The evidence of the prosecutrix was supported by witnesses including informant at whose house the accused had taken her after enticing her away. Non appearance of signs of rape on body of prosecutrix was of no effect as medical examination was conducted after the considerable time of occurrence. The conviction of accused for offences under Sections 366A/376 was held proper. The accused had subsequently married the girl and sentence was reduced from 9 years to five years. Surendra Kumar Singh Kushwaha v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 392 (Pat).

Where the victim girl was below 16 years of age and she had tried her best to prevent accused from committing rape, the conviction of accused under Section 366/376 was held proper. Morab Wankhede v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 725 (P&H) : 2002(1) CurLJ (CCR) 621 : 2002(1) Rec Cri R 148.

When both prosecutrix were aged less than 16 years, conviction of accused is proper. Baran Singh v. State, 1996 Cri LJ 3636 (Alld).

29. Acquittal.—Victim was found wandering with the accused to many places without complaint—Giving her Talibottu for pledging to the accused—Consent of the victim can be deduced from her conduct—Victim was aged 16 years—Acquittal of the accused was acquitted by the lower court which is held Not to be interfered with. Dudala Edukondalu v. Eduru Ramanaiah, (1994) 1 ALT (Cri) 73 (AP).

Appeal against acquittal. Accused took prosecutrix, passed through various crowded and public places during day time to house of co-accused persons and ruped her.

From Kasauli upto Patiala she passed through various crowded and public places during day-time. She could have easily raised hue and cry on the way attracting public attention. Importantly, as per her deposition threats were meted out by accused only till the time they reached Patiala. At least thereafter, as per her own admission that she was free to move in and out of the house, she could have contacted people in the colony or made a phone call to her parents or relatives at Kasauli, disclosing her whereabout. This was not done so. She could have conveniently slipped out of the house and returned to her house or at least gone to the local police station for help. She knew accused since long and it appears to be a case of prosecutrix having voluntarily left with him from Kasauli and be with him thereafter.

Farther prosecution fail to prove that the prosecutrix was under eighteen years of age at time of incident. Delay in registration of FIR not explained. Sole testimony of prosecutrix was not reliable and hence acquittal of accused persons is proper. State of H.P. vs. Narender Kumer @ Hira, 2010 (3) CriLJ 3545 (HP).

Two eye-witnesses examined by the prosecution who happen to be the brother and the friend of the deceased did not support the prosecution version and resiled from their statement made during investigation. Therefore, the residual question is the acceptability of two dying declarations. The trial Court did not place any reliance on the dying declarations.

The discrepancy pointed by the trial Court is that in Exh. PD there is mention about one incident of rape on her on 28.07.1989 in a hotel at Sector 22 Chandigarh by Honey and two other accused. She does not state in the dying declaration in Ex PJ that she was raped on July 17th and stated that accused Honey had simply taken her to Rose Garden. In Exh. PJ she does not mention the date of the first incident as July 17th but states that her friend Rajni was also with her and they were taken to some unknown hotel while Honey raped her and accused Longoal raped Rajni. She also did not mention the second incident to have taken place on 28th July and stated that it was 2/3 days ago and not yesterday, when the boys took them to a hotel in Sector 22 and raped them. There are several inconsistencies and contrediations in the Exh. PD1 and PJ1.

Above being the position, when two Courts on analysis of the evidence found the respondents not guilty, there is no scope for interference in this appeal. The reasons indicated by the trial Court and affirmed by the High Court discarding the two dying declarations do not suffer from any infirmity. The appeal fails and is dismissed. State of Punjab vs. Chatinder Pal Singh, AIR 2009 SC 974 : 2008 (16) SCR 23 : 2008 (15) Scale 359.

The accused was alleged to have kidnapped, raped and criminally intimidated the victim. The nude photographs were merely found in his possession and evidence showed that the girl was above 16 years of age but no other evidence connecting the accused with the offence charged was produced. The accused was held entitled to acquittal. Palaparthy Vijaya Kumar v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 1670 : 2003(2) ALD (Crl) 611 : 2003(1) Andh LT (Cri) AP 355 : 2003(2) Crimes 132 : 2003(2) Cur Cri R 214.

In a Punjab & Haryana case it was alleged that victim was abducted and raped for two months continuously but she was 30 years of age having children also but accused was unmarried youngman of 21/22 years old. The victim never raised any alarm or made any complaint during her two months stay with accused. It was held that it was a case of elopement of victim and voluntarily submitting her to accused. The conviction was, hence, set aside. Tara Devi v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 329 (Jhar) : 2003(2) All ind Cas 555 : 2003 Cri R (SC Mah Guj) Guj 141 : 2003(1) Cur Cri R 241 : 2002(3) Gcd Guj 2389 : 2002(3) GujLR 2561.

Where there was no evidence to show that the victim, who was aged about 18 years, was taken away from her house by accused against her wishes and the medical evidence showed that the victim was habituated to sex and there was no evidence of violence on her person, it was held that the conviction of accused under Section 366, 376 was not proper. Balwant Singh v. State of Rajasthan, 2004 Cr LJ 3962 (MP) : 2004 (2) Ker LJ 732 : 2004 (4) MpLJ 423.

In the instant case, the victim, on her own consent had travelled with the accused knowingfully well that she was going to meet her boy friend. The act could not be said to have amounted to taking her out of keeping of her lawful guardian. Kidnapping could be said to have taken place only when she was detained against her will for the purpose of pressurising her to agree to the proposal to marry her boy friend. The accused had no knowledge about other designs or more of her boy friend. Mihir Das v. State of Tripura, 2006 Cr LJ 1500 (Gau).

In absence of prima facie case made out against petitioners entitled to be discharged. Dr. V.N. Sharma v. State, 1996 Cri LJ 1116 (Del).

30. Consent.—In the context of Indian Culture, a woman-victim of sexual aggression would rather suffer silently than to falsely implicate somebody. Any statement of rape is an extremely humiliating experience for a woman and until she is a victim of sex crime, she would not blame anyone but the real culprit. While appreciating the evidence of the prosecutrix, the Courts must always keep in mind that no self-respecting woman would put her honour at stake by falsely alleging commission of rape on her and, therefore, ordinarily a look for corroboration of her testimony is unnecessary and uncalled for. But for high improbability in the prosecution case, the conviction in the case of sex crime may be based on the sole testimony of the prosecutrix. It has been rightly said that corroborative evidence is not an imperative component of judicial credence in every case of rape nor the absence of injuries on the private parts of the victim can be construed as evidence of consent. Insofar as the present case is concerned, the circumstances referred to and pointed out by the learned Counsel are neither sufficient nor do they justify discarding the evidence of the prosecutrix. There is nothing on record that creates any doubt/disbelief or a suspicion about the evidence of the prosecutrix. In a case, such as this, where the prosecutrix was misrepresented by the accused that he would show her to his cousin (a doctor) as she was suffering from some throad pain and she accompanied him but the accused took her to other places and when it became dark, took her to a lonely place and committed sexual intercourse, the prosecutrix was not expected to put any resistance lest her life would have been in danger. In the facts and circumstances, the absence of injuries on the person of the prosecutrix does not lead to an inference that she consented for sexual intercourse with the accused. The young girl became victim of lust of the accused who was more than double her age and yielded to sexual intercourse against her will. Rajinder vs. State of Himachal Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 3022 : 2009 CrLJ 4133 : 2009 (3) Crimes 222 (SC) : 2009 (9) JT 9 : 2009 (9) Scale 176 : 2009 (10) SCR 248 : 2009 (5) Supreme 233 : 2009 (9) SLT 361.

It was contended that the prosecutrix of 16 was a consenting party. Medical report and school certificate put her age at 12. Held, conviction of the accused was well founded and should be maintained as her consent is of no importance. (1986) 1 Crimes 524 (Del).

Where the evidence on record showed that the girl had voluntarily accompanied the accused on her own free will it was held that the offence of kidnapping was not made Out-Keshav v. State, 2001 Cri LJ 1201 (Delhi) : 2001(1) JCC 273 : 2001(1) B Cr C 683 : 2001(2) Rec Cri R 254 (Del.).

Where the girl had gone with the accused party at so many places the element of consent was there and it could not be said that the accused had taken, the girl out of lawful guardianship Varda v. State of Rajasthan, 2001 Cri LJ 1283 (Raj).

In rape case fact of prosecutrix accompanying accused and living with him in one room, is enough to infer that she was consenting party. Madan Lal v. State of Punjab, 1997 (1) Crimes 561 (P&H).

31. Custom—No valid defence.—Accused were charged with abduction of girls and giving them in Nata for money consideration. Accused belonged to Meena's community in which Nata of married daughters was said to be recognised. They were illiterate and aged persons and had already undergone imprisonment. It was held that the convictions of the accused appellants maintained and their sentences under different courts be reduced to one already undergone by them and fine imposed be increased. 1987 Cri LJ 997 (Raj).

Accused persons belonging to Meena's community were charged with abduction of girls and giving them in Nata for money consideration to other accused persons in spite of the fact that they were married and all of them are unwilling. It was observed that in this age and era., it was not possible to accept the practice of selling or auctioning married daughters in Nata by her father even if such practice used to exist before constitution came into force, a woman could not be treated as chattels and could not be sold in Nata against their wishes. 1987 Cri LJ 997 (Raj).

32. Kidnapping, rape and offence of business of prostitution.—It is clear from the statement of the prosecutrix under Section 164 Criminal Procedure Code, recorded by the Magistrate, in her written report and in her statement before the Court that the accused appellant kidnapped her from Nagpur on the pretext of leaving her to her house at Vardha, but he taken her away to his village Ramnagar in Bundi where he committed rape with her and also business of prostitution by collecting money from other persons. The brother of the accused appellant also stated that he has seen Sharda prosecutrix with the accused appellant in a rented house, though he has been declared hostile. The police witnesses in equal vocal terms stated about the mischief done with the prosecutrix by the accused appellant. I am in agreement with the finding of rape arrived at by the trial Court with the prosecutrix and she has been forced by the accused appellant to do prostitution with other persons and collected money from them. It is also clear from the evidence of the prosecution witnesses mentioned above and as per the statement of the prosecutrix coupled with the report of FSL and medical examination done by the doctors, her statement under Section 164 Criminal Procedure Code and her written report submitted to the police, that accused committed rape with her and further the accused appellant forced her to do the business of prostitution and he collected money from the persons who came to him for sex satisfaction with the prosecutrix. The findings arrived at by the trial Court cannot be said to be perverse. I am also in agreement with the finding of the trial Court that the prosecution has been able to prove the charges levelled against the accused appellant beyond reasonable doubt. The judgment of conviction recorded by the trial Court on the charges levelled against him and proved by the evidence of prosecution witnesses is confirmed. But looking to the age of the accused appellant his sentence can be reduced from 10 years to 7 years.

In the result the conviction of the accused appellants for Sections 366, 366-A, 368, 372, 376 IPC and for Sections 3, 6 and 9 of the Immoral Traffic (Prevention) Act, 1956 is confirmed but his sentence is reduced from 10 years to 7 years. Yogesh vs. State of Rajasthan, 2010 (1) CriLJ 629 (Raj).

33. FIR.—Delay in lodging FIR. We find no merit in the submission made for the appellants that FIR was ante timed and brought into existence so as to falsely implicate the appellants. There is no reason to disbelieve the evidence of prosecutrix and her mother that attempts were made to lodge the FIR on the next day of the occurrence of the incident but the police did not co-operate and intimated any action. The attempt on the part of the police to protect the accused from day one of the occurrence is clear and obvious.

This Court, in exercise of its jurisdiction under Article 136 of the Constitution of India, does not act as a third appellate Court. Suffice it to hold that the verdict in the instance case did not result in any miscarriage of justice. The impugned judgment is not an erroneous one. Nor the judgment is vitiated on account of any error either in appreciation of evidence or application of legal principles. Jaswant Singh & Ors. vs. State of Punjab, AIR 2010 SC 894.

1. Amendment.—This section and Section 366B were inserted by the Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Act, 1923 (20 of 1923) Section 3, in order to give effect to the international convention for the suppression of the traffic in women and children signed at Geneva on behalf of the Governer-General in Council on the 18th day of May, 1922.

2. Scope.—The intention or knowledge that the minor girl abducted was to be forced to illicit intercourse is the gist of the offence under Section 366A. 28 PLR 260 : 102 Ind Cas 552 : 28 Cr LJ 548 : 8 AI Cr 239. On each occasion when a woman is persuaded to indulge in illicit intercourse she in being tempted into sin and so "seduced" consequently, though a woman has lost her chastity and become a prostitute, she can be "seduced" again for the purpose of Section 366A of the Penal Code. 99 Ind Cas 98 : 28 Cr LJ 66 : AIR 1927 Sind 109 ; see also 27 ALJ 800 : 118 Ind Cas 384 : 30 Cr LJ 904 : AIR 1929 All 535. The prosecution must prove that the accused intended that the girl would be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse with some one other than himself ; or that the accused knew that it was likely that she would be so forced or seduced. 49 CWN 533 : AIR 1945 Cal 432 ; AIR 1948 Oudh 1 : 48 Cr LJ 542. It is not the law that if the minor is a consenting party no offence is committed under Section 366A of the Penal Code. 119 Ind Cas 14 : 30 Cr LJ 985 : AIR 1929 All 700. The word "induced" is used in its ordinary meaning of any words of inducement flowing from one person to the girl. AIR 1930 All 197 : 1930 Cr C 732. Mere fact that accused tried to sell girl for immoral purpose is not sufficient to establish offence under Section 366A. AIR 1938 Lah 648. Where a married girl is unhappy with her husband and the father takes her from the husband's house and gives her as a wife to somebody else, that can hardly be called trafficking in women having regard to the provisions of Section 366A, the act of the father would come within those provisions, 1930 Cr C 732 : AIR 1930 All 497. Persons selling girl with knowledge and intention that she would be subject to illicit intercourse are guilty. It is not necessary that accused should know that the girl is married. AIR 1930 Lah 463 : 1930 Cr C 531. Woman with whom illicit intercourse is committed need not be married woman. 138 Ind Cas 597 : 33 PLR 727 : 1932 Cr C 719 : 33 Cr LJ 673 : AIR 1932 Lah 555. Person committing illicit intercourse with girl will not be permitted to plead that he bona fide believed her to be over the prescribed age, if in fact she is below the age. 138 Ind Cas 597 : 33 PLR 727 : 1932 Cr C 719 : 33 Cr LJ 673 : AIR 1932 Lah 555. Where accused induces girl between 16 and 18 years without force or fraud to go from any place with intent to have illicit intercourse with himself is not guilty of any offence. AIR 1933 Cal 362 : 34 Cr LJ 341 : 37 CWN 317. An offence under this section is a continuing offence. 1936 Cr C 873 : AIR 1936 Lah 850.

Where there is no evidence to show that the accused had induced the victim minor girl to leave her father's custody with an intent that she might be forced or seduced to have illicit sexual intercourse with him, the offence under Section 366A, IPC cannot be said to have been established. Mahendra Murtiyan Madrasi v. State, 2004 Cr LJ 539 (Guj) : 2004(2) All Cri LR 325 : 2004 Cri LR (SC Mah Guj) Guj 242 : 2004(2) Rec Cri R 913.

A bare perusal of Section 366 would indicate that the kidnapping or abduction of any woman with a view to compel her for marriage etc. is covered by this section. in the instant case, this provision has not been applied because although the victim is a woman in this case she being minor, Section 366-A has been invoked. Now a perusal of the section would indicate that if the minor girl is induced to go from any place or to do any act with an intent that such girl may be, or knowing that it is likely that she will be, forced or seduced to illicit intercourse with another person shall be punishable with imprisonment which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine. The title to the section is procuration of minor girl. The essential ingredient is inducement of a minor girl to go from any place or to do any act with intent that such girl may be or knowing that it is likely that she will be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse with another. The minor must be proved to have been induced to go or to do something. If the charge is under Section 366-A then "Kidnapping" is not the essential ingredient. While kidnapping abduction is a part of the offence under Section 366, its latter part, viz., "inducement" is the only common ingredient in Section 366 and Section 366-A, IPC. Kailash Laxman Khamkar vs. State of Maharashtra, 2010 (3) Cri LJ 3255 (Bom).

Where there is no inducement on the part of the accused persons to the victim girl from her house to do the act as mentioned in Section 366A of IPC and since the inducement is found to be absent on the basis of the testimony of the witnesses, the accused persons cannot be convicted under Section 366A. Golapi Bibi v. State, 2004 Cr LJ 2209 (Gau) : 2004(1) Gau LT 607 : 2004(2) Gau LR 338 ; 2004 Cr LJ 2211 (Gau) : 2004(3) All Cri LR 608 : 2005(1) Bank Cas 170 : 2004 Mad LJ (Cri) 438 : 2004(3) Rec Cri R 628.

There are three principal ingredients of the offence contemplated under Section 366A (a) that the minor girl below the age of 18 years is induced by the accused ; (b) that she is induced to go from any place or to any act, and (c) that she is so induced with intent that she may be or knowing that it is likely that she will be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse with another person. A person who merely accompanies a woman going out to play her profession of a prostitute even if she has not attained the age of 18 years, does not thereby commit an offence under Section 366A. The word "seduce" is used in two senses. It is used in its ordinary narrow sense as inducing a woman to stray from the path of virtue for the first time ; it is also used in the wider sense of inducing a woman to submit to illicit intercourse at any time or on any occasion. AIR 1962 SC 1908 : 1963 All Cr R 236 : 1963 (1) Cr LJ 16 ; see also AIR 1961 Bom 282 : 1962 All Cr R 14 : 63 Bom LR 408 : 1961 (2) Cr LJ 578.

The word "seduced" in Section 366A is used in the ordinary sense of enticing or tempting irrespective of whether the girl has been previously compelled or has submitted to illicit intercourse. AIR 1961 Bom 282 : 1962 All Cr R 14 : 63 Bom LR 408 : 1961 (2) Cr LJ 578 (AIR 1933 Cal 718 and AIR 1955 Cal 100 and AIR 1958 Punj 323, dissented from but AIR 1935 Bom 189 relied on). The section requires that a minor must be induced to go from any place or to do any act with the intention or knowledge that such minor may be forced or seduce to illicit intercourse with another person. AIR 1961 Bom 282 : 63 Bom LR 405 : (1961) 2 Cr LJ 578.

In a case the evidence of the prosecutrix was unambiguous and clear to show that she was abducted by the accused. The evidence, of the prosecutrix was also fully collaborated by the statement of accused recorded under Section 313, IPC. It appeared from the record, though not proved that she was only 16 years old. In view of the fact, situation and corroborative evidences the court held that the accused had induced the prosecutrix who was under the age of 18 years to go with him and as such he committed an offence of abduction under Section 366-A, IPC. Shri Sushanta v. State of Tripura, 2002 Cri LJ 195(Gau) : 2002(1) Gau LR 400.

So far as the conviction of the accused appellants for the offence under Section 366A is concerned, that cannot be sustained because of the simple reason that Section 366A and 366B, IPC have been introduced to punish the export and import of girls for prostitution and this is not the case of the prosecution in the present case, as from the evidence on record, it is very much clear that both prosecutrix PW2 Pinky and the accused appellant Rajan were having love affair and because of that reason, she herself had gone along with the accused appellants from Churu to Delhi and the fact that she was having Bichhua in the finger of her foot also goes to show that she was very much close to the accused appellant Rajan. Rajan and Others v. State of Rajasthan 2002 Cri LJ 3152 Raj : 2002(2) Raj Cri C 1035 : 2002(3) Raj LR 788.

3. Onus of proof.—The onus of proof, in a prosecution under Section 366A, IPC, that the girl was under 18 years of age at the time of her alleged abduction is on the prosecution, unless this is established satisfactorily a conviction under Section 366A cannot be sustained. 168 Ind Cas 833 : 1937 ALJ 547 : 38 Cr LJ 621 : AIR 1937 All 353. There can be no direct evidence about the intention of a person who induces a minor girl to go from one place to another with the intention that she may be forced (or reduced) to illicit intercourse, it has to be inferred from the surrounding circumsta-nces of each particular case. 1954 All WR (HC) 296 : 1955 Cr LJ 168.

Where the offence was of rape on minor girl—Minority of prosecutrix was not established—Her conduct showing that she willingly accompanied accused—No forcible act committed with prosecutrix in medical opinion, hence no offence made out. Y. Srinivasa Rao v. State of Andhra Pradesh, 1995 Cr LJ 1597. (AP).

4. Evidence and Proof.—Evidence of prosecutrix. The prosecutrix was sixteen years old and was abducted and subjected to rape. As regards the conviction for the offence of abduction under Section 366-A, I.P.C. of the appellant-Sushanta, on perusal of the evidence, it was found that the prosecution has proved the same. The evidence of P.W. 4 the prosecutrix is unambiguous and clear to show that she was abducted by the appellant - Sushanta. The said evidence of the prosecutrix was also fully corroborated by the statement of the appellant - Sushanta recorded under Section 313, Cr. P.C. wherein, the appellant has categorically admitted that he had taken away the prosecutrix from the 'Surjya Mela', but with a denial that she was taken away forcibly. The appellant-Sushanta also stated that the prosecutrix accompanied him though he told her that he had his wife and son. Therefore, it appears from the record, though not proved, that the prosecutrix was only 16 years old, i.e. below 18 years. Shri Sushanta alias Tutan Chakraborty alias Bhattacharjee etc. v. State of Tripura 2002 Cri LJ 1951 (Gau.).

Absence of any direct evidence of kidnapping. The appellants were arrested along with the victim girl. The said circumstance has no help to the case of prosecution. In the absence of any direct evidence of kidnapping, it cannot be ruled out that the girl might have gone to Kuju on her own or with some other persons. It may also be possible that on the same day appellants might have gone to Kuju and after seeing the victim girl at Kuju Chowk, they might have started talking to her and by that time police might arrive there and arrested them. Thus, from the aforesaid circumstance, it cannot be inferred that the present crime has been committed by the appellants and none else.

It is well settled that statement under Section 164 CrPC is not a substantive piece of evidence. It can be used only to corroborate or contradict the statement of witness. It is equally well settled that the statement under Section 161 of the CrPC of a witness can be used only for contradicting him. Under the said circumstance, the aforesaid two statements of Sarita Kumari under Sections 161 and 164 CrPC cannot become the basis for conviction. Held, the Court below had committed serious illegality by convicting the appellants on the basis of aforesaid statements. Rajesh Kumar & Anr. vs. State of Jharkhand, 2010 (3) CriLJ 3512 (Jhar).

5. Corroboration.—It cannot be absolutely laid down that in cases under this section, the evidence of the girl always needs corroboration. 229 IC 173 : 48 Cr LJ 301.

6. Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

7. Charge.—"I (name and office of Sessions Judge, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :

That on or about the....day of .....at.......you induced A, B a minor girl, under the age of eighteen years to go from (here name the place) (or to do the following act, namely:—) with the intent that the said A, B may be (or knowing that it is likely that the said A, B will be) forced (or seduced) to illicit intercourse with C, D and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 366A of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.

"And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge."

When the accused is charged under Section 366A and this is no charge under Section 363, IPC, the accused cannot be convicted under Section 363. 1959 Ker LJ 755 : 1959 Ker LT 684.

8. Age.—Age of prosecutrix was below 18 years at the time of incident not established by prosecution. Evidence showing that she left house on her own accord—For first time after two years it was disclosed in court that accused had sexual intercourse against her will—It establishes that it is made out case against accused after due deliberation.—Conviction was held not sustainable. Y. Srinivasa Rao v. State of A.P., (1994) 2 APLJ 309 (AP).

Where though in FIR it is mentioned that the prosecutrix was 17 years of age at the time of the enticing away by the accused but the medical estimation of her age from the number of teeth and their position and the ossification test had shown that she was above 18 years and circumstances showed that she had love affairs with the accused, no offence under Section 366A of IPC was made out. Kuber Chandra Das v. State, 2004 Cr LJ 4776 (Jhar) : AIR 2004 Jhar HCR 2944 : 2004(2) Crimes 421 : 2004(2) JCR Jha 88.

The appellant belonged to the same Caste and Gotra of the prosecutrix and was a frequent visitor to the house of the prosecutrix. There was a love affair between them and the Court also observed that she did not ever resist her being repeatedly deflowered by the appellant Sunil. In this background, close and careful determination of the age of the prosecutrix is imperative. Doctor, who had clinically examined the prosecutrix, found that her secondary sex characters were well developed.

Doctor who examined the prosecutrix referred her for verification to the Dental Surgeon and the Radiologist. The failure of getting the prosecutrix examined from the Dental Surgeon or the Radiologist despite the fact that she was referred to them by doctor is a serious flaw in the prosecution version. The prosecution also failed to produce any Admission Form of the school which would have been primary evidence regarding the age of the prosecutrix.

The School Leaving Certificate produced by the prosecution was also procured, six days after the incident and three days after the arrest of the appellant. As per that certificate also, she joined the school in the middle of the session and left the school in the middle of the session. The attendance in the school of 100 days is also not reliable.

The prosecutrix was admitted in the school by her brother. The said Ashok Kumar was not examined. The alleged School Leaving Certificate on the basis of which the age was entered in the school was not produced.

The father of the prosecutrix has also not been able to give correct date of birth of the prosecutrix. In his statement he clearly stated that he is giving an approximate date without any basis or record.

On consideration of the totality of the facts and circumstances of this case, it would unsafe to convict the appellant when there are so many infirmities, holes and lacunas in the prosecution version. The appellant is clearly entitled to benefit of doubt and consequently the appeal filed by the appellant deserves to be allowed. The appellant is directed to be released forthwith, if not required in any case. The appeal is accordingly disposed of. Sunil vs. State of Haryana, 2009 (4) Crimes 321 (SC) : 2009 (14) JT 644 : 2009 (14) Scale 370 : 2009 (8) Supreme 20 : 2009 (9) SLT 92 : 2010 (1) JCC 140.

9. Conviction.—The alleged allegation of rape made by prosecutrix for the first time in court during evidence after lapse of two years. There was no evidence to show that she was forcibly taken by accused rather she accompanied accused of her own accord. Hence prosecution was not to establish offence for which accused-appellant was convicted. Conviction and sentence set aside. Y. Srinivasa Rao v. State of A.P., (1995) 1 ALT (Cr) 133 (AP).

Guilt of accused established by circumstances—Plea that accused being aged 55 years cannot develop fancy for minor girl, negatived by both lower Courts—It was found out that there is no ground for interference in conviction and sentence. Ganga Dayal Singh v. State of Bihar, 1994 Cri LJ 951 (SC) ; (1994) 1 PLJR 108 ; AIR 1994 SC 859.

Major girl leaving the house of her own—Conviction under Section 366A is not maintainable. Md. Ismail Ansari v. State of Bihar, (1995) 2 East Cr C 648 (Pat) (RB).

If it is established that the girl is major and she had voluntarily gone with the accused order of conviction is unwarranted. Kabirmali v. State of Bihar, 1997 (2) East Cr C 323 (Pat).

10. Consent.—Consent of victim aged 15 years and married is no valid consent. Syed Amjad Ahmed v. State of A.P., 1993 Cri LJ 1920 (AP).

Where the prosecutrix, a major girl, had been taken away from the house of her mother by the accused and on the pretext of the promise of marriage ravished her on several occasions and then refused to marry her and solemnized his marriage with another girl, the prosecutrix could be said to be consenting party to the sexual intercourse and as such the accused could convicted under Sections 366A and 376, IPC. Kuber Chandra Das v. State, 2004 Cr LJ 4776 (Jhar) : AIR 2004 Jhar HCR 2944 : 2004(2) Crimes 421 : 2004 (2) JCR Jha 88.

Abduction and rape—Consent. Appellant abducted victim girl and committed rape on her. Victim girl was a minor aged about 13 years. It was established that at time of abduction, appellant offered laddu to victim and after taking laddu she was under intoxication. Further plea that victim girl left her house out of her own will and that she stayed with appellant has got no relevancy since there is no value of her consent she being minor. Conviction of appellant is proper. Pappu Rajak vs State of Jharkhand, 2010 (4) CriLJ 3998 (Jhar).

11. Bail.—Accused had already been granted bail by CJH but still apprehend an arrest. He claims to belong to a respectable family and aggress to abide by conditions. He was directed to be enlarged on bail in the event of an arrest. (1986) 2 Crimes 61 (Gau).

12. Essential ingredient.—A bare perusal of Section 366 would indicate that the kidnapping or abduction of any woman with a view to compel her for marriage etc. is covered by this section. in the instant case, this provision has not been applied because although the victim is a woman in this case she being minor, Section 366-A has been invoked. Now a perusal of the section would indicate that if the minor girl is induced to go from any place or to do any act with an intent that such girl may be, or knowing that it is likely that she will be, forced or seduced to illicit intercourse with another person shall be punishable with imprisonment which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine. The title to the section is procuration of minor girl. The essential ingredient is inducement of a minor girl to go from any place or to do any act with intent that such girl may be or knowing that it is likely that she will be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse with another. The minor must be proved to have been induced to go or to do something. If the charge is under Section 366-A then "Kidnapping" is not the essential ingredient. While kidnapping abduction is a part of the offence under Section 366, its latter part, viz., "inducement" is the only common ingredient in Section 366 and Section 366-A, IPC. Kailash Laxman Khamkar vs. State of Maharashtra, 2010 (3) Cri LJ 3255 (Bom).

13. Kidnapping, rape and offence of business of prostitution.—It is clear from the statement of the prosecutrix under Section 164 Criminal Procedure Code, recorded by the Magistrate, in her written report and in her statement before the Court that the accused appellant kidnapped her from Nagpur on the pretext of leaving her to her house at Vardha, but he taken her away to his village Ramnagar in Bundi where he committed rape with her and also business of prostitution by collecting money from other persons. The brother of the accused appellant also stated that he has seen Sharda prosecutrix with the accused appellant in a rented house, though he has been declared hostile. The police witnesses in equal vocal terms stated about the mischief done with the prosecutrix by the accused appellant. I am in agreement with the finding of rape arrived at by the trial Court with the prosecutrix and she has been forced by the accused appellant to do prostitution with other persons and collected money from them. It is also clear from the evidence of the prosecution witnesses mentioned above and as per the statement of the prosecutrix coupled with the report of FSL and medical examination done by the doctors, her statement under Section 164 Criminal Procedure Code and her written report submitted to the police, that accused committed rape with her and further the accused appellant forced her to do the business of prostitution and he collected money from the persons who came to him for sex satisfaction with the prosecutrix. The findings arrived at by the trial Court cannot be said to be perverse. I am also in agreement with the finding of the trial Court that the prosecution has been able to prove the charges levelled against the accused appellant beyond reasonable doubt. The judgment of conviction recorded by the trial Court on the charges levelled against him and proved by the evidence of prosecution witnesses is confirmed. But looking to the age of the accused appellant his sentence can be reduced from 10 years to 7 years.

In the result the conviction of the accused appellants for Sections 366, 366-A, 368, 372, 376 IPC and for Sections 3, 6 and 9 of the Immoral Traffic (Prevention) Act, 1956 is confirmed but his sentence is reduced from 10 years to 7 years. Yogesh vs. State of Rajasthan, 2010 (1) CriLJ 629 (Raj).

14. Procuration of minor girl.—Provisions of Ss. 359 and 361 clearly shows that the legislature did not confine to constitute the offence only if a minor girl is taken away from the place where she used to reside but the emphasis is upon taking away the girl from the "lawful guardianship". Sections 359 and 361, IPC do not spell-out any territorial jurisdiction for committing the offence. Thus the rigour of the law travels with the ward/subject and any person involving himself or herself in the offence of kidnapping or procuring a minor girl at any point of time would also come within the purview of Sections 359 and 361, IPC. Therefore, even if the victim girl was initially enticed by the co-accused, giving company to the main accused in the half-way for taking the girl to different places would be sufficient to affirm conviction of appellant-accused under S. 366A as well. Taru Das v. State of Tripura, 2008 CriLJ 3143 (Gau).

1. Amendment.—Vide Amendment under Section 366A. In India the word 'India' has been successively substituted for the words "British India", vide Indian Adaptation of Laws Orders of 1948 and 1950 and Act 3 of 1951, Section 3 and Sch. The words "or from the State of Jammu and Kashmir" were inserted by Act 3 of 1951, Section 3 and Sch. certain words appearing at the marked place (*) "and whoever with such intent or knowledge imports into the States from any part of State any such girl who has with the like intent or knowledge been imported into India, whether by himself or by another person" were omitted by Section 3 and Sch of Act 3 of 1951.

2. Notes.—Where it is never the case of the prosecution that the girls concerned had been imported into the State with intent that they may be or knowing it to be likely that they will be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse with another person a conviction under Section 366B, would be wholly unjustified. AIR 1951 Raj 33 : 52 Cr LJ 217.

3. Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable exclusively by Court of Session.

4. Charge.—I (name and office of Sessions Judge etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That on or about the............day of ....at.........you imported into India from....... a country outside India (or the State of Jammu and Kashmir) by yourself or by another person to wit.....A,B a girl under the age of 21 years with intent (or knowing it to be likely) that she will be forced (or seduced) to illicit intercourse with another person viz., C,D, and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 366B of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.

Madh BLR 1954 Cr 290 : Madh BLJ 1951 HCR 1589. A person can be charged with an ancillary offence under Section 367 when he stands charged with main offence under Section 325 and Section 326. (1969) 1 Andh LWR 1256.

An additional factor which is not in Section 364 that even knowledge apart from the intention of the abductor or kidnapped that the victim is likely to be subjected to grievous hurt or slavery or to unnatural lust is sufficient to make the kidnapping or abduction an offence under Section 367. AIR 1962 Andh Pradesh 267 : 1962 (2) Cr LJ 28 ; see also AIR 1984 SC 911 (where as the High Court did not accept the story of murder by the accused nor record a finding of grievous hurt caused by the accused, its conviction under Section 367 is not warranted).

2. Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable exclusively by Court of Session.

3. Charge.—"I (name and office of the Sessions Judge, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :

'That on or about the.......day of......at......you kidnapped or abducted A,B in order that the said A,B may be subjected (or may be so disposed of as to be put in danger of being subjected) to grievous hurt (or slavery or to the unnatural lust of C,D or knowing it to be likely that such person will be subjected or disposed of and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 367 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.

"And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge."

4. Motive.—When the victim was abducted and was caused grievous hurt—Identification of the accuseds only by the victim solely on the basis of the conversation heard by him during his abduction. There was found absence of any motive or enmity against the assailants. False implication of the accuseds ought to be ruled out. Darshan Singh v. State of Punjab, 1994 SCC (Cri) 281 ; 1994 East Cr C 364 ; 1994 Cr LJ 226 (SC).

5. Evidence and Proof.—According to medical report anus coitus was tried. There was found no injury on the anus—Offence established by medical and circumstantial evidence—Conviction was held fully justified. Imprisonment reduced to undergone. Raj Murti v. State of Haryana, (1994) 1 CC Cases 193 ; (1994) 1 CCR 13 ; (1994) 1 CC Cases 430 ; (1994) 1 Recent Cr R 33 (P & H).

Contradictions in evidence. The medical report clearly indicate that the doctor did not find any Gandasa injury either on the body of the deceased or on the body of witnesses who were stated to be injured witnesses. The number of contradictions, which are referred to by the High Court in its judgment, in respect of all the witnesses definitely make out a case of plausible view which could be deduced from the evidence on record. Moreover, the High Court has given detailed reasons for disbelieving the prosecution case and for acquitting the accused persons.

It is a settled principle of law that when on the basis of the evidence on record two views could be taken–one in favour of the accused and the other against the accused – the one favouring the accused should always be accepted.

In the present case, it is also not clearly established from the records as to who was in possession of the property in question where the occurrence had taken place. In view of the aforesaid situation and the two possible views taken by the Courts below – one taken by the trial Court and the other taken by the High Court – and the view taken by the High Court being a plausible view, we find no ground to interfere with the order of acquittal passed by the High Court. State of Uttar Pradesh vs. Nandu Vishwakarma, AIR 2009 SC 3188 : 2009 CrLJ 4157 : 2009 (9) Scale 81 : 2009 (8) JT 657 : 2009 (5) Supreme 500 : 2009 (7) SLT 675 : 2009 (10) SCR 185.

Where the High Court did not accept story of murder by accused alleged to have abducted deceased nor recorded a finding that grievous hurt was caused to deceased by the accused alleged to have abducted the deceased, it was held that conviction under Section 367 was not warranted. 1986 Cr LJ 814 ; AIR 1984 SC 911 ; (1983) 1 Crimes 675 (MP) reversed.

6. Kidnapping for ransom.—Accused kidnapped victim girl for ransom, as and when he picked up the ransom amount which was kept at a spot as per his directions in the ransom note, he was arrested. He made a disclosure statement and pursuant thereto led the police to the house of co-accused wherefrom Sonam was recovered.

Victim girl did not disclose as to where she was kept was immaterial as she was about 4 1/2 years old when incident took place.

The first is of Mahesh Kumar being apprehended at the spot when he came to collect the ransom money and after he picked up the ransom note he was apprehended at the spot. The prosecution has also successfully proved that after Mahesh Kumar made the disclosure statement he led the Investigating Officer to the house of Ram Ashish from where the young girl was recovered.

Save and except the evidence of the kidnapped child being recovered from the house of Ram Ashish we find no evidence where from his intention or knowledge can be gathered. Mahesh Kumar vs. State, 2010 (3) Cri LJ 3208 (Del).

Accused kidnapped victim girl for ransom. Accused wrote ransom note to father of victim girl only stating that if ransom is not paid, his daughter would be sold.

It is obviously not a case where any threat was extended either to the victim or to her father of causing death or causing injury to the kidnapped child. We note that victim girl has not stated that she was maltreated by either accused.

Thus, the offence made out against accused does not attract Section 364-A IPC. He has committed the offence punishable under Section 363, IPC as also the offence punishable under Section 367, IPC. Mahesh Kumar vs. State, 2010 (3) Cri LJ 3208 (Del).

Sec. 368. Wrongfully concealing or keeping in confinement, kidnapped or abducted person.—Whoever, knowing that any person has been kidnapped or has such been abducted, wrongfully conceals or confines such person, shall be punished in the same manner as if he had kidnapped or abducted such person with the same intention or knowledge, or for the same purpose as that with or for which he conceals or detains such person in confinement.

3. Procedure 2273
4. Charge 2273

1. Scope.—This section refers to some other party who assists in concealing any person who had been kidnapped and does not refer to the kidnappers. 6 WR Cr 17. Knowledge of kidnapping or abduction is essential. "Knowledge" means facts observed by himself or communicated by somebody whose veracity is not doubted. AIR 1932 Oudh 28 : 1932 Cr C 60 : 8 OWN 1325 : 136 Ind Cas 243. To sustain a conviction under this section it is not enough to show that the accused was concealing or confining in his house the girl who was kidnapped or abducted, it must further be proved that he knew that she had been kidnapped. 157 Ind Cas 168 : 36 Cr LJ 1089 : 1935 A Cr C 156. Section 368, IPC, presupposes that the offence of kidnapping or abduction had taken place, so that any one wrongfully concealing or confining the person kidnapped or abducted is guilty of an offence under that section. If, therefore, no offence of kidnapping or abduction is made out, the charge under the section fails. 167 Ind Cas 676 : 38 Cr LJ 401 : 1936 A Cr C 221 : 1937 ALR 216 : AIR 1937 All 182 ; 49 CWN 533 : AIR 1945 Cal 432 ; AIR 1939 Lah 180. "Concealment" means a withdrawal from the actual observation of others of the person kidnapped or abducted and not merely taking her away to a long distance so that her father or guardian would not know where she was. Hence where a kidnapped girl is taken to a well where she is allowed to move in the neighbouring fields it cannot be said that she is concealed. AIR 1939 Lah 26. The withdrawal of a person from the actual observation of others by removal or otherwise is necessary to constitute the offence of wrongfully concealing a person kidnapped or abducted, the mere giving of false information about such person not being sufficient. 10 PR 1874 Cr ; see also 6 Bom LR 785 ; 7 WR 56 ; 5 NWP 133 ; 5 NWP 189 ; 15 CPLR 185. 'To constitute the offence, the concealment or confinement must be by person who knows of the kidnapping or abduction, and must also be wrongful. A concealment of one who has escaped from slavery or who endeavours to avoid his kidnappers who are in pursuit of him is no offence. This mode of abetment by aid is punishable as the substantive offence which is abetted."—Morgan and Macpherson.

The mere circumstance of kidnapped girl staying in the accused's house for a day or two does not warrant the conclusion that she was wrongfully concealed with the object of batting any search that might be made for her. 5 NWP 189 ; see also 5 NWP 133 ; 15 CPLR 185 ; 7 WR Cr 56. In a charge to a jury for an offence under Section 368, IPC, a distinction should be drawn between evidence of knowledge and suspicion. 87 Ind Cas 845 : 26 Cr LJ 1021 ; AIR 1926 Cal 226. For a conviction under this section it must be proved that the accused concealed the girl or kept her in wrongful confinement. 27 Cr LJ 554 : 93 Ind Cas 1050. This section refers to some other party who assists in concealing any person who had been kidnapped and does not refer to the kidnapper. 97 Ind Cas 960 : 27 Cr LJ 1200. Where a person was abducted at B but concealed at S, person concealing can be tried not only at S but also at B. AIR 1933 Oudh 45 : 1933 Cr C 220 : 9 OWN 1181 : 141 Ind Cas 741. In order to convict a person under this section, it must be proved thus the abducted girl is below the age of 16 years. 43 CWN 543.

In order to establish an offence under Section 368 it is necessary for the prosecution to prove that the person in question had been kidnapped or abducted that the accused knew of such kidnapping or abduction, that he having such knowledge wrongfully concealed or kept such person in confinement. 1954 All WR (HC) 296 : 1959 Cr LJ 168. See also AIR 1973 SC 201 : 1973 Cr LJ 267. The prosecution must establish : (l) the person has been kidnapped or abduction; (2) knowledge of the accused of such kidnapping or abduction; (3) the accused must wrongfully conceal or confine the abducted person. 1967 Jab LJ 234 (SC) ; 1980 All Cr R 222 ; 1978 WLN (UC) 501.

1. Notes.—Where kidnapping was with intent to steal, a conviction under this section is proper. 13 Cr LJ 249 : 14 Ind Cas 601 ; see also 16 Cr LJ 167 : 27 Ind Cas 551. Kidnapping was not committed on the fact of the case, in 1981 Cr LR (SC) 218 : 1981 Cr App SC 275.

2. Separate sentences.—The offence described in Section 363 includes that which is described in this section and as such should not be punished separately. 8 WR 35 Cr ; see also 8 WR 84.

3. Evidence and Proof.—Sufficient evidence. Rape and murder of a girl aged 2 years. The evidence of PW-5 and PW-6 reveals that appellant had been seen around the complainant's house on the previous day and as he was not a resident of this area, he had been quickly singled out. These witnesses further stated the appellant had been seen in the vicinity again after the rape and murder and he had accordingly been apprehended and handed over to the police and two chains worn by deceased had been taken from his pockets. PW-13 also identified the chains in Court. It is true that in the cross-examination of these two witnesses, several improvements vis-a-vis their statements under Sec. 161 of Criminal Procedure Code had been pointed out by the defence Counsel, but the fact that the appellant had been present in the vicinity of the house and had been arrested, soon after the incident has been admitted even by the defence.

Another significant piece of evidence is the statement of PW-7 who testified to the fact that about 2:30 a.m. on the night of the murder he had gone out of the house to urinate and had seen the appellant outside and on being questioned, the appellant had threatened him with dire consequences with the result that he had not informed anybody till the third day after the police had come to the village to verify the facts. He too stated to the fact that two chains had been recovered from the pocket of the appellant. It is true that several improvements have been made by the three primary witnesses but there is absolutely no reason as to why they would involve the appellant in a false case as admittedly he was a stranger to the locality and they bore him no ill will.

We have also gone through the evidence of PW-12 relating to the recovery of the frock pursuant to a disclosure statement made by the appellant under Sec. 27 of the Evidence Act. Nothing could be spelt out from the cross-examination of this witness except that the recovery had not been made from a closed place, though he explained that there was very little movement of human beings in that area as no one was residing close by. This witness also identified the frock that had been recovered. It is equally significant that the strands of fibre recovered from the place of incident had been matched with the material of the frock and were found to be from the same source.

It is true that in a criminal matter the onus of proof lies almost exclusively on the prosecution. As already mentioned above, however, the appellant has not been able to give any explanation in his statement under Sec. 313 of Criminal Procedure Code as to what he had been doing in that locality. On the contrary he admitted his presence by stating that he had been caught by the neighbours on suspicion of the murder and beaten up, and had suffered several injuries in the process. The medical evidence on the contrary reveals that these injuries could also have been sustained while raping and killing the young child.

The evidence that the appellant was a paedophile with extremely violent propensities also stands proved on record in that he had been convicted and sentenced for an offence punishable under Sec. 354 in the year 1998 and later for offences punishable under Secs. 363, 376, 379, 302 and 201 of the IPC for the rape and murder of a young child and had been awarded a sentence of imprisonment for life under Sec. 302, and several other terms of imprisonment with respect to the other Secs., though, an appeal in this connection was pending as on date. It is also extremely relevant that the appellant, had, in addition, been tried for the murders of several other children but had been acquitted on the 28.07.2005 with the benefit of doubt. The present incident happened three days later. We accordingly dismiss the appeals but modify the sentence of death to one for the rest of his life in terms of the judgment in Shraddananda's case. Sebastian vs. State of Kerala, 2010 (1) SCC 58 : 2009 (4) Crimes 121 (SC) : 2009 (13) JT 136 : 2009 (13) Scale 210 : 2009 (7) Supreme 8 : 2009 (8) SLT 96.

3. Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by a Magistrate of the first class.

4. Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you [name of the accused) as follows :—

"That on or about the.........day of ....at..........you kidnapped (or abducted) A,B a child then under the age of ten years, with the intention of taking dishonestly any moveable property, to wit.....from the person of the said A,B and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 369 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance."

1. Scope.—"By this section the sale are disposal of any person "as a slave', that is, on the pretext of his being in a condition of slavery, is made an offence. The clause extends not only those immediately concerned in the contract of sale or disposal, but extends to those who aid them by knowingly conveying or removing the person who is the subject of the bargain, or knowingly receiving or detaining such person as a slave. This section in general prohibits the traffic in all human beings, whether children of tender years or adults".—Morgan and Macpherson.

2. Slavery.—Where a person transferred to another his rights over a girl of 13 years for 25 years, whom he described as her villati, held, that both were guilty under this section. 7 M 227 : 1 Weir 354 ; see also UBR (1897-1901) Vol. I, 337. But where a girl is bought or sold for purposes of marriage, no offence is committed under this section. 20 PR 1884 ; 19 PR 1867. If knowing that a girl had been kidnapped, the accused wrongfully confines her, and subsequently detains her as a slave, he is guilty of two separate offences under Sections 368 and 370. 3 NWP 146. This section is only directed against attempts to place person in the position of slaves, or to treat them in a way that is consistent with the idea of the person so treated being free as to his property service or conduct in any respect. 2 All 723. Keeping a woman against her will as a slave is an offence under this section. 16 WR Cr 73. The purchase of a girl in a foreign territory, knowing her to be a slave, is not in itself an offence punishable under the Penal Code, and to make the importing of her into British territory an offence, it is necessary that it should appear that the accused imported her as a slave. 26 PR 1882 Cr. Slavery in Section 370 IPC, includes something very far short of slavery in its most extreme forms wherein the master has absolute and unlimited power over the life, fortune and liberty of the laws. 33 MLJ 430 : 22 MLT 262 : 1917 MWN 894 : 6 LW 600. Sec. 372. Selling minor for purposes of prostitution, etc.—Whoever sells, lets to hire, or otherwise disposes of any "person under the age of eighteen years with intent that such person shall at any age be employed or used for the purpose of prostitution or illicit intercourse with any person or for any unlawful and immoral purpose, or knowing it to be likely that such person will at any age be" employed or used for any such purpose shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Explanation I.—When a female under the age of eighteen years is sold, let for hire, or otherwise disposed of to a prostitute or to any person who keeps or manages a brothel, the person so disposing of such female shall, until the contrary is proved, be presumed to have disposed of her with the intent that she shall be used for the purpose of prostitution.

Explanation II.—For the purposes of this section "illicit intercourse" means sexual intercourse between persons not united by marriage or by any union or tie which, though not amounting to marriage, or recognised by the personal law or custom of the community to which they belong or, where they belong to different communities, of both communities, as constituting between them a quasi morital relation.

1. Amendment.—The words within quotations in Section 372 have been substituted by the Indian Criminal Law (Amendment) Act, 1924 (18 of 1924). Section 2 for certain original words. The two Explanations of this section have also been inserted by ibid, Section 3.

2. Ingredients of offence.—The ingredients of an offence under this section are (l) that the minor sold or otherwise disposed of must be under the age of sixteen, (2) there must be a sale or other disposal, (3) it must be with the guilty intent described in the section. AWN 1900, 133 ; 6 BLR App 34 : 14 WR Cr 39 ; 35 MLJ 157 : 24 MLT 77 : 19 Cr LJ 965 : 47 Ind Cas 865 ; AIR 1943 All 324 : 35 Cr LJ 571 : 1934 Cr C 408 ; 40 CWN 1188. In order to constitute an offence under this section there need not be a disposal tantamount to a transfer of possession or control over minor's person. 1 M 164. The words "dispose of" has many meanings. It denotes inter alia "to bestow for an object or purpose, to make a change in the circumstances" ; it does not necessarily imply that there has been a transfer of possession nor do the terms "sell or hire" necessarily connote a present or immediate transfer or possession. Where a transfer of possession is contemplated, the offence is complete on proof of the sale or hiring without any proof of transfer of possession. 9 Weir 359 (FB). Where a minor daughter is dedicated in the service of a temple she becomes incapable of contracting a marriage. The change in the circumstances of the minor is a "disposal" within the terms of this section. Ibid. 15 M 75 : 1 Weir 372 ; 1 M 154 ; 16 Bom 737 ; 6 BHCR Cr 69 ; 15 M 41 ; 15 M 323 ; 1 Weir 364. Performance of a Gejjee ceremony on a minor girl does not amount to her disposal within Section 372. 21 Cr LJ 721 : 22 Bom LR 894 : 58 Ind Cas 145. But where minor girls were being taught singing and dancing and were made to accompany their grandmother a dasi to the temple, to take part in the ceremonies of the temple with a view to qualify them as dasis, held, that the facts proved did not amount to a disposal under this section. 1 Weir 364. But the dedication of minor girls to the service of a temple and their registration as dancing .girls amounts to such a disposing and obtaining as this section contemplates. 1 Weir 356 ; 24 MLJ 211, 12 M 373. Where there was no proof that the accused knew that the girl was a married woman or was likely to be employed for a purpose which was both unlawful and immoral, held. that he could not be convicted under Section 372 Penal Code, 13 PR 1904 Cr : 1 Cr LJ 949 : 114 PLR 1904. Where the accused by falsely representing that a girl belonging to a low caste belonged to a higher caste, induced a member of a higher caste to take her in marriage and to pay money, for her to the accused, in the full belief that the representations were true, held, that the accused had not committed offences under Sections 372 and 373. 2

All 694 (FB). The offence made punishable by Section 372 is complete when the person intending that a minor should be employed or used for the purpose of prostitution or for any unlawful or immoral purpose, or knowing it to be likely that such minor will be employed or used for any such purpose, intentionally places the minor in a position calculated to bring about the result intended or known to be likely. 7 Bom LR 562 : 2 Cr LJ 500. Where the accused brought a young prostitute to a brothel at the request of the complainant for his supposed use for a single occasion and where it was not contemplated that the girl should be sold or let out for a period of employment, or for the purpose of being employed by the complainant as a prostitute, or for the purpose of being disposed of by the person for that course of life. Held, that the commission of an immoral act of sexual intercourse at an interval so brought about was not in the contemplation of Section 372, Penal Code. 21 Cal 97. The performance of the ceremony of tying Talimani to a minor girl, worshipping a basic of water and distributing food does not come within the provisions of Section 372 of the Indian Penal Code. 27 Bom LR 1022 : 89 Ind Cas 1050 : 26 Cr LJ 1482 : AIR 1925 Bom 478. A mere direction or recommendation to a girl to live in a brothel, would not constitute a disposal within the meaning of Section 372. The word “disposal” connotes some control by the person disposing, over the minor disposed of. Nor can it be a case of “selling or letting to hire of a minor” as there is no evidence of any passing of pecuniary consideration. 21 LW 472 : 86 Ind Cas 804 : 26 Cr LJ 868 : 48 MLJ 594 : AIR 1925 Mad 716. It is not requisite for the purpose of Section 373 that the possession of the minor should be obtained from a third person. It is enough if it is established that the accused in fact obtained possession of the minor with the intent that the minor shall be used for the purpose of prostitution. 11 Pat LT 341 : AIR 1930 Pat 219.

The sale of minor girl is not criminal per se but only on proof of one of the intentions mentioned in the section. Further the point for time which is crucial for determining the culpability of the accused is the one when the sale of the girl takes place. AIR 1954 HP 43 : 1953 Cr LJ 859 ; 1954 All WR (HC) 296 : 1955 Cr LJ 168.

3. Prostitution.—In the absence of any special custom it is unlawful for a guardian to enter into a transaction by which a minor may be transferred to another as his concubine. 1 Weir 373. This section declares as a matter of general law, that no person under the age of majority, shall be devoted to a life of prostitution, nor employed in, nor used for any unlawful or immoral purpose, nor placed in a position in which it is likely that such person will be employed in, or used for any such purpose. This rule, which is obviously suggested by the highest considerations of justice and morality, must control the exercise of all private law, even in those cases in which the private law assumes to vindicate itself on the serious plea of religion. 1 Weir 359. The word “unlawful” in this section must be ejusdem generis with immoral. Rat Un Cr C 310. The offence of selling or buying a minor for the purpose of prostitution is committed even when the minor, prior to such transaction, has been leading an immoral life. 8 Bom LR 236 : 3 Cr LJ 334. It may be regarded as settled law that the dedication of a minor girl to a temple in order that she might serve the temple as a dancing girl amounts to the disposal of the minor for the purpose of prostitution, especially where there is evidence of the kind of the life that girls so dedicated have led. (1911) 2 MWN 479 : 12 Cr LJ 566. Prostitution cannot be treated as a profession by which a girl can earn her livelihood for the purpose of Section 488, Cr PC. 1913 MWN 695 : 14 MLT 224 : 25 MLJ 349 : 14 Cr LJ 525 : 20 Ind Cas 1005 : 37 M 565.

Doctors in nursing homes who, contrary to all norms of professional ethics, sell a recently born child without ascertaining satisfactorily the purpose for which the child is being purchased and without taking proper precautions to ensure that the child may not fall in undesirable hands must, prima facie, be imputed with the knowledge that the child, at some age, is likely to be employed or used for any unlawful and immoral purpose within the meaning of Section 372 of the Indian Penal Code. It has to be taken notice of that the word "likely" in the section denotes "probability" and not "certainty". State of MP v. Dr. P.K. Jain, 2005 Cr LJ 877 (MP).

4. Disposes of.—The word "disposal" shows that the person disposing has some control over the minor. 48 MLJ 503 : 86 Ind Cas 804. A change in the circumstance of the minor is a disposal. 1 Weir 359 (FB).

5. Conviction.—A charge under Section 372 IPC, in respect of alleged hiring out of a minor by the accused for a certain sum of money to various visitors going to his house should not be drawn up as though the offence were a general one of living upon the immoral earnings of a woman. Separate charges would be drawn up with regard to each of the visitors. A single charge in respect of all the various visitors necessarily leads to scrabby and inept cross-examination and causes prejudice to the accused. The conviction of the accused on such a charge cannot be seperated. 40 CWN 1188. Where an accused has been convicted under Section 372 he cannot at the same time be convicted under Section 366A. Section 366A will be applicable where there is no sale of the girl, but she is induced by some other means to go from any place or to do any act so that she might be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse with another person. 1954 All WR (HC) 296 : 1955 Cr LJ 168.

The accused kidnapped a minor girl in broad daylight and kept her in a room for over a month where two accused raped her repeatedly. The victim had no enmity against accused to tender false evidence at risk of its adverse effect on her future. Her evidence was sufficiently enough to prove the guilt of accused. It was held that acquittal of accused for want of corroboration of her evidence was not proper. Public Prosecutor, High Court of AP v. Sannaila Subba Rao, 2004 Cr LJ (NOC) 45 (AP) : 2004(2) ALD (Crl) 213 : 2004(2) Andh LT (cri) AP 15.s

7. Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

8. Charge.—I (name and designation of the Sessions Judge, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :

'That on or about the......day of ....at..........you hold (or let to hire or disposed of) one A,B, then a minor under the age of eighteen years, with intent that the said A.B shall at any age be employed or used for the purpose of prostitution or illicit intercourse (or for any unlawful and immoral purpose, to wit......) or knowing it to be likely that such minor will be employed or used for any such purpose) and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 372 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance."

"And I hereby direct that you be tried (by the said Court) on the said charge."

Sec. 373. Buying minor for purposes of prostitution, etc.—Whoever buys, hires or otherwise obtains possession of any person under the age of eighteen years with intent that such "person shall at any age be employed or used for the purpose of prostitution or illicit intercourse with any person or for any unlawful and immoral purpose, or knowing it to be likely that such person will at any age" be employed or used for any such purpose, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Explanation I.—Any prostitute or any person keeping or managing a brothel, who buys, hires otherwise obtains possession of a female under the age of eighteen years shall, until the contrary is proved be presumed to have obtained possession of such female with the intent that she shall be used for the purpose of prostitution.

Explanation II.—"Illicit intercourse" has the same mean-ing as in Section 372.

1. Amendment.—The words within quotations in Sections 373 have been substituted by the Indian Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1924 (18 of 1924).

Section 2, for certain original words. The two explanations of this sections have also been inserted by ibid. Section 4.

2. Scope and Object.—The mischief against which this section is directed, is a trafficking in the prostitution or other unlawful and immoral use of minors. It is not intended to make punishable the buying hiring or otherwise obtaining possession for a single act of sexual intercourse with the person so obtaining possession. 1 Weir 377 : 5 MHC 473. Possession in this section indicates with a power of disposal. It is something more than such possession as is obtained for the purpose of single act of sexual intercourse. 58 Bom 498 : 151 Ind Cas 877 : 35 Cr LJ 1437 : 36 Bom LR 379 : AIR 1934 Bom 200. Possession need not be obtained from third party. Possession can be obtained by stealing a minor girl with requisite intention. Ibid ; see also AIR 1930 Pat 219 : 11 PLT 341 : 125 Ind Cas 154 ; AIR 1942 Bom 23 : 43 Cr LJ 400. A prostitute received into her house two girls, one of them being of mature age, and promised to give the elder good clothes and ornaments if she live with her. Held, that from these facts it might be reasonably inferred that the accused obtained possession of the girls with intent that one or both of them should be employed for the purpose of prostitution, or knowing it to be likely that they would be so employed, and that, therefore an offence under Section 373 had been committed. 1 ALJ 559 : 1 Cr LJ 972. To constitute the offence under Sections 372 and 373, it is necessary that there should be a making over of possession of the minor girl either by sale or hire or by a similar arrangement. 35 MLJ 157 : 24 MLT 77 : 47 Ind Cas 865 : 19 Cr LJ 965 ; see also 35 CWN 316 : 33 Cr LJ 553 : AIR 1932 Cal 417. It is not requisite for the purpose of Section 373 of the Indian Penal Code, 1860, that the possession of the minor should be obtained from a third person. It is enough if it is established that the accused in fact obtained possession of the minor with the intent that the minor shall be used for the purpose of prostitution. 22 Bom LR 1234 : 45 Bom 529 : 59 Ind Cas 141 : 22 Cr LJ 29. It is necessary for the prosecution to prove in a case under Section 373, IPC, that the girl is under the age of 16 years. 26 CWN 972 : 36 Cr LJ 152 : AIR 1922 Cal 505. Where a minor girl was brought from Kashmir to Bombay by accused No. 2 and put in the brothel of accused No. 1 held, (1) that the offences under Sections 373 and 114, IPC, were committed in Bombay and not in Kashmir. 101 Ind Cas 593 : 28 Cr LJ 465 : 39 Bom LR 490. Sections 373 of the Penal Code must be read in conjunction with the previous Section 372 which is its counterpart. And the questions whether a person under eighteen has been brought and sold, hired and let to hire, disposed of and possession obtained are all in each case questions of fact for the jury and not of law to the Judge. The law does not the specify the nature of the possession nor its duration nor intensity. It merely specifies the objects, namely, prostitution or illicit intercourse whether in each case the possession is such as to be consistent with the purpose, or intention or knowledge of prostitution of illicit intercourse is the only proper test. 52 Bom 403 : 112 Ind Cas 209 : 30 Bom LR 613 : 29 Cr LJ 993 : AIR 1928 Bom 336. If the accused is proved to have obtained possession of a female under the age of 18 years and is proved to be a person who occupies or manages a brothel, then he is presumed to have obtained possession of that girl with the intent that he shall use her for the purpose of prostitution. 30 PLR 414 : 115 Ind Cas 65 : 30 Cr LJ 376 ; see also 35 Cr LJ 451 : 24 Cr LJ 104 : 71 Ind Cas 232. Proof of intention or knowledge must almost be entirely a matter of inference from circumstances. 24 Cr LJ 104 : 35 Cr LJ 45. Before an offence under this section can be established it must be proved ; (1) that a minor under sixteen years of age was bought, hired or otherwise obtained possession of by the accused, and, (2) that the minor was bought, hired, or otherwise obtained possession of by the accused with the intent that the same minor while under sixteen years of age shall be employed or used for the purpose of prostitution, or with knowledge that it was likely that the said minor, while still under the age of sixteen, will be employed or used for an unlawful or an immoral purpose. The offence would be, and is complete as soon as the buying, etc. by the accused and the guilty knowledge or intent on his part are proved, though the person bought may not enter upon prostitution until years after she had attained maturity, or may never enter upon such profession at all. 18 All 24 ; see also 23 M 159. It is not essential to the offence, under this section, that the buying, hiring or otherwise obtaining the possession of, should be from a third person. The language of the section is quite applicable to an agreement or understanding come to with the minor, without intervention of a third person, and the vice against which the section is directed is not of less enormity in the latter case. But to bring a case within the section, it is essential to show that the possession of the minor has been obtained under a distinct agreement come to between the parties that the minor's person should be for some time completely in the keeping and under the control and direction of the party having the possession.

whether ostensibly, for a purpose or not. 5 MHC 473 : 1 Weir 377. This section is not applicable where the accused solicite a girl merely to have sexual intercourse with her. 7 NWP 295. The words, "otherwise obtains possession of" must be read together with the proceeding words, and the accused is not punishable under this section for mere enticement. 11 CPLR Cr 6.

Accused cannot be convicted under Sections 373, 376 and 378 for marriage certificate being wrong on account of wrong entries. 1987 Cri LR (MP) 13.

3. Otherwise obtains possession.—The words "otherwise obtains possession" in Section 373, must be construed ejusdem generis with "buying" and "hiring". Further the word "possession" implies some sort of control. Where, therefore, a girl under 18 years of age ran away with the accused of her own accord and the intention of the accused was not other than to have intercourse with the girl himself, and there was nothing to show that he had possession of her in any sense of the term or that he attempted to control her movements in any way, the accused cannot be convicted of the offence under Section 373, IPC. ILR (1937) 2 Cal 187 : 169 Ind Cas 76 : 38 Cr LJ 696 : 41 CWN 447 : AIR 1937 Cal 250. A valid adoption would be covered by the expression 'otherwise obtains possession'. Therefore, it is of no consequence whether the accused could or could not adopt the girl and whether the alleged adoption was valid and effective. 1959 Jab LJ 614 : 1960 MPLJ 177 : 1960 MPC 52.

4. Explanation.—AIR 1943 Bom 150 ; 44 Cr LJ 534. Where no presumption arises under this explanation a presumption may well arise under Sections 14, 15 and 114 of the Evidence Act, Ibid.

In order that presumption under Explanation 1 to Section 373 IPC, could be raised against the accused, it should first be proved either she is a prostitute or that she is keeping or managing a brothel, 1959 Jab LJ 614 : 1960 MPC 52 : 1959 MPLJ 177.

5. Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

6. Charge.—I (name and office of Sessions Judge, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

'That on or about the......................day of................ at............... you bought (or hired or obtained possession of) A, B, a person then under eighteen years of age, with intent that the said A, B shall be employed (or used) for the purpose of prostitution (or illicit intercourse or for any unlawful and immoral purpose), or knowing it to be likely that the said A, B will be employed or used for any such purpose) and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 373 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance."

[1]SEXUAL OFFENCES

Sec. 375. Rape.—A man is said to commit "rape" who except in the case hereinafter excepted, has sexual intercourse with a woman under circumstances falling under any of the five following description :—

First.—Against her will.

Secondly.—Without her consent.

Thirdly.—With her consent, when her consent has been obtained by putting her or any person in whom she is interested in fear of death, or of hurt.

Fourthly.—With her consent, when the man knows that he is not her husband, and that her consent is given because she believes, that he is another man to whom she is or believes herself to be lawfully married.

[1] Substituted by the Criminal Law Amendment Act (43 of 1983) with effect from 25.12.83.

Fifthly.—With her consent, when at the time of giving such consent, by reason of unsoundness of mind or intoxication or the administration by him personally or through another of any stupefying or unwholesome substance, she is unable to understand the nature and consequences of that to which she gives consent.

Sixthly.—With or without her consent, when she is under "sixteen" years of age.

Explanation.—Penetration is sufficient to constitute the sexual intercourse necessary to the offence of rape.

Exception.—Sexual intercourse by a man with his own wife, the wife not being under "fifteen" years of age, is not rape.

1. Amendment.—In the Penal Code, the heading "of rape" occurring immediately before Section 375 and for Sections 375 and 376 the heading and the section have been substituted by The Criminal Law (Amendment) Act, 1983 (43 of 1983) which received the assent of the President on 25.12.1985 in the Criminal Law (Amendment) Act (43 of 1983) a new section numbered 114A has been added in the Evidence Act.

2. Scope.—The prosecutrix was about 17 years as per medical evidence. There were no efforts to resist or overcome the sexual assault. She remained with company of accused for pretty long time, and was a consenting party. The offence of rape is not established. Acquittal. Subhash Koli v. State of Rajasthan, (1995) 2 Cr LR 675 (Raj).

Accused was charged of committing rape on the prosecutrix. The accused induced the girl to accompany him under the pretext that her father was ill and she was required to visit her father, on the way she was made victim of sexual assault. It was observed that she might have not resisted or she might have passively suffered the assault but that would not amount to free consent. That would amount to obtaining consent by deception. 1987 Cr LJ 374 (Guj).

When informities found in conduct of identification parade and independent panch witnesses absent, identity of accused as offender not established and thus liable to be acquitted. State of Gujarat v. Mahmud, 1996 Cr LJ 3400 (Guj.).

In Sakshi v. Union of India, 1999 Cr LJ 5625 (SC) attention of the Apex court was drawn to existing section 375/376, IPC and various other section and it was pointed out that the interpretation being placed by the courts or those section cannot be said to be in tune with the current state of affairs existing in the society particularly in the matter of sexual abuse of children. The court made the following observations:—

> "We have perused the issues, as submitted for consideration by the petitioners and find prima facie that the 156th Report of the Law Commission does not deal with most of the issues raised herein. The issues are important and concern sexual abuse of child. Keeping in view, the rise in crime and the growing menace of sexual abuse of child, we consider it appropriate and once again request the Law Commission to examine the issues submitted by the petitioners and examine the feasibility of making recommendations for amendment of the Indian Penal Code or deal with same in any other manner so as to plug the loopholes.
> "A copy of the 'precise issues" together with appendix and the affidavit shall be sent to the Secretary Law Commission with a request to him to place the same before the Hon'ble Chairman of the Law Commission for his consideration. The Law Commission may, if so advised, call upon the petitioners to assist it in whatever manner it considers it appropriate. The issues, it appears to us do need a through examination.
> "We are adjourning the matter by three months and hope that the Law Commission would be able to devote its attention to the issue raised on the submission note in the mean while."

3. Presumption as to obsence of consent in certain prosecutions for rape.—"In a prosecution for rape under Clause (a) or Clause (b) or Clause (c) or Clause (d) or Clause (e) or Clause (g) of sub-section (2) of Section 376 of the Indian Penal Code, where sexual intercourse by the accused is proved and the question is whether it was without the consent of the woman alleged to have been raped and she states in her evidence before the Court that she did not consent, the Court shall presume that she did not consent."

There have been amendment of Section 327 and of the First Schedule of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 to the following effect.

4. Amendment of Section 327.—In the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 (hereinafter referred to as the Criminal Procedure Code). Section 397 shall be renumbered as sub-section (1) of that section and after it, as so renumbered, the following sub-sections shall be inserted, namely :—

(2) Not withstanding anything contained in sub-section (1), the inquiry into and trial of rape or an offence under Section 376, Section 376A, Section 376B, Section 376C or Section 376D of the Indian Penal Code shall be conducted in camera :

Provided that the Presiding Judge may, if he thinks fit, or on an application made by either of the parties, allow any particular person to have access to, or be or remain in the room or building used by the court.

(3) Where any proceedings are held under sub-section (2), it shall not be lawful for any person to print or publish any matter in relation to any proceedings, except with the previous permission of the court.

5. Amendment of the Schedule.—"In the First Schedule to the Criminal Procedure Code, under the reading "I,—offence under the Indian Penal Code".

1	2	3	4	5	6

376D	Intercourse by manager, etc., a hospital with any woman in any hospital.	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto.

6. Consent.—Sexual intercourse by a man with a woman without her free consent i.e., a consent obtained without putting her in fear of injury, amount to rape. 1 WR Cr 21. Where there is consent of the girl no rape has been committed. AWN 1884, 91 ; 12 Cr LJ 584 ; 12 Ind Cas 848; AIR 1927 Lah 858. The fact that the girl was virgo intacta up to the date of occurrence is very strong proof of non-consent. AIR 1925 Lah 619; 96 Cr LJ 1488 ; 89 Ind Cas 1056. In a rape case the question of consent does not arise where the girl is under fourteen years of age. 9 PLT 186 ; 29 Cr LJ 12. The mere fact that the woman did not bear the best of character may at best only render it likely that she might be a consenting party. It would not necessarily follow that she was a consenting party. 1953 Cr LJ 1196 ; AIR 1953 Ajmer 12. Consent can be presumed from the conduct of the raped girl. 1962 Jab LJ 825 ; 1963 (1) Cr LJ 686 ; 1962 MPLJ (Notes) 325. From the circumstances that there were no injuries found on the person of the woman and that the woman had been undergoing forms of marriage with a number of persons some are still alive it cannot be concluded that it was a case of voluntary consent by the woman and that she yielded her body to the accused out of her free will and volition. Absence of resistance does not necessarily imply consent. AIR 1960 Punj 303 ; 1960 Cr LJ 849. Consent on the part of a woman as a defence to an allegation of rape, requires voluntarily participation not only after the exercise of intelligence, based on the knowledge of the significance and moral quality of the act, but after having freely exercised a choice between resistance and assent. AIR 1958 Punj 123 ; 1958 Cr LJ 563 ; 59 Punj LR 519 ; where the fear to which the woman is subjected is neither death nor of hurt but of being arrested when as a matter of fact there is no warrant of arrest against her, then consent, though obtained by fraud, is nonetheless consent for she is willing to allow sexual intercourse for a price, which is fictitious one because there is no warrant of arrest against her. AIR 1955 Nag 121 ; ILR 1954 Nag 922 ; 1955 Cr LJ 819, see also 1958 MPLJ (Notes) 120 (presumption of consent) ; 21 Cut LJ 527 ; 1953 BLJR 727. Where after a petition for divorce had been presented by the wife but before it was heard, the husband had intercourse with her without her consent. Held, that in the absence of any evidence that wife's implied consent had been revoked by act of parties or by an act of Court, the husband could not be held guilty of rape. (1954) 2 All ER 529.

Factors, set out in the first part of Section 90, namely, that the consent given by a person under fear of injury or under misconception of fact is not consent are from the point of view of the victim; whereas the factors, set out in the second part of Section 90, namely, that the person doing the act knows, or has reason to believe, that consent was given in consequence of such fear or misconception are corresponding provisions from the point of view of the accused. Thus, the second part of Section 90 lays emphasis on the knowledge or reasonable belief of the person, who obtains consent, that the consent given by the victim is in consequence of fear of injury or misconception of fact. What is, however, of paramount importance to note is that the existence of the twin requirements of Section 90 must be cumulatively satisfied in order to enable a Court to hold that no consent in law existed at the relevant time. In other words, when these two conditions precedent are co-existent in a case, it can be safely held that no consent, as envisaged under the Indian Penal Code, existed. Such a finding can be reached by examining as to whether the person, giving consent, had given the same under fear of injury or misconception of fact and, further, whether the offender knew, or had reason to believe, that but for fear or misconception of fact, 'consent', would not have been given. The submission of the body by a woman under fear or misconception of fact cannot be construed as consented sexual act for the purpose of Sec. 375, IPC, Section 375 requires voluntary participation by the victim not only after the exercise of intelligence based on the knowledge of the significance and moral quality of the act, but after having fully exercised the choice between resistance and assent. Whether consent existed or not has to be ascertained on the basis of the facts of a given case. There is, indeed, a firm and fine distinction between 'consent' and 'submission'. Every 'consent' involves 'submission', but every 'submission' is not 'consent' and the mere fact that a woman had submitted to the promise of the accused does not necessarily indicate that her 'consent' existed unless the evidence on record establishes that the sexual act, which the prosecutrix had allowed, was accompanied with deliberation after the mind had weighed, as in a balance, the good and the evil on each side with the existing capacity and power to withdraw the assent according to one's will or pleasure. Md. Jakir Ali v. The State of Assam, 2007 CriLJ 1615 (Gauhati).

Absence of injuries either on the accused or on the prosecutrix showed that the prosecutrix did not resist but absence of injuries is not by itself sufficient to hold that the prosecutrix was a consenting party. Where consent, in case of grown up lady to sexual intercourse is likely to be inferred, the prosecution may prove negative consent by producing evidence of threat or fear of death or hurt held out the accused. Jogi Dan v. State, 2004 Cr LJ 1726 (Raj) : 2004 Cri LR (Raj) RAJ 411 : 2004(2) Raj Cri C 780 : 2004(2) Raj LR 635 : 2004(3) WLC 73.

Fear or misconception. Factors, set out in the first part of Section 90, namely, that the consent given by a person under fear of injury or under misconception of fact is not consent are from the point of view of the victim; whereas the factors, set out in the second part of Section 90, namely, that the person doing the act knows, or has reason to believe, that consent was given in consequence of such fear or misconception are corresponding provisions from the point of view of the accused. Thus, the second part of Section 90 lays emphasis on the knowledge or reasonable belief of the person, who obtains consent, that the consent given by the victim is in consequence of fear of injury or misconception of fact. What is, however, of paramount importance to note is that the existence of the twin requirements of Section 90 must be cumulatively satisfied in order to enable a Court to hold that no consent in law existed at the relevant time. In other words, when these two conditions precedent are co-existent in a case, it can be safely held that no consent, as envisaged under the Indian Penal Code, existed. Such a finding can be reached by examining as to whether the person, giving consent, had given the same under fear of injury or misconception of fact and, further, whether the offender knew, or had reason to believe, that but for fear or misconception of fact, 'consent', would not have been given. The submission of the body by a woman under fear or misconception of fact cannot be construed as consented sexual act for the purpose of Sec. 375, I. P. C., Section 375 requires voluntary participation by the victim not only after the exercise of intelligence based on the knowledge of the significance and moral quality of the act, but after having fully exercised the choice between resistance and assent. Whether consent existed or not has to be ascertained on the basis of the facts of a given case. There is, indeed, a firm and fine distinction between 'consent' and 'submission'. Every 'consent' involves 'submission', but every 'submission' is not 'consent' and the mere fact that a woman had submitted to the promise of the accused does not necessarily indicate that her 'consent' existed unless the evidence on record establishes that the sexual act, which the prosecutrix had allowed, was accompanied with deliberation after the mind had weighed, as in a balance, the good and the evil on each side with the existing capacity and power to withdraw the assent according to one's will or pleasure. Md. Jakir Ali v. The State of Assam, 2007 CriLJ 1615 (Gau).

Where accused running an Ashram and known as Godman having control over Ashram, obtained consent of girls by deceitful means that sex with Godman is service to God therefore such offence comes within ambit of Section 375, clause thirdly. Kamalanatha v. State of T.N., 2005 (3) East Cr C 78 (SC) : AIR 2005 (SC) 2132 : 2005(5) SCC 194 : 2005(4) JT 170 : 2005(3) Crimes 24 (SC) : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1121.

A representation deliberately made by the accused with a view to elicit the assent of the victim without having the intention or inclination to marry her, will vitiate the consent. If on the facts it is established that at the very inception of the making of promise, the accused did not really entertain the intention of marrying victim and the promise to marry held out by him was a mere hoax, the consent ostensibly given by the victim will be of no avail to the accused to exculpate him from the ambit of Sec.375 clause second. Pradeep Kumar Verma v. State of Bihar and Anr., 2007 CriLJ 4333 (SC).

Section 114-A of the Evidence Act enables the court to raise a presumption that the woman who was the victim of rape had not consented and that the offence was committed against her will. The legislature has brought in the aforesaid provision because of the obtaining social backdrop. Apex Court in the case of State of Karnataka v. Mahabaleshwar Gourav Naik, AIR 1992 SC 2043 : 1992) Cr LJ 3786, went to the extent of laying down that even if the victim of rape is not available to give evidence on account of her having committed suicide the prosecution case cannot be thrown away over board. An offence of rape is not only an offence against a person but an offence against the entire society. In this backdrop version of the prosecutrix is to be appreciated and scrutinised. As far as spending of time by the prosecutrix is concerned, it is worthwhile to note that she has categorically stated that she was ravished twice by each of the two accused persons and after the act when they got into their sleep, she could leave the place. It is apparent that the two accused persons after statisfying their carnal desire did not bother themselves about her existence and went off to sleep. A panick-striken young girl could not have left earlier but had to wait till the accused person got into their sleep. There is no reason to doubt the aforesaid statement of the prosecutrix. It cannot be said that she remained there out of her own volition. It cannot also be said that she surrendered to the desire of the accused persons by expressing her free-will. Even if she surrendered it was because of compulsion, terror and the instinctual proclivity to save oneself. Miyanlal v. State of M.P. 1999 Cr LJ 2227 (M.P.).

Where there was allegation of raping 3-1/2 years old child. Accused was seen in compromising position—No injuries on private part—Delayed medical examination of both accused and the prosecutrix. Conviction converted into one under Section 376 read with Section 511. Jagdish Pd. Sharma v. State, 1995 Cr LJ 2501 (Del).

The Doctor who examined victim deposed that if a lady of normal height and weight holds her thigh close tight, sexual intercourse with her from behind is not possible without the co-operation of the lady. In the re-examination the doctor deposed that if the assailant uses force with hand or anything else (not penis) and wins over the lady and separates the thighs, he could have sexual intercourse by force from behind. It is clear from the opinion given by doctor in the re-examination that sexual intercourse for a man with a woman without her co-operation from behind in standing posture is absolutely impossible is not at all correct or acceptable. Thomas v. State of Kerala, 1999 Cr LJ 1297 (Ker).

Sexual intercourse without consent of handicapped and young girl which was corroborated by medical expert—Accused escaped from the date of incident.—Offence was fully proved and hence conviction order was passed. Devo v. State, 1994 Cr LJ 2971 (HP).

F.I.R. was lodged after more than 3 months of the alleged incident and only after pregnancy was shown and that too by a stranger. From the delay in lodging F.I.R., the inference can be safely drawn that any person other than the accused was responsible for the alleged pregnancy of the prosecutrix. The finding that the girl was minor cannot be accepted since there is no definite corroborative evidence as to the age of the girl and benefit of doubt should be given to the accused person. Since there is a clear case of the consent and since the age of the girl has not been properly determined, the accused person should be given benefit of doubt. M.S. Prasannan v. State, 1999 Cr LJ 998 (Cal).

7. Age of the Prosecutrix.—In the case of an offence under Section 376 where there is no suggestion that the several intercourse was with the consent of the girl, the question whether she is over or under 14 years of age is not vital importance. 157 Ind Cas 147 ; 36 Cr LJ 1095 ; 1935 A Cr C 123 ; AIR 1935 All 590 ; 1935 Cr C 595 ; AIR 1939 A 708 ; AIR 1931 Lah 401. In ascertainment of age the entry in kotwal book which is genuine can certainly be taken into consideration as a strong piece of evidence. 1962 Jab LJ 825 ; 1963 (1) Cr LJ 686 ; 1962 MPLJ (Notes) 325. Where age of prosecutrix victim was about 11 years on date of incident according to duly proved birth registration certificate issued by municipal corporation it was held that the offence fell under Section 375(6), IPC. Rafik Khan Asgarkhan Pathan v. State of Gujarat, 2005 Cr LJ 1284 (Guj) : 2005(30) All Ind Cas 837 : 2004(3) Guj LH 601 : 2005(1) Guj LR 913 : 2005(2) Rec Cri R 694.

School record—Credibility. Simply because an information furnished by someone else had been duly entered in the school records giving a date of birth at the time of admission of the student, it cannot be presumed that such date of birth is the correct date of birth, unless the informant comes to the Court and deposes that it was he who gave such information to the school authorities and unless he establishes that the said information furnished by him was relating to the correct date of birth. To see whether this condition precedent has been satisfied, I have gone through the evidence of witnesses would be the proper witnesses to speak about this information. When P.W.1 was admitted initially in an elementary school at Mallapuram, for the first time the information regarding the date of birth of PW 1 would have been given either by PW 2 or by PW 3 or by some other relative. But, neither PW 2 nor PW 3 has spoken to anything about the date of birth of PW 1 or the information furnished by either of them to the elementary school. In the absence of any evidence, either from PW 2 or PW 3 or any other relative regarding the date of birth of PW 1 while she was admitted initially in the elementary school, it cannot be conclusively held that the date of birth originally entered in the elementary school records of PW 1 reflects the correct date of birth of PW 1. PW 10 speaks about the admission of PW 1 in the high school in IX Std. It is quite natural that the date of birth as found in the elementary school transfer certificate would have been entered by PW 10 in the high school register. Therefore, unless it is established that the original entry made in the elementary school register is correct, it cannot be concluded that the entry of date of birth found in the high school register is correct. In this regard I may also refer to a judgment of the Honourable Supreme Court in the State of Chhattisgarh vs. Lekhram reported in 2006 (2) Crimes 91 = AIR 2006 SC 1746 = 2006 Cri LJ 2139 wherein it was observed:—

> "It may be true that an entry in the school register is not conclusive but it has evidentiary value. Such-evidentiary value of a school register is corroborated by oral evidence as the same was recorded on the basis of the statement of the mother of the prosecutrix." Ravi vs. State by Inspector of Police, 2010 (3) CriLJ 3493 (Mad).

8. Penetration.—By a process of judicial interpretation the provisions of Section 375, IPC cannot be altered so as to include all forms of penetration such as penile/vaginal penetration, penile/oral penetration, penile/anal penetration, finger/vagina and finger/anal penetration and object/vaginal penetration within its ambit. Section 375 uses the expression "sexual intercourse" but the said expression has not been defined. The dictionary meaning of the word "sexual intercourse" is hetrosexual intercourse involving penetration of the vagina by the penis. Prosecution of an accused for an offence under Section 376, IPC on radically enlarged meaning of Section 375, IPC i.e. by including all forms of penetration violate the guarantee enshrined in Article 20(1) of the Constitution which says that no person shall be convicted of any offence except for violation of a law in force at the time of the commission of the Act charged as an offence, nor be subjected to a penalty greater than that which might have been inflicted under the law in force at the time of the commission of the offence. Such a wide definition so as to include all forms of penetration to be given to "rape" as defined in Section 375, IPC so that the same may become an offence punishable under Section 376, IPC has neither been considered nor accepted by any Court in India so far. Only sexual intercourse, namely, hetrosexual intercourse involving penetration of the vagina by the penis coupled with the explanation that penetration is sufficient to constitute the sexual intercourse necessary for the offence of rape has been held to come within the purview of Section 375, IPC. An exercise to alter the definition of rape, as contained in Section 375, IPC, by a process of judicial interpretation, and that too when there is no ambiguity in the provisions of the enactment, is bound to result in good deal of chaos and confusion, and will not be in the interest of society at large. Sakshi v. Union of India, 2004 Cr LJ 2881 : AIR 2004 SC 3566 : 2004 (3) Crimes 177 (SC) : 2004 (5) SCC 518 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 1645 : 2004 (5) Supreme 68.

Depth of penetration. It has been a consistent view of this Court that even a slightest penetration is sufficient to make out an offence of rape and depth of penetration is immaterial. Wahid Khan vs State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2010 SC 1 : 2010 (1) CrLJ 517 (SC).

Penetration—Male organ completely, partially or slightly. A bare perusal of explanation to Section 375 clearly shows that penetration is necessary to constitute the sexual intercourse to the offence of rape. In the absence of any penetration the offence would not fall within the four corner of Section 375 of the Indian Penal Code. However, it is not necessary that the entire sexual act should be completed. Mere penetration of the male organ within the private part of the woman with or without any emission of semen is sufficient to constitute a rape. Penetration of the male organ completely, partially or slightly would be enough to constitute an offence within the meaning of Sections 375 and 376 IPC. State of H. P. v. Amrish Kumar, 2009 CriLJ 2126 (HP).

To constitute the offence of rape, it is not necessary that there should be complete penetration of the penis with emission of semen and rapture of hymen. The depth of penetration is immaterial in an offence punishable under Sec. 376, IPC. Aman Kumar v. State of Hayana, 2004 Cr LJ 1399 at p. 1403 (SC) : 2004(4) SCC 379 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 1266 : AIR 2004 SC 1497 : 2004(2)JT 274 : 2004(2) Supreme 5 : 2004(2) Crimes 66.

Rape of minor child aged 7 years—Slight penetration of female organ or even an attempt of penetration constitutes offence of rape. Shobha Bind v. State of Bihar, (1995) 2 PLJR 363 (Pat).

Absence of hymen injury forming opinion that victim has sexual intercourse prior to time when she was subjected to rape, is no ground for acquittal of accused. State of A.P. v. Gangula Satyamurthy, 1997 Cr LJ 774 (SC) : AIR 1997 (SC) 1588 : 1996(10) JT 550 : 1996(8) Scale 391 : 1996(4) Crimes 203 (SC).

Merely because the doctor found that the vagina admits one finger, it cannot be inferred that there was no penetration as the muscles must have contracted by then. The Apex court has also stated in so many cases that absence of injuries on the prosecutrix is not fatal to prosecution case. Thus it cannot be said that whenever resistance is offered there must be some injury on the body of the victim. In the instant case, it was held that redness around the vaginal orifice of the prosecutrix was found and this fact itself was sufficient to constitute that offence of rape was committed by the accused. It was further observed by the court that "in India under Section 375, IPC, it is clearly mentioned that penetration is sufficient to constitute the sexual intercourse necessary to the offence of rape. Thus the argument that if sexual intercourse is committed by accused appellant, as stated by PW-I Laxmi ; her hymen should have been ruptured and since her hymen has not been ruptured whole story of rape should be treated as false one, is wholly untenable inasmuch as penetration is sufficient and there is redness around the vaginal orifice of PW-I Laxmi, which leads to the conclusion that some sort of penetration was there and if her hymen is not ruptured, it does not mean that no rape was committed by the accused—Appellant". Pooran Ram v. State of Rajasthan 2001 Cr LJ 91 (Raj) ; See also Durgalal v. State of Rajasthan, 2001 Cr LJ 3652 (Raj).

The doctors who examined the prosecutrix did not find any injury over the private parts. Therefore there could not have been any penetration so as to held that the rape had taken place. It was held that on the ground that the hymen may or may not be ruptured itself was not sufficient to hold that the rape was committed. *D.A. Modi, in his 'Medical Jurisprudence' at Page 31 stated as follows :

"..........In ascertaining the age of young persons radiograms of any of the main joints of the upper or the lower extremity of both sides of the body should be taken an opinion should be given according to the following table, but it must beremembered that too much reliance would not be placed on this table as it merely indicates an average and is likely to vary individual causes even of the same province owing to the excceutricites of the development. Recent work has shown that the range of error may be upto (+) 3 years."

The table showing the age in years of the appearance and fusion of some of the epihysis shows that fusions of some of the joints occur in between the age of 14 to 17 and 17 to 19 years. The age given in this table is also not accurate as per the author himself who opined that the range of error in the table may be upto (+) 3 years. M.C. Prasannan v. State, 1999 Cr LJ 998(Call).

11. Evidence.—It cannot be said that the evidence of the prosecutrix in a rape case is on the same footing as that of an accomplice. In the case of a prosecutrix for rape she is the victim of the offence and not the offender. In law the evidence of the prosecutrix does not require corroboration like that of an accomplice. But in assessing the value or her evidence her conduct immediately after the offence if committed is of great value and would be relevant under Section 8 of the Evidence Act. ILR 1951 Mad 973 ; 52 Cr LJ 718 ; AIR 1951 Mad 760 ; (1951) 1 MLJ 110. The burden is on the prosecution to prove all the element of the offence. AIR 1979 SC 1276 ; 1979 Cr LJ 867.

It is well-settled that a prosecutrix complaining of having been a victim of the offence of rape is not an accomplice after the crime. There is no rule of law that her testimony cannot be acted without corroboration in material particulars. She stands at a higher pedestal than an injured witness. In the latter case, there is injury on the physical form, while in the former it is both physical as well as psychological and emotional. However, if the Court of facts finds it difficult to accept the version of the prosecutrix on its face value, it may search for evidence, direct or circumstantial, which would lend assurance to her testimony. Assurance, short of corroboration as understood in the context of an accomplice would suffice. Aman Kumar v. State of Haryana, 2004 Cr LJ 1399 : AIR 2004 SC 1497 : 2004(2) Crimes 66 : 2004(2) JT 274 : 2004(4) SCC 379 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 1266 : 2004(2) Supreme 5.

The accused was charged with committing rape upon a girl of about 12 years of age. It was observed that in a rape case conviction of accused could be based solely on the evidence of prosecutrix. The testimony of the prosecutrix was corroborated by medical evidence and FIR. Held, that, in such case conviction of accused was justified. 1987 Cr LJ 557 (Madh Pra).

Accused were charged with committing rape on the prosecutrix. Plea that is there was no injury on either side did not mean that there was consent of prosecutrix. She was threatened and forcibly carried and raped. Absence of injuries did not mean that no sexual offence had been committed. 1987 Cr LJ 940 (Kant).

Where accused who allegedly had committed rape of his daughter-in-law is a handicapped person with one arm imputed then testimony of prosecutrix that while committing rape accused was holding a gun in his hand could not be relied upon to record conviction. Mohan Singh v. State of Rajasthan, 2005 Cr LJ 2127 (Raj) : 2005 Cri LR (Raj) RAJ 692 : 2005(2) Raj Cri C 988 : 2005(2) Raj LR 599 : 2005(2) WLC 768.

Legal aspect with respect to appreciation of evidence of prosecutrix can be summarized in the following manner: (1) That the main evidence in all such cases is that of victim herself. (2) That corroboration of the testimony of the prosecutrix in the rape case is not required as a rule of law. But, corroboration should ordinarily be required in the case of a woman having attained majority and who is habitual to sexual intercourse and is found in a compromising position, as in such cases there is likelihood of her having levelled such an accusation on account of institution of self preservation or when the probabilities factor is found to be out of time. (3) That corroboration may be by facts and circumstances. (4) That the injury on the person of the victim, especially her private parts, had corroborative value. (5) That if the evidence of the victim does not suffer from any basic infirmity and the probabilities factor does not render it unworthy of credence, as a general rule, there is no reason to insist on corroboration except from medical evidence, where, having regard to the circumstances of the case, medical evidence can be expected to be forthcoming. Jogidan v. State of Rajasthan, 2004 Cr LJ 1726 (Raj) : 2004 Cri LR (Raj) RAJ 411 : 2004(2) Raj Cri C 780 : 2004(2) Raj LR 635 : 2004(3) WLC 73.

The victim girl stated that she was in the house with children of one of the prosecution witnesses while some came from behind, caught hold of her and she lost her senses which she regained after one hour. After regaining her senses she did not see anybody in the house and she could not say who was that person who caught hold of her. None of the children who were present at the time of the alleged rape were examined. The medical evidence did not support the prosecution case. No spermatozoa were detected in vaginal fluid. The court held that the prosecution had not been able to establish by leading cogent convincing credible, consistent evidence that the accused committed rape on the prosecutrix. State of Orissa v. Kamakshya Prasad Meher, 2001 Cr LJ 3620 (Orissa).

Accused was charged for committing rape on the prosecutrix. It was observed that it could not be understood that on the basis of the circumstance that a woman used to sexual intercourse would be a consenting party to "a forcible sexual assault and intercourse". Once a girl is or woman was used to sexual intercourse, she did not become a vulnerable object or prey for being sexually assaulted. Because she was promiscuous, it could not be inferred that she must have given consent to alleged forcible sexual intercourse. 1987 Cr LJ 374 (Guj).

Accused was charged for committing rape on the prosecutrix. It was observed that discrepancy regarding clothes whether they were washed or not had no significance because complaint itself had been filed after about 3-1/2 months. Mother of prosecutrix was aged 65 and illiterate therefore discrepancy in calculation of days had also no bearing. A witness was liable to get confused or mixed up when interrogated later on. Held, that there was no reason why evidence of the mother of prosecutrix should not be accepted. 1987 Cr LJ 374 (Guj).

When testimony of prosecutrix is corroborated by medical evidence and rape committed without her consent conviction upheld. Govinda Reddy v. State, 1997 Cr LJ 148 (Mad).

When accused committed rape on minor girl of 10-12 years old with injuries on her private parts and her evidence corroborated by medical evidence and eye-witnesses, conviction proper. Mahadeva v. State of Rajasthan, 1996 Cr LJ 4219 (Raj) : 1996(2) Raj LW 608 (Raj).

The victim stated that on the date and time of the incident, as her school was closed, she was playing with her friends (at about 1.30 p.m) At that time the accused bodily lifted her, took her inside his bathroom, made her lie on the ground, undressed her and himself and thereafter committed rape on her. She then came and recounted these facts to her parents, who after washing her private pats and changing her clothes, took her to police station where she lodged her FIR the same day at 7.30 p.m. The manner of the incident as furnished by her referred to above corroborated by the medical evidence. The doctor who medically examined her same day found minor abrasions in her clitoris bleeding from vagina and tear of hymen. On these symptoms, he concluded and rightly that there was positive evidence that she had been raped. There was a litigation pertaining to land between her father and the father of accused and prior to the incident, her father had lodged a FIR against the father of the accused. But the court held that for the said reasons, she would not have falsely implicated the accused and by falsely implicating the accused her own image would have been tarnished and prospects of her marriage blasted. The Court further observed that at any rate, as the Apex Court has observed, times out of number, the mere circumstance that a witness is enimical, would not result in the mechanical rejection of the evidence of such a witness but, would only make the Court cautious while evaluating the testimony of such a witness. Ramchandra Mohadev Shinde v. State Maharashtra, 1999 Cr LJ 1428 (Bom).

The prosecutrix was a minor girl of nine years when the heinous crime of rape was committed on her and she came to her house crying with profused bleeding and informed her mother about the incident. It is quite natural that she was not in a free state of mind to give all the details either to her relatives or to the police. There is no reason for not to believe her evidence when she has stated that she was almost in an unconscious state of mind. The pains and shock to the prosecutrix were quite apparent and, therefore, considering her age and the mental condition, even if she had not given certain details, the same would not be a ground to discard her evidence. The fact that she was deposing before the court after a lapse of about two years there were found to be some improvements in her version before the court. As per the medical report, her hymen was ruptured and she was bleeding profusely from the vagina and the doctor in fact found blood clots when he examined her on the next day and that there was no injury on the male organ. Absence of injury on the male organ cannot be a ground to hold that accused is not responsible for rape. The conviction of accused was held proper. Mohammad Zuber Noormohmad Changawadia v. State of Gujarat 1999 Cr LJ 3419 (Guj).

The accused, a teacher in the school, stopped the prosecutrix, a minor student from going home on the pretext that she did not remember questions. She remained also alone in school and then accused unclothed her and then opened his pant and underwear and put her on the ground and thereafter he put his penis in her vagina forcibly. She made hue and cry, but he pressed her mouth and blood came out from her private part. The accused raped her for some time and, thereafter he left her. Thereafter in the state of warlong, she came to her house and told the whole incident to her mother and uncle. The medical evidence corroborated the statement of prosecutrix as well as the evidence of witnesses it was held that the minor contradictions and omissions in the statement of prosecutrix was immaterial. Om prakash v. State of Rajasthan, 2001 Cr LJ 230 (Raj).

The prosecutrix alleged that she was dragged from the camel she was riding and raped. She also alleged that the accused had caused injuries on her cheeks. The doctor disproved the allegation of injuries caused on the person of the prosecutrix. The prosecutrix, as also her husband stated in the deposition that at the time when the rape was committed, the prosecutrix was accompanied by two witnesses and they were also tied up by the accused persons. It was, however, highly improbable that such things could have occurred. The prosecutrix unequivocally stated that when she was being raped by one accused, other hold the camel and they exchanged the place. If the claim of the prosecutrix the prosecution witnesses who wanted to rescue the proscutrix were tied up by the accused was correct. It was occurred prior to commission of rape or during the commission of rape by one person. It was also obvious that both the accused persons were involved in tying up the two witnesses in which case there was nothing to prevent the prosecutrix from running away, however, nothing of the kind was done. No reason was given by the prosecutrix or witnesses for not disclosing the incident for three days. The entire narration of facts by the prosecutrix and witnesses was held to have rendered the prosecution story suspicious and fictitious. Dhir Singh v. State of Rajasthan, 2001 Cr LJ 235 (Raj).

The victim aged about 10 or 11 years had gone to play with his niece. The mother had heard an alarm which attracted her to the spot. On arriving at the spot, she had noticed the accused's emergence and thereafter his running away and found her daughter crying with pain. Apart from this, she had also noticed the clothes of her daughter heavily stained with blood. These circumstances, when taken cumulatively into consideration, proved that her daughter was ravished inside the house by the accused. Mere absence of undergarment belonging to victim was not held by the court as sufficient to discard the testimony of the victim and her mother. The court also observed that "it is common knowledge that in the villages clothes used during menstruation by the village ladies are generally being thrown of when it became stained with blood and the animals lottering on the road, including dogs remove them away beyond their recovery. Similarly her undergarments too must have been lost once thrown away. In view of the above conviction of accused was held proper. Babu Yadav v. State of U.P., 2001 Cr LJ 356 (All) : 2001 (1) Femi-Juris CC 54 (All).

In Maheshwar Sahu v. State of Bihar, 2001 Cr LJ 1035 (Pat), it was alleged that the accused entered into the house of the prosecutrix and committed rape on her resulting in pregnancy. It was further alleged that the accused had assured her that he would marry her and due to fear and shame she did not tell about it to any one. According to the prosecutrix the accused on her refusal to get the abortion done, forcibly pushed tablet in her mouth and in the same night she suffered abortion and she told about rape and abortion to her mother. The Court did not believe that the mother of the girl could not know about the pregnancy of 6 to 7 months. She also said that no Dai or Chamain had been called. The court found it strange and improbable that a lady who will suffer abortion of an advanced stage of pregnancy will not be provided any medical help and no Dai or Chamain will be called. Medical evidence did not show signs of recent rape or recent abortion. Further, the parents or sister-in-law of the informant were not examined as a witness. The accused, in view of the above circumstances and facts was held entitled to benefit of doubt.

The accused dragged the prosecutrix to the fields and committed forcible sexual intercourse with her. The prosecutrix stated that she did not know the accused prior to the incident. FIR was lodged after 18 hours of deliberations and name of the accused was mentioned therein. No test identification was held during the course of investigation. The court held that as the prosecutrix did not know the accused before the occurrence, it was not possible for her to have named the accused in the FIR nor was it possible to her to give his address and that the naming of the accused in the FIR was the result of due deliberations. The court further held that the failure to hold test identification parade was fatal to the prosecution and conviction of accused was not proper. Amrit Lal v. State of HP, 2001 Cr LJ 1047 (HP).

The statement of the prosecutrix was bristling with infirmities and improbabilities and had not been corroborated by the only eye-witness to the occurrence as well as from the medical evidence on record. The conduct of the prosecutrix appeared to be doubtful inasmcuch as she did not report the occurrence to her grand-mother immediately after returning to the house or to anybody else during the same day and that she had stated to have washed the wearing pant which was stated to have been stained with blood. Above all the statement of the prosecutrix that the accused committed rape on her by removing her pant upto the knee and without removing her frock, was found to be incredible inasmuch as the accused could not have committed any sexual intercourse with her. When she had put on the pant, by removing the same up to the knee and without completely removing the same. There were no mark of any injury on the private part or body of the victim girl as well as of the accused and then wearing apparels were not stained with semen or blood. Banamali Singh v. State of Orissa. 2001 Cr LJ 1313 (Orissa).

The medical certificate that prosecutrix was accustomed aimed to sexual intercourse, is of no relevance. Arasappa v. State, 1997 Cr LJ 1456 (Kant) : 1997(1) All Cr LR 580 : 1997(1) Cur Cr R 480 : 1997(1) Kant LJ 25.

While trying accused on charge of rape Court must show great sensitivity and should examine broader probabilities and not get swayed by minor contradictions and discrepancies in evidence of witnesses. State of A. P. v. Gangula Satya Murthy, 1997 Cr LJ 774 (SC).

When due to absence of hymen Court forms opinion that victim had sexual intercourse prior to time of present rape, it is no ground for acquitting accused. State of A.P. v. Gangula Satya Murthy, 1997 Cr LJ 774 (SC) : AIR 1997 (SC) 1588 : 1997(1) SCC 272 : 1996(10) JT 550 : 1996(8) Scale 391 : 1996(8) Supreme 328.

Absence of injuries on male organ of accused is not always fatal. It will discredit the evidence of the prosecutrix. Dinesh v. State of Rajasthan, 2005 Cr LJ 1452 (Raj).

12. Burden of proof.—In a case of rape, the onus is always on the prosecution to prove affirmatively each ingredient of the offence it seeks to establish and such onus never shifts. It is no part of the duty of the defence to explain as to how and why in a rape case the victim and her mother have falsely implicated the accused. The evidence of prosecution witnesses cannot be accepted merely because an accused person has not been able to say as to why they have come forward to depose against him. However, great the suspicion against the accused and however, strong the moral belief and conviction of the Judge, unless the offence of the accused is established beyond reasonable doubt or beyond the possibility of reasonable doubt on the basis of legal evidence and material on the record, he cannot be convicted for an offence. There is an initial presumption of innocence of the accused and the prosecution has to bring the offence home to the accused by reliable evidence. The accused is entitled to the benefit of reasonable doubt. Jogidan v. State of Rajasthan, 2004 Cr LJ 1726 (Raj) : 2004 Cri LR (Raj) RAJ 411 : 2004(2) Raj Cri C 780 : 2004(2) Raj LR 635 : 2004(3) WLC 73.

13. Rape and outraging of modesty of woman.—The prosecution has clearly established commission of offence punishable under Secs. 354 and 506 IPC. So far as the offence punishable under Sec. 376 IPC is concerned, the basic ingredients are set out in Sec. 375 IPC. On a reading of the evidence of the prosecutrix, we find that a case of rape has not been established so far as the respondent is concerned.

That being the position, we allow the appeal of the State to the extent that the respondent is convicted for offences punishable under Secs. 354 and 506 IPC. The sentence are two years' and six months' rigorous imprisonment respectively. It is stated that the appellant has suffered more than that period of custody. If that being so, he need not surrender to custody. The appeal is allowed to the aforesaid extent. State of Himachal Pradesh vs. Prem Singh, AIR 2009 SC 1010 : 2009 (1) SCC 420 : 2008 CrLJ 786 : 2008 (15) SCR 1058 : 2009 (15) Scale 132.

14. Amendment in provisions—Object of.—The offence of rape occurs in Chapter XVI of IPC. In that Chapter, there is a separate heading for 'Sexual offence', which encompasses Sections 375, 376, 376-A, 376-B, 376-C, and 376-D. 'Rape' is defined in Section 375. Sections 375 and 376 have been substantially changed by Criminal Law (Amendment) Act, 1983, and several new sections were introduced by the new Act, i.e. 376-A, 376-B, 376-C and 376-D. The fact that sweeping changes were introduced reflects the legislative intent to curb with iron hand, the offence of rape which affects the dignity of a woman. State of Madhya Pradesh vs. Sheikh Shahid, AIR 2009 SC 2951 : 2009 (12) SCC 715 : 2009 (8) JT 277 : 2009 (5) SCR 1038 : 2009 (5) Scale 679 : 2009 (3) SLT 744; See also State of Madhya Pradesh vs. Basodi, AIR 2009 SC 3081 : 2009 CrLJ 4284 : 2009 (2) Crimes 273 (SC) : 2009 (12) SCC 318 : 2009 (6) JT 92 : 2009 (6) SCR 1166 : 2009 (6) Scale 353 : 2009 (3) Supreme 501.

15. Intention to introduce Sexual offences — Scope — Discussed.—The offence of rape occurs in Chapter XVI of IPC. It is an offence affecting the human body. In that Chapter, there is a separate heading for 'Sexual offence', which encompasses Secs. 375, 376, 376-A, 376-B, 376-C and 376-D. 'Rape' is defined in Sec. 375. Secs. 375 and 376 have been substantially changed by Criminal Law (Amendment) Act, 1983, and several new Secs. were introduced by the new Act, i.e. 376-A, 376-B, 376-C and 376-D. The fact that sweeping changes were introduced reflects the legislative intent to curb with iron hand, the offence of rape which affects the dignity of a woman. The offence of rape in its simplest term is 'the ravishment of a woman, without her consent, by force, fear or fraud', or as 'the carnal knowledge of a woman by force against her will'. 'Rape' or 'Raptus' is when a man hath carnal knowledge of a woman by force and against her will (Co. Litt. 123-b); or as expressed more fully,' rape is the carnal knowledge of any woman, above the age of particular years, against her will; or of a woman child, under that age, with or against her will (Hale PC 628). The essential words in an indictment for rape are rapuit and carnaliter cognovit; but carnaliter cognovit, nor any other circumlocution without the word rapuit, are not sufficient in a legal sense to express rape; 1 Hon. 6, 1a, 9 Edw. 4, 26 a (Hale PC 628). In the crime of rape, 'carnal knowledge' means the penetration to the slightest degree of the organ alleged to have been carnally known by the male organ of generation (Stephen's "Criminal Law" 9^{th} Ed. P. 262). In 'Encyclopaedia of Crime and Justice' (Volume 4, page 1356) it is stated ". . . . . . even slight penetration is sufficient and emission is unnecessary". In Halsbury's Statutes of England and Wales (Fourth Edition) Volume 12, it is stated that even the slightest degree of penetration is sufficient to prove sexual intercourse. It is violation with violence of the private person of a woman-an-outrage by all means. By the very nature of the offence it is an obnoxious act of the highest order. Shekara vs. State of Karnataka, 2009 (4) JT 360 : 2009(3) Scale 104 : 2009(1) Crimes 472 SC.

16. Promise of marriage.—Clause Fourthly of Sec. 375 of the Penal Code, applies when a man induces a married woman to have sexual intercourse with him by impersonating her husband. When consent by a woman to a man under misconception of fact that he was her husband, it amounts to rape by a person to whom the woman believes to be her husband. In the present case, prosecutrix and accused were residing in the neighbourhood. Prosecutrix was major and there was consent to the sexual intercourse by her. It is the case of the prosecutrix that she consented to sexual intercourse believing that the accused would marry her. Under such circumstances, the act of first sescual intercourse and repeated sexual intercourse between the two subsequently cannot be said to be illegal. The sexual intercourse which is not illegal would not become illegal by refusal by accused to marry. It would be at the most breach of promise. But the act of sexual intercourse with consent of a major girl cannot be termed as rape as a consequence of breach of promise even if it is assumed that there was breach of promise. Sunil Vishnu Salve and Anr. v. State of Maharashtra, 2006 CriLJ 587 (Bom).

1. Corroboration.—Conviction for the offence of rape on the uncorroborated testimony of the complainant would be most dangerous. AIR 1924 Lah 669 ; 23 Cr LJ 475 ; 1949 NLJ 520 ; AIR 1949 Assam 13 ; 50 Cr LJ 589 ; AIR 1949 Cal 613 ; AIR 1944 Nag 245 ; ILR 1945 Nag 226. In AIR 1950 Lah 151, the Court observed ; "So far as the statements of the ravished woman are concerned they can certainly be used to corroborate her under Section 157 even if they are not admissible under any other provisions of the Evidence Act. But statements admitted under Section 157 are not substantative evidence and cannot be made the basis of a finding as to the existence of the facts mentioned in the statements. They are repetitions of her statement and can be either true or false. The next question is whether it is necessary that the aggrieved witness in a case of rape should be corroborated before a conviction can be based on her evidence. The rule of corroboration is meant to be applied to accomplices and ravished woman is not an accomplice but a victim of the crime, corroboration of the prosecutrix in a case of rape is not always indispensible. The thing to be remembered in such cases is whether it is safe to convict on the solitary statement of the complainant. The depends on the circumstances of each individual case". But what exactly amounts to corroboration of the main evidence of the prosecution in a case of rape, is always a quite fiction. It need not be the direct oral evidence of another person. It may be only independent evidence of such a character that if connects the accused directly or indirectly with the crime that he was said to have committed. A previous statement made by the prosecution and admitted under Section 157 of the Evidence Act cannot possibly be corroboration of the evidence given by her in the case. ILR (1937) 2 Cal 345 ; 41 CWN 641 ; AIR 1937 Cal 321. But this view has been dissented from in a latest Calcutta case reported in AIR 1949 Cal 613, where Das Gupta, J. observed as follows :—

"Mr. Mukherjee's final contention was that the learned Judge, erred in asking the jury to treat the evidence of the girl's mother as to what the girl had stated to her immediately after the occurrence as corroboration of the girl's evidence. For this Mr. Mukherji has relied on three decisions of this Court. They are : (1) a decision of Lord Williams and Cunliff, JJ., in AIR 1936 Cal 18 ; 37 Cr LJ 359 ; (2) decision of Cunliff and Henderson, JJ., in 41 CWN 641 ; AIR 1937 Cal 321 ; 39 Cr LJ 371 ; and (3) a decision of Derbyshire, C.J., and Lord Williams, J., in 44 CWN 835 ; AIR 1940 Cal 391 ; 41 Cr LJ 841. That the evidence of the victim of rape does require corroboration is the rule of prudence which had been followed in these Courts for sometime and the learned Sessions Judge did tell the jury to remember that it is very risky to convict the accused on the uncorroborated evidence of the girl alone. That rule is too well established to be uncorroborated now. The question whether the statement made by the girl shortly after the occurrence has any corroborative value or not depends, however, in my opinion, entirely upon Section 157, Evidence Act, which runs as follows ; In order.......proved. It appears that these provisions of Section 157, Evidence Act was not considered at all either........in AIR 1936 Cal 18 or in AIR 1940 Cal 391 or in AIR 1937 Cal 327. It is true that this Bench is bound by the previous decisions of this Court. But is still more bound by the Statute. Harris C.J., said ; "According to the view of Lord Williams, J., in the cases cited by my learned brother, this could not corroboration. But I do not understand why not ? It certainly is corroboration in India by Section 157, Evidence Act and so long that section remains, it appears to me the cases referred to by my learned brother cannot possibly be good law". See also AIR 1940 Cal 461 ; 44 CWN 830 ; ILR (1940) 2 Cal 180.

Testimony of prosecutrix as to commission of rape on her found to be remaining completey unchallenged. Same need not be corroborated by evidence of village meeting, where, accused allegedly admitted his guilt and decision taken that accused should marry prosecutrix. indar Ali Sheikh vs. State of West Bengal, AIR 2009 SC 1467 : 2009 (3).SCC 761 : 2009 CrLJ 1324 : 2009 (1) Crimes 315 (SC) : 2009 (2) JT 253 : 2009 (1) SCR 968 : 2009 (2) Scale 248 : 2009 (1) Supreme 617 : 2009 (2) JCC 861.

Testimony of prosecutrix as to commission of rape on her found to be remaining completey unchallenged. Look for corroboration — Not necessary except in cases of high imporbability. In the context of Indian Culture, a woman-victim of sexual aggression - would rather suffer silently than to falsely implicate somebody. Any statement of rape is an extremely humiliating experience for a woman and until she is a victim of sex crime, she would not blame anyone but the real culprit. While appreciating the evidence of the prosecutrix, the Courts must always keep in mind that no self-respecting woman would put her honour at stake by falsely alleging commission of rape on her and, therefore, ordinarily a look for corroboration of her testimony is unnecessary and uncalled for. But for high improbability in the prosecution case, the conviction in the case of sex crime may be based on the sole testimony of the prosecutrix. Rajinder @ Raju v. State of H. P., AIR 2009 SC 3022 : 2009 (10) SCR 248 (SC) : 2009 (9) JT 9 (SC) : 2009 (9) Scale 176 (SC) : 2009 (5) Supreme 233 (SC) : 2009 (9) SLT 361 (SC) : 2009 CrLJ 4133 (SC) : 2009 (3) Crimes 222 (SC).

Necessity of corroboration. Ordinarily evidence of a prosecutrix should not be suspect and should be believed, more so as her statement has to be evaluated at par with that of an injured witness and if evidence is reliable, no corroboration is necessary. But, said observation cannot be universally and mechanically applied to facts of every case of sexual assault which comes before Court. Raju vs. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 858 : 2008 (15) SCC 133 : 2008 (12) JT 457 : 2008 (16) SCR 1078 : 2008 (15) Scale 375 : 2009 (2) SLT 41.

Presumption of Correctness and absence of embellishment. Reference has been made in State of Punjab vs. Gurmit Singh and Ors., 1996 (2) SCC 384, case to the amendments in 1983 to Sections 375 and 376 of the Indian Penal Code making the penal provisions relating to rape more stringent, and also to Section 114-A of the Evidence Act with respect to a presumption to be raised with regard to allegations of consensual sex in a case of alleged rape. It is however significant that Sections 113-A and 113-B too were inserted in the Evidence Act by the same amendment by which certain presumptions in cases of abetment of suicide and dowry death have been raised against the accused. These two Sections, thus, raise a clear presumption in favour of the prosecution but no similar presumption with respect to rape is visualized as the presumption under Section 114-A is extremely restricted in its applicability. This clearly shows that in so far as allegations of rape are concerned, the evidence of a prosecutrix must be examined as that of an injured witness whose presence at the spot is probable but it can never be presumed that her statement should, without exception, be taken as the gospel truth. Additionally her statement can, at best, be adjudged on the principle that ordinarily no injured witness would tell a lie or implicate a person falsely. We believe that it is under these principles that this case, and others such as this one, need to be examined. Raju vs. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 858 : 2008 (15) SCC 133 : 2008 (12) JT 457 (SC) : 2008 (16) SCR 1078 : 2008 (15) Scale 375 : 2009 (2) SLT 41 (SC).

In a rape case, the complaint of the prosecutrix is admissible in evidence, not as evidence of the truth of the charge but as corroboration of the credibility of the prosecutrix. AIR 1944 Nag 245 ; 46 Cr LJ 68 ; ILR 1945 Nag 226. The law does not require corroboration in the rape of a child aged 10 years as to the identity of the accused. AIR 1944 Nag 363 ; 44 Cr LJ 371 ; AIR 1939 Rang 128. Where the person raped is a girl of seven years, the Court would not insist on the same amount of corroboration as in the case of an adult woman victim. AIR 1951 Ajmer 60 ; 52 Cr LJ 584. There is no rule of practice that there must be, in every case of rape, corroboration of that evidence of the woman alleged to have been raped, like that of an accomplice before a conviction on its basis can be allowed to stand. See AIR 1952 SC 45 relied on.

The rule which according to cases has hardened into one of law is not that corroboration is essential before there can be conviction but that the necessity of corraboration, as a matter of prudence, except where circumstances make it safe to dispouse with it, must be present in the mind of the Judge and must have been incorporated in the judgment. If the evidence of the prosecutrix does not suffer from the basic infirmity and the probabilities factor does not render it unworthy of credence, as a general rule, corroboration should not be insisted upon. The corroboration of the testimony of the prosecutrix in rape cases is not required as a rule of law. Satpal v. State of Rajasthan 2001 Cr LJ 564 (Raj.) : 2001 Cri R 288 (Raj).

Non-examination of doctor—Not fatal to prosecution case. Even without the examination of doctor, the evidence of prosecutrix stands fully corroborated by the evidence of Sub-Inspector of the Police Station who had virtually caught the appellant red-handed. Thus, even if doctor had not been examined it would not throw or completely discard the prosecution story. The evidence of prosecution witnesses is fully trustworthy and there is no reason to doubt genuineness thereof.

In the present case, there is consistency in the evidence of prosecutrix, which stands corroborated by the evidence of Sub-Inspector. He had no axe to grind against the appellant. In this case, the version of the prosecutrix right from lodging of the FIR, till her examination by the doctor and till she deposed in Court, had been absolutely consistent. Not only this, to corroborate further, the evidence of Sub-Inspector is also on record who had caught the appellant red-handed which fully establishes that it was the appellant who had committed offence of rape.

Thus, looking to the matter from all angles, we are of the opinion that there is no merit or substance in this appeal. The same is accordingly hereby dismissed. Wahid Khan vs. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2010 SC 1 : 2009 (4) Crimes 265 (SC) : 2009 (14) JT 510 : 2009 (15) SCR 1207 : 2009 (14) Scale 220 : 2009 (7) Supreme 584 : 2009 (9) SLT 107.

Ordinarily, corroboration of a woman raped must be looked for but that is not an absolute rule and if he Court is completely satisfied with her evidence it is open to it convict the accused even on her uncorroborated testimony. 1962 Jab LJ 840; 1963 (2) Cr LJ 354 ; 1962 MPLJ (Notes) 330 ; AIR 1962 Cal 641 : 1962 (2) Cr LJ 751; 1963 All Cr R 11.

It is well settled that corroboration is not necessary in a case of sex offence when the victim is very consistent and definite about the occurrence. Conviction can be founded on her testimony alone unless there are compelling reasons seeking corroboration. Corroborating evidence is not essential as she is not an accomplice or in the category of child witness. Imtiaz Ansari v. State of Bihar 2000 Cr LJ 2576 (Pat.) : 2000(1) East Cri C 119 : 2000(2) PLJR 517 : 2000(1) PccR 318.

It is settled law that the victim of sexual assault is not treated as accomplice and as such, her evidence does not require corroboration from any other evidence including the evidence of a doctor. Even if the doctor who examined the victim does not find sign or rape, it is no ground to disbelieve the sole testimony of the prosecutrix. In normal course a victim of sexual assault does not like to disclose such offence been before her family members much less before public or before the police. The Indian women has tendency to conceal such offence because it involves her prestige as well as prestige of her family. Only in few cases, the victim girl or the family members has courage to go before the police station and lodge a case. In the instant case the suggestion given on behalf of the defence that the victim girl had falsely implicated the accused did not appeal to the reasoning. There was no apparent reason for a minor girl to falsely implicate the accused after scating her own prestige and honour. Birendra Sah v. State of Bihar, 2000 Cr LJ 3673 (Pat.) : 2000(1) BLJ 605 (Pat).

The Supreme Court in State of Punjab v. Gurmeet Singh, (1996) 2 SCC 384 : (1996) AIR SCW 998 : AIR 1396 SC 1393; 1996 Cr LJ 1728 took note of the existing rate of Crime against the woman and held (para 20) :—

> "Of late, crime against women in general and rape in particular is on the increase. It is an irony that while we are celebrating woman's rights in all spheres, we show little or no concern for her honour. It is a sad reflection on the attitude of indifference of the society towards the violation of human dignity of the victims of sex crimes. We must remember that a rapist not only violates the victim's privacy and personal integrity, but inevitably causes serious psychological as well as physical harm in the process. Rape is not merely a physical assault. It is often destructive of the whole personality of the victim. A murderer destroys the physical body of his victim, a rapist degrades the very soul of the helpless female. The Courts, therefore, shoulder a great responsibility while trying an accused on charges of rape. They must deal with such cases with utmost sensitivity. The courts should examine the broader probabilities of a case and not get swayed by minor contradictions or insignificant discrepancies in the statement of the prosecutrix, which are not of a fatal nature, to throw out an otherwise reliable prosecution case. If evidence of the prosecutrix inspires confidence, it must be relied upon without seeking corroboration of her statement in material particulars. If for some reason the court finds it difficult to place implicit reliance on her testimony, it may look for evidence which may lend assurance to her testimony, short of corroboration required in the case of an accomplice. The testimony of the prosecutirx must be appreciated in the background of the entire case and the trial court must be alive of its responsibility and be sensitive while dealing with cases involving sexual molestations."

In State of Maharashtra v. Chandraprakash Kewalchand Jain, 1990 (1) SCC 550 : AIR 1990 SC 658 : 1990 Cr LJ 889 Ahmadi J (as the Chief Justice then was) speaking for the bench summarised the position in the following words:—

> "A prosecturix of a sex offence cannot be put on a par with an accomplice. She is in fact a victim of the crime. The Evidence Act nowhere says that her evidence cannot be accepted unless it is corroborated in material particulars. She is undoubtedly a competent witness under section 118 and her evidence must receive the same weight as is attached to an injured in cases of physical violence. The same degree of care and caution must attach in the evaluation of her evidence as in the case of an injured complainant or witness and no more. What is necessary is that the court must be alive to and conscious of the fact that it is dealing with the evidence of a person who is interested in the outcome of the charge levelled by her. If the court keeps this in mind and feels satisfied that it can act on the evidence of the prosecutrix, there is no rule of law or practice incorporated in the Evidence Act, similar to illustration (b) Section 114 which requires it to look for corroboration. If, for some reason, the court is hesitant to place implicit reliance on the testimony of the prosecutrix it may look for evidence which may lend assurance to her testimony short of corroboration required in the case of an accomplice. The nature of evidence required to lend assurance to the testimony of the prosecutrix must necessary depend on the facts and circumstances of each case. But if a prosecutrix is an adult and of full understanding the court is entitled to base of conviction on her evidence unless the same is shown to be infirm and not trustworthy. If the totality of the circumstances appearing on the record of the case discussed that the prosecutrix does not have a strong motive to falsely involve the person charged, the court should ordinarily have no hesitation in accepting her evidence." See also State of H.P. v. Lekhraj 2000 Cr LJ 44 (SC) : AIR 1999 (SC) 3916 : 2000(1) SCC 247 : 1999(9) JT 43 : 1999(7) Scale 86.

In Bharwada Bhoginbhai Hirjibhai v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1983 SC 753: 1983 Cr LJ 1096 the Supreme Court made the following observations.

> "In the Indian setting, refusal to act on the testimony of a victim of sexual assault in the absence of corroboration as a rule, is adding insult to injury. Why should the evidence of the girl or the woman who complains of rape or sexual molestation be viewed with the aid of spectacles fitted with lenses tinged with doubt. Disbelief or suspicion? To do so is to justify the charge of male chauvinism in a male dominated society."

Further:

> "...... Just as witness who has sustained an injury (which is not shown or believed to be self inflicted) is the best witness in the sense that he is least likely to exculpate the real offender, the evidence of a victim or a sex-offence is entitled to great weight absence of corroboration notwithstanding. And while corroboration in the form of eye-witness account of an independent witness may often be forthcoming in physical assault cases, such evidence cannot be expected in sex offences, having regard to the very nature of the offence. It would, therefore be adding insult to injury to insist on corroborating drawing inspiration from the rules devised by the Courts in the western world (obeisance to which has perhaps become a habit presumably on account of the colonial hung-over). We are therefore of the opinion that if the evidence of the victim does not suffer from any basic 'infirmity' and the 'probabilities-factor' does not render it unworthy of credence, as a general rule, there is no reason to insist on corroboration except from the reason the medical evidence, where, having regard to the circumstance of the case, medical evidence can be expected to be forth coming, subject to the following qualifications:

> "Corroboration may be insisted upon when a woman having attained majority is found in a compromising position and there is likelihood of her having levelled such an accusation on account of the instinct of self preservation. Or when the probabilities-factor is found to be out of tune." Chandan Paswan v. State of Bihar, 1999 Cr LJ 371 (Pat.).

To insist on corroboration, except in the rarest of the rare cases is to equate woman who is a victim of the lust of another with an accomplice to a crime and thereby insult womanhood. Courts must also realise that ordinarily a woman, more so a young girl, will not stake her reputation by livelling a false charge concerning her chastity. The Court must not be oblivious of the emotional turmoil and the psychological injury that a prosecutrix suffers on being molested or raped. She suffers a tremendous sense of shame and the fear of being shunned by society and her near relatives including her husband. Manik Debnath v. State of Tripura, 1999 Cr LJ 607 (Gau).

Though ordinarily unless there are compelling reasons necessitating corroboration, testimony of the prosecutrix alone is sufficient to convict the accused where her testimony inspires confidence and is found to be reliable. In the present case it would not be safe to convict the accused solely on the statement of the prosecutrix. Keeping in view the medical evidence which shows that the prosecutrix had been used to sexual intercourse, in order to accept her statement that she was compelled, threatened or otherwise induced for sexual intercourse, some corroboration from same independent source is required in the present case (See Ram Murti v. State of Haryana, 1970 Cr LJ 991. Prem Chand v. State of H.P., 2000 Cr LJ 951 : 2000(2) All Cr LR 363 (HP).

In a case, all the witnesses turned hostile, as there was a compromise outside the court. The mother of prosecutrix surrendered herself to the pressure of the local people. The prosecutrix categorically stated that she was raped by the accused and her statement was fully supported by the medical evidence. The evidence was found reliable and trustworthy. Conviction based or her sole testimony was held proper. Laxman Das v. State of Rajasthan, 2001 Cr LJ 4501 (Raj).

In Jagannath Bania v. State, 2001 Cr LJ 282 (Orissa), the victim girl aged about 14 years was dragged by accused to the place of incident and raped. The accused threatened her at the point of knife and detained her till midnight where after he took her to the village and left her. The victim went to her house and silently slept without disclosing the occurrence to any of her family members. On the following morning she narrated the occurrence to her father. The investigating officer stated that the place of occurrence was at a distance of about two kilometers from the bathing place which was at a distance of 300 yards from the village and that he did not find any mark of violence on the spot. As per the statement of the victim it was raining and the roof of the hut was looking and hence her wearing saree had been stained with mud. But there was no mention in the seizure list lest that the saree was stained with mud. The above circumstances and specially non-disclosure of the occurence to any body in the house during the night by the victim was held to have given rise to grave suspicion as to the veracity of the statement of victim. The court further held that line testimony of the victim woman can be made the sole basis for conviction and corroboration is not necessary in case the same is accepted as true and tree from suspicion. It is not necessary that there should be independent affirmation of every material circumstances in the sense that the independent evidence apart from testimony of the complainant should in itself be sufficient to sustain the conviction. The corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused commited the crime. It is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connection with the crime.

Prosecutrix 16 years of age was enticed away from parents house and was subject to sexual intercourse—Medical evidence providing corroboration to the fact of maintenance of sexual relations, hence offence of rape established. Joaguim Constantinho Carvalho v. State, 1992 Cr LR 215 (Bom).

2. Scope.—The impugned act must possess all elements or the substantive crime except for failure to consulate the act. Gananath Jena v. State of Orissa, (1995) 9 OCR 484 (Ori).

Adverse inference. Withholding of evidence of neighbours, brother and grandmother of prosecutrix. Prosecutrix was an orphan living on platform along with elder brother and grandmother. Evidence of prosecutrix, a minor girl that accused took her inside his house and on point of knife gagged her mouth and raped her. Similarly, the brother of the prosecutrix and her grandmother could not be located by the investigating officer despite search at the Railway Station. No inference, therefore, under Section 114 of the Evidence Act can be drawn against the prosecution for withholding the evidence of neighbours, brother and grandmother as well as the neighbour who probably was narrated the incident by the prosecturix. Arshad vs The State, 2010 Cri LJ 954 (Delhi).

Trial court recorded conviction which was challenged in appeal. As there was one month delay in filing complaint. It was stated that the matter was reported to Police but it did not take action. No effort was made to substantiate this charge. In the background of case the delay fatally affected the prosecution. Hence conviction was not sustainable. Patra Mirgan v. State, (1994) 2 Crimes 613 (Ori).

Accused camel-owner took prosecutrix tourist on ride and at isolated place committed rape on her. Prosecutrix was fear and helplessness position as to be unable to resist or spare herself. She was crying all the way - appellant asked her to sit her on back side to make drive fast and they reached at the starting point where jeep and other fellow tourists, drivers were and she narrated the entire incident. Prosecutrix very instantly and no sooner she reached starting point, where other persons and passengers were, she insinuated accused. *Bhopa S/o Sh. Where offence under Section 376, IPC alleged—Prosecutrix voluntarily went with accused to several places and stayed with him in lodge for about ten day—Her age could not be determined correctly—Evidences showing her age about 16 years, sometimes under 18 years and sometimes below 20 years—Medical evidence showing her age between 18 to 20 years—Thus evidence regarding age doubtful—Medical evidence also revealing that she was used to sexual intercourse—Prosecutrix not clearly stating that she was subjected to sexual intercourse. Hence it was held that prosecution case not fully supported, offence under Section 376 not made out. Taking her away from lawful guardianship also not made out. State of Karnataka v. Sureshbabu Puk Raj Porral, 1994 SCC (Cri) 435 ; 1994 Mad LJ (Cr) 185 ; (1994) 1 SCC 468 (SC).

Conviction can be only under Section 376 (1) or 376 (2) as the case may be and not under Section 376 as such. It was held that after amendment of 1983 it is incumbent that in rape cases charge and conviction, if recorded, should be either under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) and never under Section 376 IPC as such. Betu alias Kamal Khan v. State of Madhya Pradesh, 1994 MP LJ 874.

3. Cases.—The statement of a grandmother as to the child's complaint to her, is entirely insufficient to support a conviction, especially, in the absence of any medical evidence, establishing that the injuries to the child would only have been caused by rape or an attempt to commit the same. In case of rape there can hardly be any eye-witnesses. The statement of prosecutrix supported by medical evidence can form basis of conviction. The sexual intercourse cannot be presumed in absence of medical report. The vaginal smear was also not sent for chemical examination to prove the act. The statement of prosecutrix is also not relied at. Hence acquittal. Rashid v. State of U.P., 1995 (32) ACC 69 (All).

The accused was charged and convicted under Section 376 for the offence of committing rape. The accused committed rape on the prosecutrix when she had gone to jungle for grazing animals with her companions graziers. When her companions graziers went in search of animals which strayed away, she was left alone and accused finding the opportunity raped her. The accused admitted having subjected her to sexual intercourse and said it was with her consent. Held, that burden shifted upon accused to prove that he had sex act with prosecutrix with her voluntary consent which he failed to prove. Appeal failed and judgment of lower court affirmed. 1987 Cr LJ 1379 (HP).

The non-examination of the prosecutrix does not vitiates the trial. If the accused could be held guilty by other evidence. State of Himachal Pradesh v. Madan Mohan, 1995 Cr R 65 (HP).

On failure of Investigating Officer to carry out detailed paternity test for establishing paternity of child to connect accused with it, conviction of accused can not be based on such evidence. Peter Fernandes v. State, 1997 Cr LJ 954. (Bom).

The charge under section 376, IPC was mainly fastened upon the appellant on the last seen together theory. The factum of rape of the deceased is sought to be proved from a report on examination of vaginal smear collected and said to confirm the presence of semen and spermatozoa indicating that she should have had sexual intercourse before her death. The chemical report also showed that semen was detected in one of the under skirts found on the body of the deceased. The doctor also showed that the accused was potent. But in the chemical report, it was specifically stated that the dhoti of the accused subjected to chemical examination contained no stains of blood or semen. If there had been any forcible sexual intercourse the victim must have made some strong resistance being a grown up lady and in the process, some injuries would have been found on the vagina/private parts of the body or some other parts indicative of any such use of force and it would be too much to assume that there would have been no injuries whatsoever on the body, on this account. Though injuries on the body is not always a must or sine qua non to prove a charge of rape, having regard to the case of the prosecution that the victim had been subjected to brutal rape and forced sexual intercourse, this aspect of the matter cannot be completely lost sight of. The deceased was stated to be of about 26 years age, when she died and she was the sister of the wife of the accused. It was not as though they were shown earlier to be on inimical terms. Anything possible might have happened and the facts found proved did not irresistibly lead to the only conclusion of the guilt of the appellant in respect of an offence under section 376, IPC. Consequently the benefit of doubt was given to the appellant he was acquitted of the offence under Section 376, IPC. Joseph v. State of Kerala, 2000 Cr LJ 2467 (SC) : AIR 2000 (SC) 1608 : 2000(6) JT 195 : 2000(4) Scale 92 : 2000(3) Supreme 588.

There were no injuries externally, nor was there blood stain on her person. There was no mark of injury on her breasts or labia majora and labia minora, pubic hair not matted, a few hymenal tags found present without bleeding and no spermatozoa was found on vaginal fluid during microscopical examination. According to her there was no sign of rape. The appellant was aged about 23/24 years. Had the appellant forcibly committed rape on the victim against her will, she being a tribal lady, would have very well resisted him and escaped from his clutches. In other words, if at all it was believed for the sake of argument that the appellant had sexual intercourse, the same would have been with consent of victim which could be fortified from the finding of the medical officer that there was no injury on the person of the victim, the wearing saree having contained no mark of blood or semen, non-production of the torn blouse for seizure, absence of any mark of violence on the spot and absence of seizure of broken bangles from the spot which was a usual feature in a case of forcible rape. Rabindra nath Ballirsingh v. State, 2000 Cr LJ 2535 (Orissa) : 2000(1) Crimes 168 : 2000(1) Ori LR 612 : 2000(19) OCR 32 (Ori).

In such case it is not always necessary for hymen to be torn and hence injuries were trivial. State of Maharashtra v. Savala Sagu Kokara, 1997 Cr LJ 786 (Bom).

4. Rape on girl of loose morale and easy virtuess. State of UP v. Pappu, 2005 Cr LJ 331 (SC) : AIR 2005 (SC) 1248 : 2005(1) Crimes 37 : 2005(1) JT 153 : 2005(3) SCC 594 : 2005(8) Supreme 656.

5. Absence of injuries on back or other part of body of prosecutrix.—In th instant case the prosecutrix was a young girl of tender age, therefore she could n resist the sexual assault. When at the time of sexual act the prosecutrix was wearin clothes, it is not necessary that there should be some injuries on her back or other par of the body. Premlal v. State of MP, 2005 Cr LJ 1145 (MP).

Absence of injuries on her private parts—Effect.—Victim is married, grown up lad blessed with two children. One more aspect that requires our consideration is as t whether the medical evidence does not support the prosecution's case? The High Cour rightly expressed its indignation as to the manner in which the trial Court completel misread the vital medical evidence. Dr. A. Chakraborty, (PW-8) examined the victim o 29.04.1984. On examination he opined that the victim is habituated to sexua intercourse and, therefore, could not express his firm opinion in his report about th commission of rape at the time of medical examination. But in the evidence he clearl stated after considering the report of FSL regarding stains on victim's clothing, tha there is sufficient proof of recent sexual intercourse. The vaginal swab and smear wer sent to Chemical Examiner. Based on the FSL report and the report of Serologis (Exhibit 7) he found that the semen was present in the vaginal swab of the victim. Cour fail to appreciate as to how and in what manner the medical evidence supports the cas of the defence.

The Counsel for the appellants however, submitted that the medical examinatio report of the victim shows that no injuries were found on her private parts or on an part of her body. Court is required to note that victim Sita Rani Jha is a married grow up lady and blessed with two children and in such circumstances the absence o injuries on her private parts is not of much significance. The mere fact that no injurie were found on private parts of her body cannot be the ground to hold that she was no subjected to any sexual assault. The entire prosecution story cannot be disbelieve based on that singular assertion of the Counsel. In this regard another submission was made by the Counsel for the appellants that the sexual intercourse, if any, was with the consent of the victim. According to him it was consensual sexual intercourse. This proposition canvassed for the first time across the bar is absolutely untenable and unsustainable. There is not even a suggestion made to the victim that she has consented to sexual intercourse. The sequence of events clearly apparent from the evidenced of witnesses, leading to the sexual assault completely rules out the possibility of consensual sex. Court has no hesitation to reject the submission. Utpal Das and Anr. vs. State of West Bengal, 2010 (3) CrLJ 2867 (SC).

Even assuming that the victim was previously accustomed sexual intercourse, that is not a determinative question. On the contrary, the question which was required to be adjudicated was did the accused commit rape on the victim on the occasion complained of. Even if it is hypothetically accepted that the victim had lost her virginity earlier, it did not and cannot in law give licence to any person to rape her. It is the accused who was on trial and not the victim. Even if the victim in a given case has been promiscuous in her sexual behaviour earlier, she has a right to refuse to submit herself to sexual intercourse to anyone and everyone because she is not a vulnerable object or prey for being sexually assaulted by anyone and everyone. The finding that the victim was a girl of loose morale and easy virtues or is of bad character is no ground for acquittal of accused. State of UP v. Pappu, 2005 Cr LJ 331 (SC) : AIR 2005 (SC) 1248 : 2005(1) Crimes 37 : 2005(1) JT 153 : 2005(3) SCC 594 : 2004(8) Supreme 656.

6. Girl's age, proof of.—The only conclusive price of evidence of the girl's age may be birth certificate, but unfortunately, in this country such a document is not ordinarily available. The court or the jury has to base its conclusion upon all the facts and circumstances disclosed on examining all the physical features of the person whose age is in question, in conjunction with such oral testimony as may be available. AIR 1958 SC 143 ; 1958 SCJ 349 ; 1958 SCA 147 ; 1958 SCR 749 ; 1958 Cr LJ 273. The burden of proving the age of the girl lay heavily on the prosecution in view of the fact that the girl was already used to sexual intercourse. 1958 Raj LW 60 ; ILR (1957) 7 Raj 440.

In actual life it often happens that persons give false age of the boy at the time of his admission to a school so that in later life he would have an advantage when seeking public service for which a minimum age for eligibility is often prescribed. The court of the fact cannot ignore this fact while assessing the value of the entry and it would be improper for the court to base any conclusion on the basis of the entry, when it is alleged that the entry was made upon false information supplied with the above motive. Brij Mohan Singh v. Priya Brat Narain Singh, AIR 1965 SC 285.

Failure to examine any of her family members on point of age—Adverse inference. Doctor who had examined her. opined that she was 18 years of age. According to prosecutrix, she was only 13 years of age at the time of incident. Her parents or either of them or any other family member who could be most reliable and natural witness on point of her age, not examined.

It is the duty of the party to lead the best evidence in its possession which could throw light on the issue in controversy and in case such a material evidence is withheld, the Court may draw adverse inference under Section 114 illustration (g) of the Evidence Act notwithstanding that the onus of proof did not lie on such party and it was not called upon to produce the said evidence. Musauddin Ahmed vs. State of Assam, 2009 (3) Crimes 238 (SC) : 2009 (9) JT 65 : 2009 (9) Scale 155 : 2009 (9) SCR 1135 : 2009 (5) Supreme 277 : 2009 (5) SLT 700 : 2009 (3) JCC 2002.

Prosecutrix in love with accused and consenting party. Clinical examination showing that prosecutrix had well developed secondary sex characters. The short question in the facts and circumstances of this case remains to be determined is whether the prosecutrix was a minor? Doctor, PW1 who examined the prosecutrix referred her for verification to the Dental Surgeon and the Radiologist. The failure of getting the prosecutrix examined from the Dental Surgeon or the Radiologist despite the fact that she was referred to them by Doctor, PW1 is a serious flaw in the prosecution version. We are not laying down as a rule that all these tests must be performed in all cases, but in the instant case, in absence of primary evidence, reports of the Dental Surgeon and the Radiologist would have helped us in arriving at the conclusion regarding the age of the prosecutrix.

The prosecution also failed to produce any Admission Form of the school which would have been primary evidence regarding the age of the prosecutrix. The School Leaving Certificate produced by the prosecution was also procured six days after the incident and three days after the arrest of the appellant. As per that certificate also, she joined the school in the middle of the session and left the school in the middle of the session. The attendance in the school of 100 days is also not reliable.

The prosecutrix was admitted in the school by her brother and he was not examined. The alleged School Leaving Certificate on the basis of which the age was entered in the school was not produced. The father of the prosecutrix has also not been able to give correct date of birth of the prosecutrix. In his statement he clearly stated that he is giving an approximate date without any basis or record. In a criminal case, the conviction of the appellant cannot be based on an approximate date which is not supported by any record. It would be quite unsafe to base conviction on an approximate date. Sunil vs State of Haryana, 2009 AIR SCW 7656 : 2010 CrLJ 839 (SC)

The evidence as to the date of birth based on school records cannot be implicity believed unless it is corroborated by other evidence on record for ascertaining the age for the purpose of fastening criminal liability for the offence of rape, as defined under Section 373 of IPC. It is the school admission register which can be considered as a public document and it is the authenticated true extracts of such a register which is really admissible in evidence. A mere certificate from the Head Master as to the age of a student purporting to be based on the 'school records' does not satisfy the requirement of Section 35 of the Evidence Act. The age of the prosecutrix on the basis of the dental and ossification tests has to be determined where school certificate cannot be accepted and there is no oral evidence as to the age. In such a case, the opinion of radiologist by allowing certain margins can be accepted. Such a view has been taken by the Delhi High Court in the case of Kanchan Dass v. State, 1999 Cr LJ 2036.

When the prosecution witness stated that the age of prosecutrix was between 15 to 17 years. At the lowest it could be 15 years and at the highest it could be 17 years. As held in Kanchan Dass v. State of Delhi, 1991 Cr LJ 2036 (Delhi) the benefit of outer margin must be given to the accused the prosecution must prove by clinching evidence that the first sexual intercourse by the accused took place when she was below 16 Years. Kondapallai Laxman Rao v. State of A.P. 1999 Cr LJ 1928 (AP).

Birth entry must prevail as that is the conclusive evidence— Mohandas Suryavanshi v. State of M.P., 1999 Cr LJ 3451 (M.P.)

In State v. Kamruddin AIR 1956 Nagpur 74 : 1956 Cr LJ 263 it has been held that the mere entry in the Register of Birth and deaths to the effect that a child was born to a person, without any statement as to the identity of the child is not sufficient to prove the birth of a particular person. The identity of that person has to be fully established by other evidence.

It is true that the entries in the Birth Register has to be preferred to the entries in the admission register maintained in the school. But in the absence of evidence about the identity of the child mentioned in the Birth Register could be relied upon to prove the age. Suresh Babu v. State of Kerala 2001 Cr LJ 1483 : 2001(1) CCR 233 (236) : 2001(2) Crimes 313 : 2001(1) Femi-Juris CC 302 (Ker).

In a rape case, no ossification test conducted neither age challenged nor doctor or mother of prosecution cross-examined in this respect, it was held that absence of test is of no consequence. 1987 Cr LR 797 (Raj).

When the medical evidence was based on Radiological examination that the prosecutrix was 12 years old, there could be a difference of one or two years on either side of approximate age as determined on radiological examination. It was held that the case would not fall under Section 376 (2)(f). Shyam Lal v. State of Uttranachal, 2005 Cr LJ (NOC) 201 (Uttra) : 2005(2) Cur Cri R 316 : 2005(1) UC 483.

In the instant case the father and mother categorically stated that the prosecutrix was below 16 years of age which was supported by the unimpeachable documents in all material particulars. These are the statements of facts. If the statements of facts are pitted against the so-called expert opinion of the doctor with regard to the determination of age based on ossification test scientifically conducted, the evidence of facts of the former will prevail over the expert opinion based on the basis of ossification test. Even as per the doctor's opinion in the ossification test for determination of age, the age varies. In the present case, therefore, the ossification test cannot form the basis for determination of the age of the prosecutrix on the face of witness of facts tendered by father and mother supported by unimpeachable statement. Vishnu v. State of Maharashtra, 2006 Cr LJ 303 (SC).

On proof as to age of victim school record is to be preferred against other documents. Syed Amjad Ahmad v. State of A.P., 1993 Cr LJ 1920 (AP).

In the case of rape principle question cropped up was whether on the material date the prosecutrix was below 16 years of age. Birth certificate and school record showed her age below 16 years. According to medical opinion age was estimated to be between 16 to 18 years with a margin of 3 years on either side. Held, that medical evidence did not militate against other consistent evidence regarding age. Trial court's conclusion that prosecutrix was under sixteen years was upheld. 1987 Cr LJ 212 (MP).

The prosecutrix was above 16 years of age at the time of incident. Her consent can well be presumed even for sexual acts prior to marriage. Hence acquitted calls for no interference. State of A.P. v. P. Narasimha, (1994) 2 Crimes 263 (SC) : (1994) 4 SCC 453.

Appeal was held against conviction—Determination of age and Doctor opined 17 years—Elbow joint fused—Auxiliary and pubic hair not developed— The age was held to be 18 years. Conviction was set aside. Anil Kumar v. State of U.P., 1994 JIC 243 (All).

7. Procedure.—If the sexual intercourse was by a man on his own wife—Not cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not Compoundable—Triable by a Court of Session, in any othercase—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

8. Triable by Magistrate with Section 30, Cr PC—Powers.— Cases of rape and unnatural vice should, as far as possible, be tried by Magistrate with Section 30 Cr. Pro. Code powers so that if circumstances call for a heavy sentence then the same may be given, up to the outside limits of seven years. 161 Ind Cas 591 ; 37 Cr LJ 474 ; 38 PLR 437 ; 1936 Cr C 205 ; AIR 1939 Lah 256.

9. Sentence.—In some States in the USA, emphasis was laid on psychotherapic treatment of the offender while he was under detention. For that purpose , Psychopath Sexual Offenders Laws have been enacted in certain jurisdiction in USA. These laws treat the sex offenders as neurotic persons and psychotherapic treatment is given to them during the period of their detention which may, in some cases, be an indefinite period, in the sense that they would not be released till they are cured. But the provision for indefinite detention even beyond the maximum period of imprisonment for that offence was seriously objected to by a group of lawyers and, therefore, in many of the States, this provision was dropped from the Statute. Here, statutory provision for psychotherapic treatment during the period of incarceration in the jail is not available in India but reformist activities are systematically held at many places with the intention of treating the offenders psychologically so that he may not repeat the offence in future and may feel repentant of having committed a distardly crime. T.K. Gopal v. State of Karnataka, 2000 Cr LJ 2286 (SC) : AIR 2000 (SC) 1669 : 2000(6) JT 177 : 2000(4) Scale 373 : 2000(3) Supreme 706 : 2000(2) Crimes 245 (SC).

(a) Sex with a third person.—There is some participative act committed by Sunita. It is not a case where the appellant forced herself on prosecutrix. There is no evidence that the appellant compelled prosecutrix to have sex with the other person. We note that the prosecutrix has only written that the appellant was compelling her to have sex with a third person. She has not written that she was actually made to have sex with a third person. Ashok Rai vs State, 2010 Cri LJ 1105 (Delhi).

The question of sentence in rape cases was considered by Krishna Iyer. J, in Phul Singh v. State of Haryana. (1979) 4 SCC 413 : 1980 SC 249 : 1980 Cr LJ 81, in which he observed that sentencing efficacy in cases of lust-loaded criminality cannot be simplistically assumed by award of long incarceration, for often that remedy aggravates the malady. He further observed that a hyper-sexed homosapien cannot be rehabilitated by humiliating or harsh treatment. In that case it was found that the appellant was a young man of 22 years with no criminal antecedents save the offence of rape committed by him. The Hon'ble Judge thought that given correctional courses through meditational therapy and other measures, his erotic aberrations may wither away, particularly as the appellant had reasonable prospect of shaping into a balanced person. But this theory was not followed in later decisions as it was found that in spite of devices having been employed and adopted within the jail premises as to reform the offenders, there was negligible improvement in the commission of crime. The crime instead of declining, had increased and today it has assumed dangerous proportions. While one person is reformed and moves out of jail another offender is born. Consequently in two recent decisions relating to the offence of rape, one rendered by the present Chief Justice of India and the other by Mr. Justice Lahoti the sentence was enhanced in State of Karnataka v. Krishnappa, 2000 (3) JT (SC) 516 : 2000 AIR SCW 1040 while in the other case, namely State of Rajasthan v. Noore Khan, 2000 (3) JT (SC) 643, the order of acquittal passed by the High Court was set aside and substituted by an order of conviction.

In T.K. Gopal v. State of Karnataka, 2000 Cr LJ 2286 (SC) : AIR 2000 (SC) 1669 : 2000(6) JT 177 : 2000(4) Scale 373 : 2000(3) Supreme 706 : 2000(2) Crimes 245 (SC) the deceased had omitted rape on a one and a half year's girl. The incident was 9 years old. The accused was only bread earner for family. He had also shown signs of reformation. The accused's two daughters had come of age and were to be married. Having regard to the said extenuating circumstances the court held that the period of incarceration of the accused in jail was enough.

Sexual violence apart from being a dehumanising act is an unlawful instrusion of the right to privacy and sanctity of a female. It is a serious blow to her supreme honour and offends herself-esteem and dignity, it degrades and humilitates the victim and where the victim is a helpless innocent child, it leaves behind a traumatic experience. The courts are, therefore, expected to deal with cases of sexual crime against women with utmost sensitivity. Such cases need to be dealt with sternly and severely. A socially sensitized judge is a better statutory armour in cases of crime against women than long clauses of penal provisions, containing complex exceptions and provisos. State of

(b) Minor mentally retarded girl.—Prosecutrix a minor mentally retarded girl was raped in running local train. Only because prosecutrix was mentally retarded cannot be a reason to award sentence of imprisonment for 10 years. Sentence of ten years R.I. modified to seven years R.I. Salim Alim Shamsher Shaikh vs State of Maharashtra, 2010 (4) CriLJ 4064 (Bom).

(c) Gang rape—Woman cannot be prosecuted for alleged commission of offence of gang rape. In the present case, complaint was lodged by the prosecutrix alleging that she was returning by Utkal Express after attending a sports meet. When she reached her destination at Sagar, accused-husband of appellant-accused met her at the railway station and told her that her father has asked him to pick her up from the railway station. Since the prosecutrix was suffering from fever, she accompanied accused to his house. He committed rape on her. When commission of rape was going on, appellant-accused his wife, reached there. The prosecutrix requested the appellant to save her. Instead of saving her, the appellant slapped her, closed the door of the house and left place of incident. On the basis of the complaint lodged, investigation was undertaken and charge-sheet was filed. While accused was charged for offences punishable under Ss. 323 and 376, I.P.C. the appellant was charged for commission of offences punishable under Ss. 323 and 376(2)(g), I.P.C. The High Court was of the view that though a woman cannot commit rape, but if a woman facilitates the act of rape, Expln. I to Sec. 376(2) comes into operation and she can be prosecuted for 'gang rape.' Held, the language of sub-section (2)(g) of Sec. 376 provides that whoever commits 'gang rape' shall be punished etc. The Explanation only clarifies that when a woman is raped by one or more in a group of persons acting in furtherance of their common intention each such person shall be deemed to have committed gang rape within this sub-section (2). That cannot make a woman guilty of committing rape. This is conceptually inconceivable. The Explanation only indicates that when one or more persons act in furtherance of their common intention to rape a woman, each person of the group shall be deemed to have committed gang rape. By operation of the deeming provision, a person who has not actually committed rape is deemed to have committed rape even if only one of the group in furtherance of the common intention has committed rape. The sine quo non for bringing in application of Sec. 34, I.P.C. that the act must be done in furtherance of the common intention to do a criminal act. The expression 'in furtherance of their common intention' as appearing in the Explanation to Sec. 376(2) relates to intention to commit rape. A woman cannot be said to have an intention to commit rape and, therefore, appellant-accused cannot be prosecuted for alleged commission of the offence punishable under Sec. 376(2)(g). Priya Patel v. State of M.P. and Anr., 2006 CriLJ 3627 (SC).

(d) Reduction in sentence—Factors to be considered. The punishment prescribed for the offence punishable under Section 376 (1) of the Indian Penal Code is a four tier proviso. The statute says that the period of sentence should be minimum of 7 years, if the offence is proved. The second tier is of 10 years which means that the Court if decides to impose punishment for more than 7 years and to the extent of 10 years, then normally it should assign good and convincing reasons as to how the case falls in the category where punishment of more than minimum prescribed period needs to be imposed. The third tier is imposition of punishment for life. In a rape case, when the Court decides to impose life imprisonment then detailed reasonings are required to be given by the learned trial Judge as to how and why the case falls in the category where life imprisonment is required to be imposed. Fourth and last tier is for imposing less period of punishment than minimum prescribed. For this Court is supposed to give adequate and special reasons.

As per the settled legal position, the slightest penetration is a rape and in the present case, it was found that the minor girl has sustained a tear and, therefore, some surgical treatments were also given to the victim. In this situation, looking to the conduct of the appellant, it is not possible for the Court to infer the appellant committed crime till last or probably the prosecution has not satisfactorily proved that the appellant committed the crime till last. This conduct of the appellant of leaving the place immediately on realization that the minor girl had sustained serious injuries, tilts the balance in favour of the appellant when it comes to determination of quantum of punishment. Therefore considering the totality of facts and circumstances of the case and socio-economic background of the parties and circumstances in which the offence has been committed by the appellant, it was possible for the trial Judge to impose punishment minimum prescribed for the offence punishable under Section 376 of the Indian Penal Code. The substantive sentence imposed by the learned trial Judge needs to be reduced to 7 years instead of 10 years, in facts and circumstances of the present case. Shanabhai Chandubhai Vasava v. State of Gujarat, 2006 CriLJ 3252 (Guj).

Punishment with adequate sentence. The offence of rape is a very serious offence and also inhuman on the part of any person committing such a sexual assault on innocent victim girls. It is needless to state that rape is not only a crime against the person or a woman but it is the crime against the entire society. Such serious and grave offender should be dealt with all seriousness and if the offence is proved, they should be punished with adequate sentence and at the same time, the Court should also guard against false and frivolous cases. Mirthagai Ali v. State, 2007 CriLJ 1247 (Mad).

Rape by father is an unpardonable act. It is not only a loathsome sin but also abhorrent. In this case, the accused's lustful acts have indelible scar not only physically but also emotionally on the victim. No sympathy or leniency is called for. Siriya alias Shri Lal v. State of M. P., AIR 2008 SC 2314 : 2008 (8) SCR 422 (SC) : 2008 (8) SCC 72 : 2008 (7) Scale 712 (SC) : 2008 (4) Supreme 287 (SC) : 2008 (4) SLT 662 (SC) : 2008 (3) SCC (Cr) 422 : 2008 (7) Crimes 376 (SC) : 2008 (3) JCC 1617 (SC) : 2008 (3) RecentCR 144 (SC).

The legislative mandate is to impose a sentence, for the offence of rape on a girl under 12 years of age, for a term which shall not be less than 10 years, but, it may extend to life and also to fine. The proviso to Section 376(2), IPC, of course, lays down that the court may for adequate and special reasons to be mentioned in the judgement impose sentence of imprisonment of either description for a term of less than 10 years. Thus, the normal sentence in a case where rape is committed on a child below 12 years of age is not less than 10 years R.I. though in exceptional cases for special and adequate reasons sentence of less than 10 years R.I. can also be awarded. It is a fundamental rule of construction that a proviso must be considered with relation to the principal matter to which it stands as a proviso particularly in such like penal provisions. The courts are obliged to respect the legislative mandate in the matter of awarding of sentence in all such cases. Recourse to the proviso can be had only for special and adequate reasons and not in a casual manner. Whether there exist any special and adequate reasons would depend upon a variety of factors and the peculiar facts and circumstances of each case. No hard and fast rule can be laid down in that behalf of universal application. State of Karnataka v. Krishnappa 2000 Cr LJ 1793 : AIR 2000 (SC) 1470 : 2000(4) SCC 75 : 2000(3) JT 516 : 2000(2) Scale 610 : 2000(2) Supreme 611.

In State of A.P. v. Bodem Sundara Rao. (1995) 6 SCC 230: 1995 AIR SCW 4435 : AIR 1996 SC 530, while dealing with a case of reduction of sentence from 10 years R.I. to 4 years R.I. by the High Court in the case of rape of a girl aged between 13 and 14 years, it was observed :

> "In recent year we have noticed that crime against women are on the rise. These crimes are an affront to the human dignity of the society. Imposition of grossly inadequate sentence and particularly against the mandate of the legislature not only is an injuries to the victim of the crime in particular and the society as a whole in general but also at times encourages a criminal. The courts have an obligation while awarding punishment to impose appropriate punishment so as to respond to the society's cry for justice against such criminals. Public abhorrence of the crime needs a reflection through the court's verdict in the measure of punishment. The courts must not only keep in view the rights of the criminal but also the rights of the victim of crime and the society at large while considering imposition of the appropriate punishment. The heinous crime of committing rape on a helpless 13/14 years old girl shakes our judicial conscience. The offence was inhumane."

Dealing with the offence of rape and its traumatic effect on a rape victim the court in State of Punjab v. Gurmit Singh, (1996) 2 SCC 384: (1996 AIR SCW 998; AIR 1996 SC 1393; 1996 Cr LJ 1728) observed (Para 20 of AIR).

> "Of late, crime against women in general and rape in particular is on the increase, it is an irony that while we are celebrating woman's rights in all spheres, we show little or no concern for her honour. It is a sacreflection on the attitude of indifference of the society towards the violation of human dignity of the victims of sex crimes. We must remember that a rapist not only violates that victim's privacy and personal intergrity but inevitably causes serious psychological as well as physical harm in the process. Rape is not merely a physical assault. It is often destructive of the whole personality of the victim. A murderer destroys the physical body of his victim, a rapist degrades the very soul of the helpless female. The courts, therefore, shoulder a greater responsibility while trying an accused on charges of rape. They must deal with such cases with utmost sensitivity."

In State of A.P. v. Dolamala Raju. 2000 Cr LJ 4014 (SC) : AIR 2000 (SC) 2854 : 2000(7) SCC 75 : 2000(9) JT 104 : 2000(5) Scale 588 : 2000(5) Supreme 558 the Apex Court again dealt with the subject of imposition of sentence lower than statutory minimum and observed as under :

> "Normal sentence u/s. 376 (2), IPC in a case where rape is committed on a child below 12 years of age, is not less than 10 yeas R.I.' an expression which is pre-emptory in nature. The Courts are obliged to respect this legislative mandate > when the case falls under the proviso. The proviso to S. 376 (2), IPC, however lays down that in exceptional cases, "for special and adequate reasons", sentence of less than 10 years' R.I. may also be awarded in a given case. The proviso, in our opinion, would come into play only when there are 'adequate and special reasons" available in a case. Those reasons need to be disclosed in the order/judgment itself so that the appellate forum is in a position to know as to what weighed with the Court in awarding a sentence less than the minimum prescribe under the Act. We are of the considered opinion that it is an obligation of the sentencing Court to consider all relevant facts and circumstances bearing on the question of sentence and impose a sentence commensurate with the gravity of the offence. The sentencing Court must hear the loud cry for justice by the society and more particularly in cases of heinous crime of rape of innocent helpless children, as in this case, of the victim of crime and respond by imposing a proper sentence."

In case of rape of a girl of 10 years by her teacher of 39 years, 4 years RI was considered to be a lenient one. The offence was committed on 25-9-1991 and the accused was convicted and sentenced on 17-5-1999. However, the delay caused in the disposal of the case was entirely attributable to the accused who had absconded with a view to evade the trial and the punishment immediately after the commission of the offence and was apprehended after about 7 1/2 years, therefore, the delay in the disposal of the case could not be treated as a mitigating circumstance in the case. The age of the accused at the time of commission of the offence though alleged to be about 18 years but there was nothing authentic on the record which may show that he in fact was about 18 years of age at the time of commission of the offence. He allured a girl of tender age to accompany him on the pretext to get some help from her and took advantage of her good gesture in accompanying the accused to help him. The punishment awarded to the accused did not call for any interference. Nandlal v. State of H.P., 2000 Cr LJ 3106 (HP).

Though the conviction of accused by trial Court for having committed rape on 19 years old girl was well founded but awarding of sentence less than minimum sentence prescribed under law was held not permissible. State of Mizoram v. Lalrinkhuma, 2005 (2) Crimes 601 (Gau) : 2005 Cr LJ 3414.

Where accused aged 27 years had committed rape on innocent minor girl of 4 years therefore sentence of 10 years RI and fine of Rs. 1000/- imposed on him warranted no interference. Amar Nath v. State of UP, 2005 Cr LJ 1379 (All) : 2005 All LJ 405 : 2005(51) All Cri C 65 : 2005(1) All Cri R 608.

The leniency was sought, in another case, on the ground that accused was only 19 years of age and did not have bad antecedents. However evidence showed that accused had caused injuries on victim's body and blood was found on place of occurrence. No leniency was shown in regard to punishment. Kuldip Singh v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 2931 (P&H) : 2003 ILR(2) P&H 73.

Where the prosecution case was fully corroborated by medical evidence, yet since the accused person aged below 22 years had remained in custody for about six years, his sentence was reduced to six years. Gutlthir Soren v. State of Bihar, 2005 (3) East Cr C 184 (Jhar).

The High Court awarded a sentence which was not only grossly inadequate but was also contrary to express provision of law. The High Court had not assigned any satisfactory reason much less adequate and special reasons for reducing the sentence to a term which was far below the prescribed minimum. The sentence awarded by the High Court was held illegal. Staet of MP v. Rakesh, 2005 Cr LJ 4527 (SC) : AIR 2005 (SC) 4319 : 2005(8) SCC 13 (4) : 2005(12) JT 422 : 2005 SCC (Cr) 1959(3) : 2005(3) JCC 1732.

Having found that the accused had committed rape of a minor, to reduce the sentence to less than 7 years on the ground that the accused was either 17 years or 19 years of age or that the accused was an illiterate villager was neither adequate nor special reason contemplated under Section 376, IPC. The sentence of 10 months imprisonment was ridiculously low. State of MP v. Balu, 2005 Cr LJ 335 : AIR 2005 (SC) 222 : 2005(1) Crimes 99 : 2004(10) JT 461 : 2005(1) SCC 108 : 2004(8) Supreme 909 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 270 ; See also State of M.P. v. Bala, 2005 Cr LJ 4371 (SC) : AIR 2005 (SC) 3567 : 2005(4) Crimes 114 : 2005(8) SCC 1 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1947 : 2005(6) Supreme 646 ; State of MP v. Makhmal Khan, 2005 Cr LJ 4363 (SC) : AIR 2005 (SC) 3667 : 2006(1) East Cri C 24 : 2005(8) SCC 8 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1954 : 2005(7) Supreme 1 ; State of Mizoram v. Lalrinkhuma, 2005 Cr LJ 3414 : 2005(2) Crimes 601 ; State of MP v. Munna Chaube, 2005 Cr LJ 913 (SC) : AIR 2005 (SC) 682 : 2005(1) Crimes 254 : 2005(2) JT 122 : 2005(2) SCC 710 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 559 : 2005(1) Supreme 559.

In a case of rape on a girl below 12 years of age, law requires that the punishment should not be awarded less than 10 years of RI. It is expected that the sentencing process has to be stern what it should be. The object of the Court should be to protect the society and to deter criminal by imposing appropriate sentence. Premial v. State of MP, 2005 Cr LJ 1145; See also Rajeshbhai Gamajbhai Idayat v. State of Gujarat, 2005 Cr LJ 1156 (Guj) : 2005(33) All ind Cus 910 : 2005 Cr. In the instant case at the time of commission of offence the convict was a minor but subsequently he became adult. Held, no purpose would be served in sending the convict back to any safety home for detention for further trial. The convict was already in custody for more than five years and it would not be proper to send him back to any home for resumption of a fresh trial. In view of the above the conviction was liable to be sustained but the sentence imposed against him was liable to be quashed. Golan Mustafa Laskar v. State of W.B., 2005 Cr. When the perpetrator of the grave crime is the father of the victim girl, the offence is more grave and the rarest of rare, which warrants a strong deterrent judicial hand. In view of the fact that the case was instituted about ten years back and the accused person's have been under shadow of the case for a long time and in view of the facts and circumstances of the case, a sentence of 5 years, R. When delay in filing complaint satisfactorily explained and prosecution evidence fully corroborated by medical evidence, S.I. for one month and R.I. for 7 years for offences under Sections 341 and 376 respe-ctively, not excessive. Kattaiyan Rajangam v. State, l997 Cr LJ 382 (Mad).

In Ramesh v. State of Maharashtra, 2001 Cr LJ 1579 (Bom.) the accused who was aged about 26 years at the time of the incident cheated the confidence of victim's mother by telling her that he was taking the victim for a pepsi drink. His act, thereafter of raping the victim, a girl of 2 ½ yeas of age was both despicable and reprehensible. It reflected a perverted mind and persons like the accused deserved no sympathy and, therefore, the accused was held not entitled to the benefit of imposition of sentence below, the minimum sentence of 10 years provided under Section 376 (2) (f), IPC.

In Babu Yadav v. State of U.P., 2001 Cr LJ 356 (All) : 2001(1) Femi-JurisCC 54 (All), there existed no extenuating circumstances. The ravished girl was only 10 or 11 years old, at the time of incident and the accused himself was a fully grown up young man. Enmity between the families was an admitted fact and might have impelled him to undermine and damage the honour of the poor girl and the family. The lust for sex had made him a maniac. His lust coupled with enmity made this assault a well thought out design. The girl was visiting his house to play with his adolescent niece unmindful of that enmity and its consequences that ultimately visited her. In the light of the above no leniency in sentence could be extended to the accused.

The prosecutrix aged 50 years, was raped by accused who was serving in military Engineering service. It was contended that since the prosecutrix an her husband both expired, a lenient view may be taken n the matter of awarding sentence. It was held that none of those factors entitled the accused any leniency and had not bearing on the offence under section 376, IPC, which is an offence against the society and the state and that if a person who had been serving in disciplined service, committed such offence it reflected on the discipline of such service. Doongar Singh v. State of Rajasthan, 2000 Cr LJ 1646 (Raj) : 2000(3) RecCri R 534 : 2000(2) Cur Cri R 608 (Raj).

The accused a Maulavi teaching Holy Quran committed rape on a minor girl aged 9 years. Though he did not deserve sympathy, considering the matter from another angle that the accused by this time has already undergone a sentence of about five and half years and considering the remission given in view of the celebration of Golden Jubilee year of Independence, accused was likely to be released on his completion of about seven years of sentence. The prosecutrix for no fault of her had became victim at the hands of the accused and in view of the stigma attached to her for all time of come, it is felt that this is a case where she is required to be adequately compensate. Thus, considering all the aspects of the case, the substantive sentence of imprisonment of ten years imposed by the trial court is reduced to the one of minimum sentence of seven years, provided the appellant deposited in the trial court an amount of Rs. 50,000/- by way of compensation to be paid to the prosecutrix within four weeks from today and failing which the substantive sentence imposed by the trial court of ten years. R.I. and a fine of Rs. 10,000/- in default to undergo further R.I. for three months shall stand confirmed. Mohammad Zuber Noormohamed Changwadia v. State of Gujarat, 1999 Cr LJ 3419 (Goa).

If there are no extenuating or mitigating circumstances available on the record which may justify imposition of sentence less than the prescribed minimum on the appellant, to show mercy in a case like this would be travesty of justice. The plea that because of long time has elapsed subsequent to the date of offence and the possibility that the prosecutrix as also the accused may have got married and settled in life during the pendency of these proceedings cannot be countenanced. The sentencing Court must bear the loud cry for justice by the society and more particularly, in case of heinous crime of rape of innocent helpless children as in this case of the victim of crime and respond by imposing a proper sentence. The young age of the accused in itself does not constitute a special and adequate reason for reduction of period of sentence. Jhalli v. State of M.P. 2001 Cr LJ 4606 (M.P.).

As Parliament has disfavoured the sentence to plummet below the minimum limit prescribed Parliament used the expression shall not be less than which is peremptory in tone. The court has normally no discretion even to award a sentence less than the said minimum. Nonetheless Parliament was not oblivious of certain very exceptional situations and hence, to meet such extremely rare contingencies it made a departure from the said strict rule by conferring a discretion on the court subject to two conditions. One is that there should be adequate and special reasons and the other is that such reasons should be mentioned in the judgement. The expression "adequate and special reasons" indicates that it is not enough to have special reasons nor adequate reasons disjunctively. There should be a conjunction of both for enabling the court to invoke the discretion. Reasons which are general or common in many cases cannot be regarded as special reasons. No catalogue can be prescribed for adequacy of reasons nor instances can be cited regarding special reasons, as they may differ from case to case. Kamal Kishore v. State of HP 2000 Cr LJ 2292 (SC) : AIR 2000 (SC) 1920 : 2000(4) SCC 502 : 2000(5) JT 202 : 2000(4) Scale 52 : 2000(3) Supreme 762.

In Kamal Kishore's case (Supra) the following resons were advanced for extending benefit of the proviso to section 376(2) IPC. "Shishna Devi (PW-2) has since been married to another person and she is now mother of children and is well settled in life. The accused was aged 23 when the offence was committed and now he is 34, but he remains unmarried. He says that on two occasions his marriage had reached the stage of engagement but both had to be dropped off before reaching the stage of marriage due to the social stigma and disrepute which surrounded him." The court observed that the said circumstances pleaded by accused were not social reasons for tiding over the legislative mandate for imposing the minimum sentence and the enhanced sentence was enhanced for the offence under section 376, IPC to imprisonment for 7 years. The court also observed that the long time lag which elapsed subsequent to the date of offence and the fact that the prosecutrix got married and was well settled in life and that she was now mother of children may be factors for consideration by the executive or constitutional authorities if they had to decide whether remission of the sentence could be allowed to the accused.

It is true that the proviso to section 376 (2) IPC provides that for adequate and special reasons. To be reflected in Judgment. The discretion vested on the Court by proviso to Section 376 (2) IPC, to impose a sentence below the minimum should be sparing exercised. It is only when the court after the utmost circumspection finds that there are compelling circumstances warranting the reduction of the sentence below the statutory minimum should reduce it. The words "adequate and speeula special" used in proviso to section 376 (2), IPC connote sufficient and compelling reasons . It is impossible to enumerate such reasons for any list can only be illustrative and not exhaustive. Some such reasons can be tender age of the accused or consent of the girl or both. But it should always be borne in mind that the reasons should exceptional and extraordinary because if this is not so the proviso would override the legislative intent contained in section 376 (2), IPC, provision provides that the sentence shall not be less than ten years. Ramesh v. State of Maharashtra, 2001 Cr LJ 1579 (Bom).

Where the accused was aged 16 years at the time of occurrence his sentence of imprisonment could not be sustained and he could not even be sent to an approved school since many years had been added to his age by the time of final judgment. The court expressed that it was an unfortuate case where a minor girl of 10 years of age was mercilessly raped by the accused but under law he could neither be sent to jail nor an approved school. Bire v. State of U.P., 2000 Cr LJ 87 (All) : 2000(1) JI 834 (836).

The vaginal secretion and semen like stains on thighs of prosecutrix support her version of rape. The court below was correct in convicting the appellants. However looking to fact that no definite opinion about rape was given by the doctor the chemical examiner's report is not filed and proved by prosecution and the matter relates to year 1989 and that appellants have already undergone imprisonment of about 5 years the conviction is upheld but they are directed to be released on the sentence already undergone. Bhagat Singh v. State of M.P., 1994 Cr LR (MP) 165 (N) (MP).

Evidence of prosecutrix corroborated by medical evidence and other convincing evidence—Plea of accused that she was consenting party was held non-believable—Merely because she was so simple as to repose confidence in accused persons and stayed with them in hotel, it cannot be said that she was consenting party.—Conviction upheld but sentence reduced to 3 years, RI as accused were very young persons and already suffered disrepute and mental agony. Raju v. State of Karnataka, 1994 SCC (Cri) 538 ; (1994) 1 SCC 453 (SC) : AIR 1994 SC 222 ; 1994 JIC 620 ; 1994 Cr LJ 248 ; (1994) 2 BLJR 1059.

Where accused was convicted under Sections 366, 366-A and 376, IPC, to respondent No. 1 and under Section 376, IPC, to respondent No. 2—In appeal High Court acquitted them—State appeals against acquittal by High Court.—The occurrence took place in 1982 the victim after elopement warned to one of the accused No. 2. So her consent can well be presumed even for sexual acts prior to marriage. Hence acquittal of accused No. 2 is not bad. As regards accused No. 1 interest of justice would be met it sentence of imprisonment for his offence under Section 376, IPC. State of A.P. v. Narasimha, (1994) 31 All Cr C 609; (1994) 2 Crimes 263; (1994) 4 SCC 453 (SC).

Accused was convicted of the offence of rape on child girl of very tender age of about 12 years. Held, that sentencing the accused only for 3 years just amounted to sending him for picnic. Sentence of imprisonment should be imposed with severity. 1987 Cr LJ 557 (MP).

Where the charge was of rape of girl aged 4 years—Leniency shown in sentence was not sustainable.—The provision for rigorous punishment that have been specially prescribed by legislature particularly after the amendment of Section 376, require to be seriously applied with a degree of mescle as it is expected to act as a social deterrent and an eye opener to those who have similar inclination. State of Maharashtra v. Umesh Krishna Pawar, (1994) 1 Bom CR 575 ; 1994 Cr LJ 774.

In a case, accused, 25 years old, committed rape on 10 years old helpless girl, it was held sentence of 10 years. RI, is not harsh. 1987 Cr LR (Raj) 797.

Held, maximum sentence awardable being 10 years, cannot be raised to 14 years, which is not legal. 1986 Cr LJ 975 (Del).

Where an accused held to have committed rape on her 7 years daughter—Sentence was to be awarded. It was held that in awarding heavier punishment for cases where the victim is a minor girl, the legislature had indicated its abhorrence for such acts and in instant case the rapist is the father of the victim it would qualify for realm of sexual perversion. In this class of cases the offender deserved heavy and deterrent punishment. Abdul Wahid Bahadur Ali Shaikh v. State of Maharashtra, (1994) 2 Bom CR 339.

Where there was rape of a minor girl—Determination of age—By medical evidence showed her to nine to fourteen years—Applicants hand cut down by villagers—Ten years imprisonment—It was not to be fully justified—Sentence reduced to 7 years, and fine reduced to Rs. 1,000. Babu Lal v. State of Rajasthan., 1995 Cr LR 121 (Raj).

Rape of minor girl aged about 12 to 15 years studying in 6th class— Accused aged 19 years being related to prosecutrix and living in adjoining house—Rape committed on several occasions—She did not disclose it earlier under threat to be killed—She conceived with pregnancy of 7-8 months when her parents lodged FIR—Prosecution evidence corroborated by medical evidence. Her minority was finally established.—Conviction was upheld. Sentence of imprisonment reduced to period already undergone taking lenient seeing his young age. Raj Pal v. State of H.P., (1995) 2 Sim LC 57 (HP).

Appellant charged for offence under Section 376, IPC—Witnesses not supporting the prosecution case. Certain witnesses decorated hostile—There was no explanation for inordinate delay in filing complaint. Prosecutrix's testimony regarding rape not corroborated either by medical evidence or by independent witness. Conviction for offence under Section 376, set aside but conviction for offence under Section 363, stood confirmed. Sentence reduced. Ganesh v. State of Rajasthan, 1995 Cr LR 441 (Raj).

The question was whether there should be any difference in sentence awarded to principal offender and abettor. It was held that the court should not make any distinction in quantum of sentence to be awarded to principal offender that awarded to offender who abetted the commission of offence. Ashok Nivruti Desai v. State of Maharashtra, 1995 Cr LJ 826 (Bom) : 1995(1) Bom Cr 288 : 1995(1) Mah LR 312 : 1995(3) CCR 10 : 1995 Cr R 356 (Bom).

Delay in filing the FIR was satisfactorily explained. Sexual intercourse was admittedly committed by the accused on the prosecutrix. The Doctor's evidence was reliable. There was no evidence on consent having been given him so to do. The accused was arrested on being pointed out the flat. While the I.O. explained why the associates of the accused could not be arrested, there is no reason also to disbelieve the prosecutrix. Conviction by the trial court was maintained but sentence was reduced to 4 years from seven years. (1986) 2 Crimes 417 (Del).

'R' held guilty for offence under Section 376, IPC, and sentenced to RI for 7 years and accused's found guilty for offence under Section 366/34, IPC, and sentenced to RI for 3 years—The same was challenged in appeal. The prosecutrix was of matured age at the time of the said incident. She made statement before marriage officer and agreed for her marriage with appellant. The proviso to Section 376(1) enable the court to award less than 7 years imprisonment in special circumstances. Hence sentence is reduced to period already undergone. Sentence of fine also waived. Rajbir v. State, (1994) 2 CC Cases 437 (Del).

Accused forcibly took young girl of 13 years of age and committed rape. Therefore sentence of 3 years RI is not excessive. Pariyasami, In re : 1995 Cr LJ 1203 (Mad).

Where there was proven rape of a minor girl—Hence convicted by sentence of 10 years—Reduced to period already undergone i.e., 8 years. Gorelal v. State of M.P., 1995 Cr LR 59 (MP).

Accused persons aged 28 years and 45 years having four minor children—No previous conviction—They repenting for crime.—Hence sentence reduced from 10 years to 5 years imprisonment. Suraj Mal v. State, (1995) 1 RCD 156 (Raj).

When an offence of rape was on 7-8 years old girl child—Rape committed at house of accused being known person—Accused fully grown up man. Innocent girl appeared as witness who testified rape on her—Medical report corroborated it—No prior enmity was found—Guilt fully established from evidence and circumstances—Heinous crime.—It was held that conviction and sentence of 10 years RI upheld. Sayeed v. State of U.P., 1994 ACC (H) 1 (All).

Held, that the prosecutrix and a witness also went to Bilaspur on 8.7.1986 and lodged the FIR at Police Station, Bilaspur, in the presence of her husband and one another. It has also come in the evidence of PW-10 that the Panchayat was called in the village on 7.7.1986 in which the accused was also called, but he did not turn up. It appears that the in-laws of the prosecutrix wanted to close the matter amicably in their own village but the conduct of the accused was such that he did not bother to make himself present before the Panchayat. The prosecutrix and her in-laws are simple and illiterate villagers and they cannot be expected to know the consciousness of the importance of prompt lodging of the FIR and the relevant factors that the husband of the prosecutrix was not present at his house but was working at a distant place at Barmana and further the honour of the prosecutrix was also at stake and without the consent of the husband the matter could not be decided by her or members of her family. However, in the instant case, delay in recording FIR cannot be said to be so inordinate as to spell out an impairable dent in the case of the prosecution in the circumstances of the case. Roshan Lal v. State of Himachal Pradesh, (1994) 1 SLJ 747 at pp. 751, 752 (HP).

Sentence of 5 years imprisonment—Unless supported by special and adequate reasons.—It was held to be improperly insufficient. State of Gujarat v. Jaysukh, (1995) 2 GLH 524 (Guj).

Rape of a minor girl—Conviction of the accused was sentenced. It was finally held that no leniency should be shown to the accused. Rakha Ram v. State of Haryana, (1995) 2 SLJ 1163 (P & H).

When accused was convicted and sentenced to 6 years rigorous Imprisonment—Revision petition against sentence passed by Court below.—The sentence passed against the appellant is lenient and should not be reduced. Hence no interference is called for reducing sentence. Salikram v. State of M.P., 1994 Cr LR (MP) 68 (N) (MP).

Where there was alleged strangulation after committing rape—Conviction and sentence of death for offence under Section 302, IPC and life imprisonment for offence under Section 376, IPC.—Revision petition challenging of the same was filed.—The accused strangulated victim after committing rape and was apprehended while trying to run away, witnesses heard shrieks of the girl just before that. Offence is duly made out. However, offence committed at spur of moment. Hence not a case calling for death penalty. Ends of justice shall be met by awarding the sentence of life-imprisonment under Section 302, IPC also as in regard to offence under Section 376, IPC. Vinod v. State, 1994 Cr LJ 2360 (All).

The same was filed both the direct and medical evidence showed that infant victim girl was attempted to be raped. Hence conviction order cannot be interfered with. But since the petitioner has been in jail for 5 years and four months the sentence is reduced to period already undergone. Satbir alias Chand v. State of Haryana, (1995) 1 CC Cases 409 (P & H).

Accused was aged 16 years and committed offence in fit of passion. Occurrence being of long back. Hence, sentence of 10 years RI reduced to 4 years RI. The sentence of fine was maintained. Kanhaiya Lal v. State of Rajasthan, (1995) 2 WLC 286 (Raj).

Where incident took place nine years back and notice for enhancement of sentence issued 7 years back.—It was not proper to enhance sentence. Jhingal v. State of M.P., 1995 Cr LR (MP) 121.

There is no evidence or any preplan to commit the crimes on a chance meeting, test appears to have overtaken their confidence. Therefore, the proviso to Section 376 (2), IPC can be pressed into service and 7 years RI would be adequate. Fanibhusan Behara v. State of Orissa, (1995) 1 East LJ 244 (Ori).

Victim being minor girl of 9 years was examined by trial court but she was not understanding questions and give answers—Her non-examination is not fatal—She was also mentally retarded—Guilt of accused established. As incident took place about 9 years back, sentence was not enhanced. Pala v. State of Haryana, (1995) 2 CC Cases 477 (P&H).

Where there was rape of a minor girl and had no mitigating circumstances—High Court is not justified in awarding a lesser sentence than the prescribed minimum without assigning any reason. State of A.P. v. Bodem Sundara Rao, (1995) 6 SCC 230 : AIR 1996 (SC) 530 : 1995(7) JT 90 : 1995(5) Scale 554.

Where the accused committed a rape upon a mentally retarded lady who was helpless because she was unable to understand as to what was wrong and what was right, it was held that, the accused deserved no leniency. Vaher Singh Ramjibhai v. State of Gujarat, 2001 Cr LJ 4485 (Guj).

If a person commits rape with his own daughter, such a person cannot be regarded as a normal man. He is psychologically sadistic person and some psychological treatment should be given to him during the period of detention, but such type of treatment is given in India or not, it is not clear. To prevent such type of offences psychological treatment is must to such persons and if such type of facility is not available in India, it should be provided in jail. In the instant case sentence of 7 years' RI was held sufficient. Pooran Ram v. State of Rajasthan, 2001 Cr LJ 91 (Raj); See also Suresh v. State, 2006 Cr LJ 282 (Delhi); Jay Nath v. State of Maharashtra, 2006 Cr LJ 202 (Bom.).

Imposition of sentence less than prescribed minimum. Both in cases of sub-Secs. (1) and (2) of Sec. 376 the Court has the discretion to impose a sentence of imprisonment less than the prescribed minimum for 'adequate and special reasons'. If the Court does not mention such reasons in the judgment there is no scope for awarding a sentence lesser than the prescribed minimum. In order to exercise the discretion of reducing the sentence fanciful reasons would not permit the Court to impose a sentence less than the prescribed minimum. What is adequate and special would depend upon several factors and no strait-jacket formula can be indicated. What is applicable to trial Courts regarding recording reasons for a departure from minimum sentence is equally applicable to the High Court. Where the only reason indicated by the High Court is that the accused belonged to rural areas, was an illiterate labourer and belonged to scheduled tribe, it can by no stretch of imagination be considered either adequate or special. The requirement in law is cumulative. The order of the High Court reducing sentence to period already undergone, therefore, is indefensible.

Imposition of sentence without considering its effect on the social order in many cases may be in reality a futile exercise. The social impact of the crime, e. g. where it relates to offences against women, dacoity, kidnapping, misappropriation of public money, treason and other offences involving moral turpitude or moral delinquency which have great impact on social order, and públic interest, cannot be lost sight of and per se require exemplary treatment. Any liberal attitude by imposing meagre sentences or taking too sympathetic view merely on account of lapse of time in respect of such offences will be result-wise counter productive in the long run and against societal interest which needs to be cared for and strengthened by string of deterrence inbuilt in the sentencing system. State of M. P. v. Basodi., AIR 2009 SC 3081 : 2009 (6) SCR 1166 (SC) : 2009 (12) SCC 318 : 2009 (6) JT 92 (SC) : 2009 (6) Scale 353 (SC) : 2009 (3) Supreme 501 (SC) : 2009 CrLJ 4284 (SC) : 2009 (2) Crimes 273 (SC).

Long pendency of matter. The social impact of the crime, e.g. where it relates to offences against women, dacoity, kidnapping, misappropriation of public money, treason and other offences involving moral turpitude or moral delinquency which have great impact on social order, and public interest, cannot be lost sight of and per se require exemplary treatment. Any liberal attitude by imposing meager sentences or taking too sympathetic a view merely on account of lapse of time in respect of such offences will be result-wise counter productive in the long run and against societal interest which needs to be cared for and strengthened by string of deterrence inbuilt in the sentencing system. Ankush Maruti Shinde vs. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2009 SC 2609 : 2009 (6) SCC 667 : 2009 (6) JT 358 : 2009 (7) SCR 182 : 2009 (6) Scale 388 : 2009 (3) Supreme 760 : 2009 (4) SLT 470;; See also Bikram Dorjee vs. State of West

Death sentence — Rarest of rare cases. The murders were not only cruel, brutal but were diabolic. The High Court has held that those who were guilty of rape and murder deserve death sentence, while those who were convicted for murder only were to be awarded life sentence. The High Court noted that the whole incident is extremely revolting, it shocks the collective conscience of the community and the aggravating circumstances have outweighed the mitigating circumstances in the case of accused persons; but held that in the case of others it was to be altered to life sentence. The High Court itself noticed that five members of a family were brutally murdered, they were not known to the accused and there was no animosity towards them. Four of the witnesses were of tender age, they were defenseless and the attack was without any provocation. Some of them were so young that they could not resist any attack by the accused. A minor girl of about fifteen years was dragged in the open field, gang raped and done to death. There can be no doubt that the case at hand falls under the rarest of rare category. There was no reason to adopt a different yardstick. In fact, main accused assaulted PW. 1 and took the money from the deceased.

Above being the position, the appeal filed by the accused persons deserves dismissal, which we direct and the State's appeal deserves to be allowed. A2, A3 and A5 are also awarded death sentence. In essence all the six accused persons deserve death sentence. Ankush Maruti Shinde vs. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2009 SC 2609 : 2009 (6) SCC 667 : 2009 (6) JT 358 : 2009 (7) SCR 182 : 2009 (6) Scale 388 : 2009 (3) Supreme 760 : 2009 (4) SLT 470.

10. Conviction.—When there was infirmities about place of incidence and identification of accused. About place of incidence not very material as consistent evidence of victim fully corroborated by medical evidence and her sister's evidence and on question of identification of accused also not very material as accused appellant was known before hand to family of victim and other neighbours.—Prosecution case was established and appeal against conviction dismissed. Camilo Rodrigues v. State of Goa, (1995) 1 CCR 160 (Bom).

A case of this nature should be viewed having regard to the materials brought on record in their entirety. We have noticed hereinbefore the prosecution case. Indisputably, the prosecutrix was examined medically after a long time. The explanation offered by PW-5 in this behalf, in our opinion, is clear and sufficient. Not only the father of the prosecutrix was not in the village, he had to be sent for and came back to the village only on the next day. Evidently, for good reasons, they did not want to lodge a First Information Report immediately. A panchayat was convened and only when it did not yield any fruitful result, the First Information Report was lodged.

The evidence of the doctor appears to be wholly insufficient. Even she could not complete the medical examination. Despite passage of a long time, an injury on the private parts of the prosecutrix was found. The doctor at least testified that there had been an attempt to commit rape. While saying so, she found the hymen absent which having regard to the medical jurisprudence is of some significance.

Fault in the judgment of the High Court could have been found out if the prosecutrix was a major. Having regard to the nature of medical evidence as also the authorities noticed hereinbefore the conclusion arrived at by the High Court, in our considered opinion, cannot be said to be perverse. Furthermore, for the purpose of satisfaction of the ingredients of rape, it is not necessary that there should be complete penetration. See Aman Kumar and another v. State of Haryana., (2004) 4 SCC 379 : 2004 AIR SCW 827. Satyapal v. State of Haryana, AIR 2009 SC 2190 : 2009 (5) SCR 577 (SC) : 2009 (6) SCC 635 : 2009 (5) JT 291 (SC) : 2009 (5) Scale 431 (SC) : 2009 (3) Supreme 33 (SC) : 2009 (4) SLT 41 (SC) : 2009 (2) Crimes 96 (SC).

Accused, along with two other accused, brought the victim girl from her residence in a car and then she was made to stay along with them in lodge. When the prosecution has established the fact that accused brought the victim girl to the said lodging and stayed with her in the said lodging, then the burden came to be shifted on the accused, of explaining as to what happened thereafter in the said room or, of showing that nothing happened as deposed by prosecutrix. By remaining silent, this accused has not discharged this burden.

The facts constituting forcible sexual intercourse on the victim girl said to have been committed by the accused in the said lodging were within the special knowledge of accused and the victim girl. The victim girl has stated on oath that after she was brought there, accused and also other two persons committed forcible sexual intercourse on her one after another against her will and despite her request that they should not do so. This accused, though has denied the entire evidence of victim girl, has not brought anything in her cross-examination-in-chief to disbelieve her evidence in examination-in-chief as to he committing forcible sexual intercourse on her while she was made to stay in the said lodging.

If the relevant allegations in the complaint and also the evidence of prosecutrix are carefully scrutinised, it could be seen that her evidence falls in line with the allegations in the complaint. Incident of accused and other two other accused taking the prosecutrix from her residence to the said lodging and making her to stay with them in the said lodging is consistent with the allegations in the complaint. Further, as could be seen from the evidence of victim girl, she has given all the minor details of the acts of forcible sexual intercourse committed on her by the accused while she was made to stay in the said lodging. In the absence of any explanation by the accused as to what happened between himself and victim girl after he took her into the room in the said lodging, the positive evidence of victim girl given on oath before the Court which is quite consistent with her allegations in her complaint as to the factum of forcible sexual intercourse committed by him on her being trustworthy, deserves acceptance and the same has been rightly accepted and relied upon by the Trial Court. Besides this nothing is brought on record by the accused through the evidence of either victim girl or any other witness to show that the prosecutrix falsely implicated him at the cost of her reputation. N. Vijaya alias Ameen vs State of Karnataka, 2010 Cri LJ 1050 (Karn).

Even without the examination of doctor, the evidence of prosecutrix stands fully corroborated by the evidence of Sub-Inspector of the Police Station who had virtually caught the appellant red-handed. Thus, even if doctor had not been examined it would not throw or completely discard the prosecution story. The evidence of prosecution witnesses is fully trustworthy and there is no reason to doubt genuineness thereof.

In the present case, there is consistency in the evidence of prosecutrix, which stands corroborated by the evidence of Sub-Inspector. He had no axe to grind against the appellant. In this case, the version of the prosecutrix right from lodging of the FIR, till her examination by the doctor and till she deposed in Court, had been absolutely consistent. Not only this, to corroborate further, the evidence of Sub-Inspector is also on record who had caught the appellant red-handed which fully establishes that it was the appellant who had committed offence of rape.

Thus, looking to the matter from all angles, we are of the opinion that there is no merit or substance in this appeal. The same is accordingly hereby dismissed. Wahid Khan vs. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2010 SC 1 : 2009 (4) Crimes 265 (SC) : 2009 (14) JT 510 : 2009 (15) SCR 1207 : 2009 (14) Scale 220 : 2009 (7) Supreme 584 : 2009 (9) SLT 107.

Presence of accused persons at spot of rape admitted—Evidence of prosecutrix trustworthy and corroborative of evidence of other witnesses— There was held no false implication and absence of smegma and injury on person of prosecutrix inmaterial—Proof of completed act of rape by each accused not necessary.—Hence conviction was fully justified. Panibhusan Behera v. State of Orissa, 1995 Cr LJ 1561 (Ori).

Where rape was on seven or eight years old girl—Accused fully grown up man—Both known to each other—Offence committed at house of accused— Statement of girl corroborated prosecution case and evidence and circumstances establishing guilt—Medical report corroborated it—No prior enmity was proved—Guilt was establishing. Held, conviction and sentence was fully justified. Sayeed v. State of U.P., (1994) 31 ACC 1 (All).

The accused took a school girl to a secluded place and after raping her strangulated her to death. The post-mortem report confirmed the commission of the sexual assault on the deceased prior to her death and the fact was admitted by the defence. Conviction for murder and rape was upheld but sentence was reduced to life imprisonment. Amit v. State of Maharashtra, 2003 Cr LJ 3873 : AIR 2003 (SC) 3131 : 2003(3) Crimes 318 : 2003(8) SCC 93 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1959 : 2003(6) Scale 244.

The accused dragged the victim to a nearby bush and committed rape on her while she alongwith her sister was going to take bath in the river and no signs of sexual intercourse were found as prosecutrix had taken bath and cleaned her clothes in river after rape was committed, it was held that the testimony of prosecutrix and her sister was reliable and accused was liable to be convicted. Shyama Sunder Kabat v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 1354 (Orissa).

A girl of 4 years of age entered the mill and the accused raped her. There was no reason for falsely implicating the accused and his conviction was upheld. The Court said. "In a case of rape alleged to have been committed on a child aged about 4 to 5 years, a duty is cast on the Court to have utmost sensitivity and it is necessary to appreciate the evidence in its totality, keeping in view of the background of the entire case, and not in isolation. Syed Pasha v. State of Karnataka, 2004 Cr LJ 4223 (Kant).

Where the incident was reported late due to family circumstances but victim narrated all the events in details in lengthy cross-examination, it was held that the conviction was proper. Gajipisetty Madhu v. State, 2004 Cr LJ 3978 (AP) : 2004(2) ALD (CRL) 452.

In the instant case, the accused allegedly sexually assaulted the victim. The evidence of victim was corroborated by medical evidence and evidence of her mother and other witnesses. Mere fact that the medical report did not show any injuries on the male again of accused, it was held that it was not accuracy that there should always be marks of injuries on male organ in such cases and that the conviction of the accused was proper. State of Mizoram v. Zaduhilana, 2005 Cr LJ 3756 (Gau) : 2005(3) Crimes 358 (Gau.).

Where there was conviction for offence under Section 376, IPC, appeal against the same was filed—Prosecutrix being 8 years old and her evidence corroborated by medical evidence. Findings were well merited—The conviction order does not warrants interference. Amar Singh v. State of M.P., (1995) 4 Crimes 354 (MP).

The solitary evidence of suit 'B' is sufficient for conviction in this case after a critical analysis of record supported with a prompt FIR and equally corroborating medical report. Conviction upheld. Jograj v. State of U.P., 1995 UP Cr R 38 (All).

Victim being minor girl was mentally deficient—Delay in filing FIR was explained—Medical evidence establishes incidence of rape. Accused failed to prove his absence from place of incidence—His plea of enmity not proved— Girl present in court but not examined—Accused also not pressed for her examination it was held that her non-production not fatal to prosecution— Accused having committed heinous offence of rape on helpless girl, his conviction and sentence upheld. Shamsher Tappi v. State of U.P., 1995 Cr LJ 2328 (All).

Prosecution successfully bringing home guilt of the appellant under Section 376 read with Section 511, IPC—Appellant committing offence of house-breaking at night by entering into room. Commission of offence under Section 457 established—Hence appellant was convicted under Section 457 and under Section 376 read with Section 511. Lingaraj Pillai v. State of Orissa, (1995) 2 Crimes 612 (Ori).

Appeal against conviction. Around midnight both the accused went to house of prosecutrix, called out her husband and compelled prosecutrix to follow them to the jungle. She was forcibly taken away and accused forcibly committed rape on her. Trial Court convicted accused relying on evidence of prosecutrix and her husband. In appeal, High Court upheld conviction without discussing evidence.

Reasons introduce clarity in an order. On plainest consideration of justice, the High Court ought to have set forth its reasons, howsoever brief, in its order indicative of an application of its mind. The absence of reasons has rendered the High Court's judgment not sustainable.

We are dismayed at the casual manner in which the criminal appeal has been disposed of. In the circumstances, we set aside the impugned judgment and remit the matter to the High Court for fresh consideration in accordance with law. As the matter is pending since long we request the High Court to explore the possibility of early disposal of Criminal Appeal No. 693 of 205. Prasad vs. State of Karnataka, AIR 2009 SC 1911 : 2009 CrLJ 1761 : 2009 (1) Crimes 359 : 2009 (3) SCC 174 : 2009 (2) Scale 524 : 2009 (1) Supreme 815.

Conviction of the accused can be sustained on the solitary statement of the rape victim. More so, when her statement stands corroborated by the medical report and promptly lodged FIR. Jograj v. State of U.P., 1995 JIC 72 (Alld).

Where there was prosecutrix statement corroborated by medical evidence which can sustain the conviction. Mahendra Singh v. State of M.P., 1995 Cr LR 62 (MP).

Conviction order passed—Appeal against the same was filed. Victim claimed to be child her age was not medically examined—Conviction order not fully justified—Sentence was set aside. Pala v. State, 1994 JIC 899 (Alld).

Where victim was 7/8 years old girl—Victim was medically examined— Sign of rape was found—But girl was not cross-examined on this basis acquittal order cannot be passed. State of Himachal Pradesh v. Madan Mohan, (1994) 3 Crimes 111 (H.P.).

Injuries on prosecutrix showing use of force—Prosecution case was fully established. Marginal variance in medical evidence regarding timing of incident not fatal—Statement of prosecutrix trustworthy—Conviction was upheld. Palaram v. State of Rajasthan, 1994 RCC 427 (II) (Raj).

In a case, the victim was kidnapped, raped and murdered. The dead body was recovered from a pond and accused was arrested. The accused failed to explain as to why his clothes were stained with semen. Apart from this, the conduct of the accused showed that he was proving to do such act. It was held that his conviction under Sections 363, 376/302 was proper. Surendra Pal Shivbalak Pal v. State of Gujarat, 2004 Cr LJ 4662 (SC): 2004(7) Supreme 107 : 2004(8) Scale 145 : 2004(5) SLT 840 : 2004(3) JCC 1486 : 2004(4) Crimes 110 (SC).

The prosecutrix was physically lifted by accused and brought to the garden. The evidence of prosecutrix was truthful and plea of false implication was not tenable as there was no material to show that prosecutrix had any enmity with accused. The conviction of accused was held proper but sentence was reduced to three years RI and fine as accused were only earning members of their families. Tangirala Venkateswarlu v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 4034 (AP) : 2003 (2) ALD (CRL) 261 : 2003(2) Andh LT (Cri) AP 158.

Where the vaginal discharge and blood was present on clothes worn by victim and accused's clothes when chemically examined indicated the fact that the rape was committed. The accused has convicted. S. Jai Singh v. State, 2004 Cr LJ 3598 (Mad) : 2003 Mad LJ (Cri) 837.

The accused forcibly lifted the girl from the front of her house and committed sexual assault threatening her at point of knife. Age of victim was between 12 to 14 years as per evidence of doctor and ossification test. The evidence of victim girl was reliable and could not be disproved in lengthy cross-examination. It was held that finding guilt of accused based on cogent evidence was proper. Kul Bahadur v. State, 2003 Cr LJ (NOC) 293 (Orissa).

The victim while sleeping with her husband and other relatives at bus stand was picked up by a police constable on the pretext of interrogation and raped in a hotel room. The victim and the witnesses were unable to identify the accused constable but the appellant police official was caught from a hotel room which was booked by him for Rs. 100/-. The accused could not explain his whereabouts at the time of incidence. The testimony of victim and her husband was straight forward and they had immediately after commission of offence name the appellant. His conviction of rape and sentence awarded were held proper and made confessional statement before magistrate when brought from police custody. The statement was recorded in printed form and his signatures were obtained where he was poor illiterate person. The Court held that order of conviction was liable to be set aside. The rustic village girl of tender age was raped and developed pregnancy due to repeated rapes, the conviction was upheld. Visveswaran v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 2548 (SC) : AIR 2003(SC) 2471 : 2003(3) Crimes 32 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1270 : 2003(4) JT 367 : 2003(4) Scale 344.

When a girl below 12 years of age was raped and she narrated the incident clearly and consistently, it was held that no further corroboration was necessary and accused was guilty of offence. Sanjay Bag v. State, 2004 Cr LJ 4714 (Orissa) : 2004(4) Crimes 285 : 2004(22) OCR 189 : 2004(2) Orissa LR 360.

Where the offence of rape by appellant District Malaria Officer on victim a lady Supervisor of same department—Victim being highly educated lady with status and prestige—Late filing of report by her being natural—Doctor who examined victim lady not free from influence of appellant who himself was also doctor and non-examination of witnesses who were subordinate officers of appellant cannot have any adverse effect on prosecution case. Uncorroborated version of prosecutrix can be held basis for conviction of appellant. Appeal was hence dismissed. Dr. Sudhansu Sekhar Sahoo v. State of Orissa, (1994) 1 Crimes 44 ; (1994) 1 ALT (Cri) 7 (Ori).

Offence of rape on victim girl of 5 years age—Conviction by trial court—But acquittal by High Court as eye-witness found not reliable—Appeal by State under Article 136—Medical evidence found hymen of girl completely torn—Found with fresh bleeding and sole eye-witness also corroborated sexual assault. Acquittal order set aside and conviction by trial court under Section 376, is restored. State of U.P. v. Babul Nath, (1994) 3 Crimes 230 (SC) : 1994(5) JT 104 : 1994(3) Scale 734 : 1994(3) CCR 706 (SC).

Where there was rape of school teacher and delay in FIR was fully explained—Full corroboration of evidence of prosecutrix mother, father and brother—They all being independent, non-partisan, competent and qualified witnesses—False implication of accused was ruled out—Conviction was upheld. Affaai v. State, (1994) 2 Crimes 36 (SN) (Cal) (DB).

Conviction under Section 376, IPC and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for 10 years and a fine of Rs. 4,000/-. Revision petition was challenged of.—The statement of prosecutrix is consistent with statement of her brother and also corroborated with statement of other witness. The medical testimony also supports prosecution version. Hence the prosecution has been able to prove its case beyond reasonable doubt. Hence conviction confirmed. Kali Charan v. State (Delhi Administration), (1994) 55 DLT 642

When accused was apprehended on spot committing rape of a minor girl of 4 years and factum of rape proved by medical evidence then conviction of accused held just and proper. Amar Nath v. State of UP, 2005 Cr LJ 1379 (All) : 2005 All LJ 405 : 2005(51) All Cri C 65 : 2005(1) All Cri R 608.

The accused kidnapped the victim girl and took her to different places, where she was subjected to sexual intercourse. The conviction of accused was held proper as accused himself had gone to the police station for handing over the prosecutrix to police. Upendra Singh v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 1390 (Jhar) : AIR 2003 Jhar HCR 312 : 2003(1) JCR JHA 245.

Where evidence of prosecutrix, a minor girl of 11 years old found cogent and trustworthy and corroborated by medical evidence and by evidence of her mother then conviction of accused held just and proper. Rasik Khan Asgarkhan Pathan v. State of Gujarat, 2005 CR LJ 1284 (Guj) : 2005(30) All Ind Cas 837 : 2005(1) Guj LR 913 : 2004(3) Guj LH 601.

In a MP case, where the girl was taken in an auto-riksha forcibly by wilding knife and she was beaten when she started crying during the course of rape, conviction was held proper. Rajesh Gupta v. State, 2004 Cr LJ (NOC) 19 (MP).

In a Madras case, the accused immediately after death of grandmother of victim, took her to a temple, forcibly married her, kept in his house and then raped her. Evidence of prosecutrix was corroborated by doctor's report and fact of marriage was proved by photographs which were taken immediately after the marriage. It was held that under Section 366, 366A, 343 and 376 offence against accused was proved. Narasimhan v. State, 2003 Cr LJ (NOC) 226 (Mad).

Where incident took place in broad day light and prosecutrix identified accused on the basis of tattoo mark on right hand of accused therefore accused rightly convicted under Section 376, IPC. Harish Ram v. State of Uttaranchal, 2005 Cr LJ 1596 (Uttar).

Where the victim while returning from sangeet ceremony was taken to a hut where she was raped and doctor's report said that the intercourse was committed for the first time and by force, the conviction for rape was held proper. Pratap v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 2421 (Raj) : 2002(3) Raj LR 511 : 2003(4) Rec Cri R 20 : 2003(1) WLC 675.

The accused kidnapped a minor married girl, confined her in a room and then raped her. Statement of victim gave clear picture of occurrence proved beyond doubt that it was accused who had kidnapped her. Conviction of accused based on this much evidence was held proper. Chandra Shekhar Pandey v. State of Bihar, 2004 Cr LJ (NOC) 2 (Jhar) : AIR 2004 Jhar HCR 266 : 2003(3) East Cri C 344.

The girl of 16 years of age was raped by the accused and victim girl had given a graphic narration of things that had taken place and it was corroborated by medical evidence. The conviction fo accused was held proper. Vellingiri v. State, 2004 Cr LJ 738 (Mad).

The accused maternal uncle of prosecutrix took her to another village for providing a job to her thereafter committed rape on her. The testimony of prosecutrix was trustworthy and reliable and conviction as well as sentence was confirmed. Maguni Ranjan v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 530 (Orissa) : 2002(4) Crimes 101 : 2002(94) Cut LT 455 : 2002(2) Orissa LR 142.

The accused seven in number raped the prosecutrix but there was total absence of corroboration to her testimony and absence of injury or vulva and vagina also belied case her rape. The conviction was held not proper. Chora Ban Singh v. State, 2004 Cr LJ 569 (Jhar) : AIR 2004 Jhar HCR 292 : 2004(1) JCJR 29.

Where testimony of prosecutrix, a married woman inspiring confidence and was corroborated by evidence of her minor son then conviction of accused held just and proper. Shanabhai Madharbhai Koli Patel v. State of Gujarat, 2004 Cr LJ 268 (Guj) : 2004(1) Guj LH 408.

The age of victim was assessed at 15 years by Court and her version was found reliable as it was corroborated by testimony of her sister. The prosecutrix was a small child of 5 to 7 years of age and statement given by her was inspiring the confidence as doctor's report showed that blood was oozing from vagina of victim child and absence of semen on clothes and person of victim was considered not necessary to prove the rape. Conviction of accused was upheld. Gopal Kishan v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 2851 (P&H) : 2003(2) Marai LJ 339 : 2003(2) Rec Cri R 253 ; Somra Oraon v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 3093 (Jhar) : AIR 2003 Jhar HCR 850 : 2003(2) JCR Jha 648.

In a Gujarat case, a married woman was allegedly dragged by accused in the field and raped when she was going to her home alone. Hearing her shouts a woman informed her minor son who ran to the place of incident but accused ran away. The evidence of prosecutrix was corroborated by her minor son's evidence which inspired confidence. It was held that non-examination of residents of houses situated nearby the place of incident was not fatal and conviction was proper. Shanabhai Madhurbhai Kali Patel v. State, 2004 Cr LJ 268 (Guj) : 2004(1) Guj LH 408.

In absence of Serologists report conviction for rape can be made.—If the testimony of the prosecutrix was found reliable the appellants can be convicted for an offence under Section 376, IPC even in the absence of Serologists' report. Tirath Singh v. State of M.P., 1994 Cr LR (MP) 157 (N).

Prosecutrix testimony not indicating absence of consent—Doubts with regards to sexual competence of the accused and absence of marks of the external injury on the body of the prosecutrix—Conviction was held to be not sustainable. Gyarsa v. State of M.P., 1995 MPLJ 1041 (MP).

Allegation of rape by prosecutrix against father-in-law—No evidence-in support produced—Demand of dowry was fully established.—Conviction for under Dowry Act, justified. But service will not effect. Radha v. Khajan Singh, 1994 Cr LR (Raj) 482.

Conviction should not be set aside on the fanciful plea of the accused defence that the accused was an aged person of 55 years old. Ganga Dayal Singh v. State of Bihar, 1995 SCC (Cr) 154 (SC) : AIR 1994 (SC) 859 : 1994 Cr LJ 951.

Trial for the offence of rape—Absence of bleeding or injury on the private parts of the prosecutrix—Passage not admitting two fingers easily and no semen found—In these circumstances the testimony of the prosecutrix required corroboration for sustaining the conviction. Balia v. State of Orissa, (1994) 1 CCR 70 (Ori) ; (1994) 2 East Cr C 282.

Prosecutrix a poor labourer and entirely new to the surrounding— Appellant violated her passion and semen stains on petticot and vagina lended support to the prosecutrix's version—There was no reason to falsely implicate the appellant.—hence relying upon the prosecutrix's version and testimony conviction upheld. Kamel Singh v. State of M.P., (1995) 3 Crimes 527 (MP).

One exculpatory and other inculpatory—Later report corroborated the evidence—Conviction was held fully Justified—No interference can be made. Bijaya Kumar Sahu v. State of Orissa, (1994) 2 Crimes 746 (Ori).

The statement of prosecutrix was corroborated by evidence of other witnesses. Prosecution version was also supported by medical evidence. Plea of false implication not tenable. Conviction under Section 376 proper. Kali Charan v. State, 1995 Cr LJ 663 (Del).

Medical evidence not satisfactory regarding penetration and attempt to have sexual intercourse. Dhoti of the accused blood-stained. No explanation thereof. Accused's blood on the underwear and frock of the child—That too unexplained.—Held, trial courts conviction upheld. Jagdish Prasad v. State, (1995) 58 DLT 740 (Del) (DB).

In the case of going rape no injury was found on the body of victim—Even on private parts—Incident on a soft ground—Clothes found torn—Abrasion on cheek—FIR was delayed—Proper explanation was given conviction was held fully justified—Would not be proper to set aside conviction. Bhanwaria v. State of Rajasthan, 1994 Cr LJ 3742 (Raj).

When alleged rape committed on prosecutrix aged about 16 years with her consent, no offence of rape proved, but no however, in view of promise of marriage with her, accused convicted for offence of cheating, Maran Chandra Paul v. State of Tripura, 1997 Cr LJ 715 (Gau).

In a MP case, the accused persons caught hold of a school teacher while she was going to her work place and on the point of knife forcibly committed rape on her but FIR was lodged 10 days after the incident. Held prosecutrix was so much frightened that she first tried for her transfer and once she secured it she made a report. It could not be said that the report was delayed. The evidence of prosecutrix was found truthful and conviction was upheld. Malkhan Singh v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 1790 (MP) : 2003(2) Jab LJ 151 : 2002(4) MP LJ 466.

It was alleged that the accused had forcibly taken prosecutrix, a minor girl, from the custody of her parents and committed rape on her. Evidence of parents of prosecutrix, school certificate and medical evidence showed that the prosecutrix was minor at the time of incident. Oral testimony of prosecutrix proved that the accused had raped her. Conviction of accused was held proper. Chhotu Harijan v. State, 2005 Cr LJ 3926 (Raj).

The accused allegedly asked a minor girl to accompany him on the pretext of giving plum (ber) took her to the place of occurrence and committed rape on her. The testimony of the prosecutrix was found reliable and supported by evidence of her parents and the testimony of doctor who examined the victim. It was held that prosecution evidence could not be disbelieved merely because no injury or swelling or blood or semen was found on the penis of accused and that the conviction was proper. Shyoji Ram v. State of Rajasthan, 2005 Cr LJ 4763 (Raj) : 2005(3) Raj LR 620 : 2005(4) WLC 50.

In case of rape on minor girl of 15 years, corroboration is not a sine qua non for conviction if evidence of victim does not suffer from any basic infirmity. Peter Fernandes v. State, 1997 (1) Crimes 539 : 1997 Cr LJ 954 (Bom); See also Chiddu v. State of

11. Evidence and proof.—Where charge of rape upon married woman by three accused—Conviction was challenged in appeal. There was no injury on her person or on private part of accused which ought to have been had there been resistance. The report of chemical examiner did not show sign of semen on clothes. The doctors did not opine specifically rape on prosecutrix. Her testimony also did not find corroboration. Conviction not sustainable. Swam Singh v. State of Punjab, (1995) 3 Crimes 775 (P&H).

Failure to record evidence of prosecutrix — Effect —Prosecutrix a minor mentally retarded girl was raped in running local train. Eye-witnesses traveling in same bogie clearly showing that victim was ravished by accused and medically proved. Presence of semen stains on clothes of accused and victim corroborated evidence of eye-witnesses as well as medical, clothes were seized within short time of incident. Evidence of prosecutrix could not be recorded as she was mentally sick and was unable to express herself would not be fatal for prosecution. Held, on basis of other evidence conviction of accused is proper. Salim Alim Shamsher Shaikh vs State of Maharashtra, 2010 (4) CriLJ 4064 (Bom).

Another circumstance relied upon by the prosecution is that the underwear of the appellant was stained with blood and to the witness indicates that the appellant was entertaing a notion that witness would be in a position to help him because the witness was going to the Police Station daily and policemen were also visiting him. In the cross-examination also, the witness maintained that the appellant had met him in the court premises and neither the appellant nor Mumtaz was in the lockup nor inside the court room and that the appellant had made the confession near the shops. The witness explained to the court as to why he had gone to the court and according to him he had gone to the court premises to meet legal adviser of the Bank for getting his brother's NOC prepared. The wirtness further mentioned before the Court that the appellant and Mumtaz had met him. The suggestion made be the defence that it was wrong to say that the appellant had made any confessional statement was emphatically denied by him. It may be mentioned that this witness in the cross-examination had stated that the appellant was not on talking or visiting terms with him before and, therefore, it was argued that there was no reason for the appellant to confide in this witness. Aftab Ahmad Anasari vs. State of Uttaranchal, AIR 2010 SC 773 (Uttar).

Sufficient evidence. Rape and murder of a girl aged 2 years. The evidence of PW 5 and PW-6 reveals that appellant had been seen around the complainant's house on the previous day and as he was not a resident of this area, he had been quickly singled out. These witnesses further stated the appellant had been seen in the vicinity again after the rape and murder and he had accordingly been apprehended and handed over to the police and two chains worn by deceased had been taken from his pockets. PW-13 also identified the chains in Court. It is true that in the cross-examination of these two witnesses, several improvements vis-a-vis their statements under Sec. 161 of Criminal Procedure Code had been pointed out by the defence Counsel, but the fact that the appellant had been present in the vicinity of the house and had been arrested. soon after the incident has been admitted even by the defence.

Another significant piece of evidence is the statement of PW-7 who testified to the fact that about 2:30 a.m. on the night of the murder he had gone out of the house to urinate and had seen the appellant outside and on being questioned, the appellant had threatened him with dire consequences with the result that he had not informed anybody till the third day after the police had come to the village to verify the facts. He too stated to the fact that two chains had been recovered from the pocket of the appellant. It is true that several improvements have been made by the three primary witnesses but there is absolutely no reason as to why they would involve the appellant in a false case as admittedly he was a stranger to the locality and they bore him no ill will.

We have also gone through the evidence of PW-12 relating to the recovery of the frock pursuant to a disclosure statement made by the appellant under Sec. 27 of the Evidence Act. Nothing could be spelt out from the cross-examination of this witness except that the recovery had not been made from a closed place, though he explained that there was very little movement of human beings in that area as no one was residing close by. This witness also identified the frock that had been recovered. It is equally significant that the strands of fibre recovered from the place of incident had been matched with the material of the frock and were found to be from the same source.

It is true that in a criminal matter the onus of proof lies almost exclusively on the prosecution. As already mentioned above, however, the appellant has not been able to give any explanation in his statement under Sec. 313 of Criminal Procedure Code as to what he had been doing in that locality. On the contrary he admitted his presence by stating that he had been caught by the neighbours on suspicion of the murder and beaten up, and had suffered several injuries in the process. The medical evidence on the contrary reveals that these injuries could also have been sustained while raping and killing the young child.

The evidence that the appellant was a paedophile with extremely violent propensities also stands proved on record in that he had been convicted and sentenced for an offence punishable under Sec. 354 in the year 1998 and later for offences punishable under Secs. 363, 376, 379, 302 and 201 of the IPC for the rape and murder of a young child and had been awarded a sentence of imprisonment for life under Sec. 302, and several other terms of imprisonment with respect to the other Secs., though, an appeal in this connection was pending as on date. It is also extremely relevant that the appellant, had, in addition, been tried for the murders of several other children but had been acquitted on the 28.07.2005 with the benefit of doubt. The present incident happened three days later. We accordingly dismiss the appeals but modify the sentence of death to one for the rest of his life in terms of the judgment in Shraddananda's case. Sebastian vs. State of Kerala, 2010 (1) SCC 58 : 2009 (4) Crimes 121 (SC) : 2009 (13) JT 136 : 2009 (13) Scale 210 : 2009 (7) Supreme 8 : 2009 (8) SLT 96.

Burden of proof. Accused, along with two other accused, brought the victim girl from her residence in a car and then she was made to stay along with them in lodge. When the prosecution has established the fact that accused brought the victim girl to the said lodging and stayed with her in the said lodging, then the burden came to be shifted on the accused, of explaining as to what happened thereafter in the said room or. of showing that nothing happened as deposed by prosecutrix. By remaining silent, this accused has not discharged this burden.

The facts constituting forcible sexual intercourse on the victim girl said to have been committed by the accused in the said lodging were within the special knowledge of accused and the victim girl. The victim girl has stated on oath that after she was brought there, accused and also other two persons committed forcible sexual intercourse on her one after another against her will and despite her request that they should not do so. This accused, though has denied the entire evidence of victim girl, has not brought anything in her cross-examination-in-chief to disbelieve her evidence in examination-in-chief as to he committing forcible sexual intercourse on her while she was made to stay in the said lodging.

If the relevant allegations in the complaint and also the evidence of prosecutrix are carefully scrutinised, it could be seen that her evidence falls in line with the allegations in the complaint. Incident of accused and other two other accused taking the prosecutrix from her residence to the said lodging and making her to stay with them in the said lodging is consistent with the allegations in the complaint. Further, as could be seen from the evidence of victim girl, she has given all the minor details of the acts of forcible sexual intercourse committed on her by the accused while she was made to stay in the said lodging. In the absence of any explanation by the accused as to what happened between himself and victim girl after he took her into the room in the said lodging, the positive evidence of victim girl given on oath before the Court which is quite consistent with her allegations in her complaint as to the factum of forcible sexual intercourse committed by him on her being trustworthy, deserves acceptance and the same has been rightly accepted and relied upon by the Trial Court. Besides this nothing is brought on record by the accused through the evidence of either victim girl or any other witness to show that the prosecutrix falsely implicated him at the cost of her reputation. N. Vijaya alias Ameen vs State of Karnataka, 2010 Cri LJ 1050 (Karn).

Identification Parade — Prosecutrix did not know the name of the accused — Victim had correctly identified accused in T.I. Parade. It is to be noted that the prosecutrix did not know the name of the accused and, therefore, there was necessity for Test Identification Parade. The evidence of the prosecutrix is clear and cogent. In the instant case the accused is not personally known to the victim and therefore stating his name in the FIR did not arise. However, she has categorically stated that the rape was committed on her by the truck driver. After the arrest of the accused he was put in TI Parade and the victim had correctly identified him. That being so, the judgments of the trial Court and the High Court do not suffer from any infirmity to warrant interference. Mohan Chand v. State of Uttarakhand., AIR 2009 SC 1896. : 2009 (1) SCR 498 (SC) : 2009 (4) SCC 63 : 2009 (1) JT 616 (SC) : 2009 (2) Scale 38 (SC) : 2009 (1) Supreme 429 (SC) : 2009 CrLJ 1755 (SC).

Appreciation of evidence. A case of this nature should be viewed having regard to the materials brought on record in their entirety. We have noticed hereinbefore the prosecution case. Indisputably, the prosecutrix was examined medically after a long time. The explanation offered by PW-5 in this behalf, in our opinion, is clear and sufficient. Not only the father of the prosecutrix was not in the village, he had to be sent for and came back to the village only on the next day. Evidently, for good reasons, they did not want to lodge a First Information Report immediately. A panchayat was convened and only when it did not yield any fruitful result, the First Information Report was lodged.

The evidence of the doctor appears to be wholly insufficient. Even she could not complete the medical examination. Despite passage of a long time, an injury on the private parts of the prosecutrix was found. The doctor at least testified that there had been an attempt to commit rape. While saying so, she found the hymen absent which having regard to the medical jurisprudence is of some significance.

The prosecution case must be considered having regard to the evidence of PW-5. She detected the accused while committing the offence. It was not complete. Appellant is said to have fled away, hearing her voice.

This Court can take judicial notice of the fact that ordinarily the family of the victim would not intend to get a stigma attached to the victim. Delay in lodging the First Information Report in a case of this nature is a normal phenomenon. Both the Courts below apart from relying on a part of the testimony of the prosecutrix found the evidence of PW-5 to be absolutely reliable. The medical evidence itself being a part of the evidence is required to be appreciated in the context of ocular evidence and other circumstances surrounding thereto.

There was some time gap between the occurrence and the examination of the witnesses. Some lapse of memory on the part of the child witness, therefore, is possible. We are, therefore, of the opinion that the impugned judgment does not warrant any interference by this Court. Satyapal vs. State of Haryana, AIR 2009 SC 2190 : 2009 (6) SCC 635 : 2009 (2) Crimes 96 (SC) : 2009 (5) JT 291 : 2009 (5) Scale 431 : 2009 (5) SCR 577 : 2009 (3) Supreme 33 : 2009 (4) SLT 41.

Circumstantial evidence — Chain of circumstances. In the instant case, the deceased went missing when she was playing near her house. Her naked dead body was found lying on public way in front of her neighbours house. She was found to be subjected to rape and died a homicidal death. The appellant accused was seen fleeing away from near the place where the dead body of the deceased was lying. Blood stained frock and blood stained underwear of the deceased concealed in the house of sister of the appellant were recovered pursuant to voluntary disclosure statement made by the appellant while in police custody. Underwear of the appellant seized during the course of investigation was found to be stained with blood and semen. The appellant evidence relating to extra judicial confession made by accused to Ex. Pradhan of village found to be reliable conviction of accused not liable to be interfered with. Aftab Ahmad Anasari vs. State of Uttaranchal, AIR 2010 SC 773.

Held, the cumulative effect of the above mentioned facts taken together is conclusive in establishing the guilt of the appellant. The chain of circumstantial evidence is complete and does not leave any reasonable ground for conclusion consistent with the innocence of the appellant. The chain of circumstances is such as to show that within all human probability the rape and murder of the deceased were committed by the appellant and none else and he had also caused disappearance of evidence of those offences. Further incriminating circumstances proved were put to appellant while recording his statement under Sec. 313 of Criminal Procedure Code. In his further statement, recorded under Sec. 313, the appellant has merely denied the same. Therefore, such denial on the part of the appellant and failure to explain the circumstances proved will have to be treated as an additional link in the chain of circumstances to bring home the charge against the appellant. The circumstances proved establish the guilt of the appellant beyond reasonable doubt. Therefore.

Where there was conviction for offence under Section 376 (1) IPC and sentenced him to 7 years RI. Which was challenged in appeal. The medical evidence does not prove commission of rape. Medical expert was deliberately not examined by prosecution. Further evidence of prosecutrix and PW 'C' does not inspire confidence. Hence prosecution has failed to prove offence under Section 376, IPC. Ram Bux v. State of Rajasthan, 1994 Cr LR (Raj) 566.

From evidence on record, the following circumstances have surfaced :—

1. The deceased was missing from 3/3.30 p.m. of 11.12.2002;
2. She was last seen with the appellant in the counter of his studio, which was adjacent to his residence;
3. She was wearing a pair of silver bangles (churi) and jangia (panty);
4. Earlier also, she used to visit the said tenanted premises and meet the appellant, whom she called 'Kaku' (uncle), who was well-known to the deceased;
5. The accused procured a carton from the witness, in the morning the day the said deceased disappeared;
6. The dead body of the deceased was found folded in the said carton;
7. In the said carton, along with the dead body, a piece of check cloth (Lungi) and a part of the newspaper (Dainik Sambad), dated 16.09.2002, was found;
8. The bangles (Churis), which the deceased used to wear, were not available with the dead body;
9. Similar/identical portion of the cloth, which was found with the dead body, was also recovered from the studio of the accused by the police, on being produced by him, in presence of witnesses;
10. The other part of the said newspaper was recovered from the studio of the accused on being produced by him, before the police, in presence of witnesses;
11. The bangles (churis), which were used by the deceased immediately prior to her disappearance and which were not available with her dead body, came to be recovered from the studio of the accused on being produced by him, before the police, in presence of witnesses. The said seized bangles were identified to be the bangles used by the deceased;
12. The deceased sustained injury on her vagina, causing destruction of hymen and making an opening into the abdominal cavity, through which loops of small intestine protruded out. This injury, in the opinion of the Medical Officer, was caused due to forceful penetration of adult,erect penis;
13. All the injuries were ante-mortem and there was no post-mortem injury;
14. There was some nail marks on the cheeck of the deceased due to smothering;
15. The death, in the opinion of the Medical Officer, who performed, the autopsy, was caused due to combined effect of asphyxia caused by smothering and shock as a result of penetration of the penis causing the injuries, above mentioned;

16. Post-mortem examination was done at 1.15 p.m. on 13.01.2003. The deceased was missing from 3/3.30 p.m. of 11.12.2002. The approximate time of death, with variation by few hours, as per the medical evidence, was 54 to 60 hours. From 3 p.m. of 11.12.2002 to 1 p.m. of 13.12.2002, there was a time gap of around 46 hours. As there cannot be any definite opinion regarding the exact time of death, the said medical opinion indicates that the victim died around 3/3.30 p.m. or immediately thereafter i.e. after she was seen with the appellant in his studio.

In the case of Sarad Birdhichand Sarda vs. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1984 SC 1622, the Supreme Court, while discussing a few decisions on the nature, character and essential proof required in a criminal case, which rests on circumstantial evidence and also referring to the most fundamental and basic decision of the Apex Court in Hanumant vs. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1952 SC 343 = 1953 Cri LJ 129 = 1952 SCR 1091, laid down the following golden principles, which were termed as Panchashil :

(i) The circumstances from which the conclusion of guilt is to be drawn should be fully established. It may be noted here that this Court indicated that the circumstances concerned 'must' or 'should' and not 'may be' established. There is not only a grammatical but a legal distinction between 'may be proved' and 'must be or should be proved' as was held by this Court in Shivaji Sahebrao Bobade vs. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1973 SC 2622 = 1973 Cri LJ 1783 = 1973 (2) SCC 793, where the following observations were made :

"certainly, it is primary principle that the accused must be and not merely may be guilty before a Court can convict and the mental distance between 'may be' and 'must be' is long and divides vague conjectures from sure conclusions.

(ii) The fact so established should be consistent only with the hypothesis of the guilt of the accused, that is to say, they should not be explainable on any other hypothesis except that the accused is guilty.

(iii) The circumstances should be of a conclusive nature and tendency.

(iv) They should exclude every possible, hypothesis except the one to be proved and,

(v) There must be a chain of evidence so complete as not to leave any reasonable ground for the conclusion consistent with the innocence of the accused and must show that in all human probability the act must have been done by the accused".

The circumstances, as revealed from the evidence on records, must form a complete chain pointing to the guilt of the accused to the exclusion of any other hypothesis. Keeping in mind the said principles of law, laid down by the Apex Court, we deem it appropriate to examine if the circumstances emerging from the evidence on record constitute a complete chain leading to the conclusion not consistent with the innocence of the accused.

In the light of specific medical evidence regarding rape and in view of the evidence that the accused was a full grown adult person, his non-examination by medical officer and non-forensic examination of the wearing apparels of the deceased were not fatal. The said Medical Officer ruled out that forceful penetration on a 7 years minor would always cause injury to the penis. He also made it clear that spermatozoa can be detected only in respect of living female within 48 hours and that as the dead body had already started decomposition he made to report regarding presence of spermatozoa. There is also clear medical evidence to show that there was penetration of male genital organ into the vagina of the deceased. Therefore non-forensic examination of the wearing garments of the deceased and non-medical examination of the apparels was not fatal to the prosecution. Hence, we do not find force in the contention of the learned defence Counsel on this point.

Regarding the last seen theory also, there is the unimpeachable evidence of witnesses. There is nothing to hold that the said witnesses had any reason or grudge to falsely depose against the accused. From their evidence, it appear that the said witnesses had their shops in front of the studio of the appellant and that the said studio was visible from their respective shops. They are found to be natural witnesses. No contradiction could be established to be lie their evidence. Hence, we find sufficient positive evidence that the accused and the deceased were seen together by. There is nothing on record to show that after the deceased was seen with the accused, she was found with any other person. Hence, we do not find substance in the contention that the evidence, regarding last seen theory, was false and concocted.

It is the natural instinct of a person to try to save himself, as such, in the present case also, the accused, after committing the death of the deceased, in the alleged manner, tried to dispose of the dead body by putting the same in the carton with a view to remove the evidence against him.

This case does not fall within the category of "the rarest of the rare case". Therefore, in our view, it is not a case, where extreme penalty of death should be imposed. We have no hesitation in holding that imposition of punishment of rigorous imprisonment for life would be sufficient to meet the ends of justice. Accordingly, the death penalty is commuted to rigorous imprisonment for life. The appellant, therefore, instead of being awarded the death penalty, is hereby sentenced to undergo imprisonment for life for the offence under Section 302, IPC. Samir Bhowmik vs. State of Tripura, 2010 (3) Cri LJ 3018 (Gau).

The allegations made in the First Information Report are not evidence. She might have named four persons, namely, accused Nos. 1 to 4 in the FIR, but, as indicated hereinbefore, she named only accused Nos. 1 to 3 in her deposition. Only accused No.1, Babu, has been named by PW7 and none other. She, therefore, knew only the four persons. She had not named accused Nos.5 and 6 either in the FIR or in her deposition.

They had been arrested on the basis of the statements made by their co-accused. They had not been put to Test Identification Parade. The prosecutrix, in her deposition before the learned Trial Judge, neither named nor identified accused Nos. 4 to 6. On what basis, therefore, their guilt is said to have been established is not known. Both, the learned Trial Judge as also the High Court, in their judgments did not deal with this aspect of the matter.

In a situation of this nature, a Test Identification Parade was required to be held at least for the purpose of identification of accused Nos. 5 and 6. Some weight should have been given for arriving at a finding as regards the guilt of accused Nos.5 and 6. as they had not been identified in the court.

We, therefore, are of the opinion that in absence of any Test Identification Parade having been held or they having been identified in Court, the accused Nos.4 to 6 cannot be held guilty of commission of the said offence. They are, in our opinion, have wrongly been convicted. Viswanathan and Ors. v. State, Rep. by Inspector of Police. Tamil Nadu. AIR 2008 SC 2222 : 2008 (6) SCR 1222 (SC) : 2008 (5) SCC 354 : 2008 (5) JT 629 (SC) : 2008 (6) Scale 462 (SC) : 2008 (4) SLT 795 (SC) : 208 (6) SRJ 41 (SC) : 2008 (2) SCC (Cr) 593 : 2008 (2) Recent CR 888 (SC).

When the charge was of having committed rape on prosecutrix—Both the appellants have been convicted under Section 376 and sentenced to Rigorous Imprisonment for 5 years. The uncorroborated testimony of prosecutrix when the same is otherwise discredited by letting circumstances cannot be accepted to sustain conviction. Hence impugned judgment and order set aside. Thakara Besra v. State, (1994) 2 Crimes 596 (Ori).

The prosecutrix alleges injuries on her private parts but medical evidence is silent. All these things show that prosecutrix was trying to make the appellants escape goats. She was trying to absolve herself from said possible blame, scolding consequential calamities. Ashok Kumar v. State of M.P, 1994 Cr LR (MP) 257 (N).

Prosecution case was supported by the prosecution. Her Salwar and Dhoti as well as angochha of the accused was recovered in the presence of page 4. He had been caught red-handed. Medical report is of no help to the appellant and sentenced to 7 years R.I. and fine of Rs. 4,000. The evidence of DW 1 or that of his own is credible where corroboration are reliable. Held, guilt was brought home to the appellant. (1986) 2 Crimes 37 (Del).

The testimony of the prosecutrix corroboration is not the sine qua non for a conviction in a rape case. It has been further held that on principle the evidence of a victim of sexual assault stands on par with evidence of an injured witness. Just as a witness who has sustained an injury is the best witness in the sense that he is least likely to exculpate the real offender, the evidence of a victim of a sex offence is entitled to greater weight absence of corroboration notwithstanding. And while corroboration in the form of eye-witness account of an independent witness may often be forthcoming in physical assault cases, such evidence could not be expected in sex offences, having regard to the very nature of the offence. It would be adding insult to injury to insist on corroboration. If the evidence of the victim does not suffer from any basic infirmity and the probabilities factor does not render it unworthy of credence, as a general rule there is no reason to insist on corroboration except from the medical evidence. Roshan Lal v. State of Himachal Pradesh, (1994) 1 SLJ 747 at p. 753 (HP).

In a case there was discrepancy between complainant and complainants' evidence. The complainant in his evidence stated that the victim had told about incident to her aunt who told it to the complainant but in the complaint it was stated that the complainants' father came to know absent the incident from victim. The Court heid that such discrepancy was not material and that it may raise about aunts' knowledge. State of Karnataka v. Revaniah, 2005 Cr LJ 2676 (Kant) : AIR 2005 Kant HCR 1255 : 2005(4) Crimes 268 : 2005(4) Cur Cri R 466 : 2005(3) Rec Cri R 862 : 2005(4) Kant LJ 404.

The accused were charged with the offence of rape on the prosecutrix. Plea that medical report did not indicate number of persons who committed rape was without any substance. Prosecutrix's evidence that rape was committed on her by all accused was not inconsistent with the medical report. Held, that there was justification in High Court's finding that medical examination and the evidence showed involvement of more than one persons in the act of rape. Contention of prosecution therefore, could not be accepted. 1987 Cr LJ 971 (SC) : AIR 1987 SC 1080.

The prosecutrix in the instant case was above the age of consent in terms of Section 25, IPC. Held, the acquittal of the accused was neither wrong nor illegal. Appeal dismissed. In a case whether or not consent was given, the circumstances have to be considered along with other factors so conclude the factum of rape. (1986) 2 Crimes 639 (Orissa).

Where evidence of victim aged 9 years was corroborated with medical evidence and FIR lodged immediately, conviction of accused was held liable to be sustained. Mishrilal v. State of MP, 2005 Cr LJ NOC 39 (MP) : 2005 Cri LR (SC&MP) MPJ 10.

In an Orissa case also it was held that where testimony of prosecutrix, involving accused in alleged offence of rape is not corroborated by medical evidence and chemical examination report, the accused entitled to benefit of doubt. Sonia Jani v. State, 2004 Cr LJ 226 (Ori) : 2003(2) Crimes 449 : 2003 (25) OCR 433 : 2003(1) Orissa LR 569.

Where testimony of victim prosecutrix got corroboration from her mother, sister and grandmother, absence of injuries on male organ of accused is not fatal and conviction of accused is just and proper. Dinesh v. State of Rajasthan, 2005 Cr LJ 1452 (Raj) : 2005 All MR (Cri) 193 : 2005(30) OCR 317 : 2004(1) Orissa LR 127 : 2005(2) Rec CriR 677.

Where there was ample contradictions in testimony of prosecution witnesses and number of missing links in prosecution case, accused was entitled to benefit of doubt. Appasaheb Maruti Shedge v. State of Maharashtra, 2005 Cr LJ 1503 (Bom) : 2005 All MR (Cri) 575.

The accused allegedly raped the prosecutrix while she was returning from field. FIR was lodged by her after six days. There were number of contradictions in the evidence of prosecutrix. Even her husband had not supported her version. Most of the prosecution witnesses had turned hostile. It was held that the prosecution had failed to prove its case beyond reasonable doubt and, therefore, the conviction was liable to be set aside. Kiran Yadav v. State of Bihar, 2004 Cr LJ 1711 : AIR 2004 Jhar HCR 967 : 2004(1) East Cri C 629.

The prosecution witness had seen the accused dragging the prosecutrix to the place of occurrence and her interference in the matter could not help the prosecutrix. The prosecutrix told her kith and kin about the incident next day when she gained her consciousness. It was held that in all important probabilities factors echoed in favour of testimony of prosecutrix could not be disbelieved and discarded. Conviction under Section 376 by placing of reliance on testimony of prosecutrix was proper. Sano Murmu v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 2365 (Orissa) : 2003(3) Crimes 357 : 2003(95) Cut LJ 465 : 2003(24) OCR 852.

In a Punjab and Haryana case, a minor girl of 8 years was raped. The medical evidence showed injuries on body of victim. Though no injury was found on male organ of accused who was major, doctors categorically stated that possibility of rape could no be ruled out. Conviction of accused was held proper. Sunder Singh v. State of Haryana, 2004 Cr LJ 3083 (P&H) : 2004(2) Rec Cri R 764.

The witnesses stated that the deceased was last seen in company of accused but their evidence was not creditable as there was past enmity between accused and witnesses. Apart from this there was not complete chain not suggest that accused and deceased were last seen together. It was held that the guilt of accused was not proved beyond doubt and he was acquitted. Joseph Oraon v. State, 2004 Cr LJ 4405 (Jhar) : AIR 2004 Jhar HCR 2640 : 2004(2) JCJR 53.

In a M.P. case, where the accused was alleged to have caught hold of prosecutrix in broad day-light, caused injuries to her and committed rape on her. Testimony of prosecutrix was not considered reliable. Prosecutrix did not complain to anybody during this period though she met with several persons including ladies. The victim and accused had given an application for registration of their marriage. It was held that the victim was a major lady and was a consenting party and, therefore, conviction of accused persons was not proper. Lakhan Singh v. State of MP, 2004 Cr LJ 2473 (MP) : 2004(2) Jab LJ 136 : 2004(2) MPHT 146 : 2004(2) MPLJ 132.

The evidence of victim was contradictory on all material facts. At one place she said that she received injuries on her back, elbow and ribs due to assault by the accused but the doctor did not find any injury on her person. Similarly she stated at one place that on her alarm PW1 and PW2 arrived at the place of occurrence and the witnesses saw the appellant fleeing away but in her cross-examination she said that by the time the witnesses had arrived at the place of occurrence, the accused had already fled away. Similarly she made statement that she narrated the story of rape on her to her mother-in-law and to her husband but curiously enough, the mother-in-law was not examined and her husband had been tendered. It was held that the testimony was not found reliable and the conviction was liable to be set aside. *S.K. In the case of kidnapping and rape the version of prosecution that victim was subjected to sexual intercourse found support from medical evidence and report of Central Forensic Science Laboratory. There was injury to victim's hymen and there was bleeding from it. Accused was found capable of performing sexual act. The most important corroboration to the version of prosecution was from the recovery of victim when accused and victim were going together and accused was arrested then and there. No force in the appeal was found so far as conviction of accused was concerned. 1987 Cr LJ 224 (Del).

The statement of the prosecutrix did not find corroboration from the medical evidence. No injury was found on the outer part of the body or inside the private part According to FIR, the prosecutrix did receive injury on her right leg while she was ravished and raped by the accused at the time of incident. But in her statement before the Court she did not mention any such injury having been received at the time of incident. It was held that the statement could not be relied upon. Mohabbat v. State of UP, 2005 Cr LJ 3238 : 2005 all LJ 2219 : 2005(52) All Cri C 635 : 2005(2) All Cri R 1799 : 2005(32) All Ind Cas 526.

The witnesses who were related to the prosecutrix admitted that they could not see any snatching of silver chain or golding earrings by the accused while he was running from the spot, one of the witnesses said that at the time when he reached on the spot, the accused had already run away and he could not notice the accused either on the spot or while he was running away from there. The said statement of the witness indicated that he had not seen the actual act of commission of rape. It was held that testimony of eye-witness could not be relied upon. Mohabbat v. State of UP, 2005 Cr LJ 3238 (All) : 2005 all LJ 2219 : 2005(52) All Cri C 635 : 2005(2) All Cri R 1799 : 2005(32) All Ind Cas 526.

Conviction on the basis of uncorroborated testimony of the victim of offence is sustainable. (1988) 1 Crimes 75 (Ker).

Accused convicted under Sections 366 and 376 for the offence of committing rape on prosecutrix. Observed that evidence of a victim of a sex offence was entitled to great weight, absence of corroboration notwithstanding. While corroboration in the form of eye-witness account of independent witnesses might often be forthcoming in physical assault cases, such evidence could not be expected in sex offences. As a general rule there was no rule to insist on corroboration except from the medical evidence. Held, that appellant kidnapped the prosecutrix who was below 18 years of age and subjected her to rape against her will consequently appeal to be dismissed and conviction and sentence to be maintained. 1987 Cr LJ 1986 (MP).

When accused made attempts to penetrate his organ into private part of girl after fingering charges under Sections 376, 377 and 511 are established. Kartar Singh v. State, 1993 Cr LJ 1483 (Del).

Evidence was that the prosecutrix did not call out any body for help. Medical report was of no help to her. Her blood-stained saree was not produced in Court. Held, acquittal was not unreasonable or perverse. (1986) 2 Crimes 151 (Ori).

The medical report clearly shows that hymen was totally intact and, it was lightly closed. No mark of injury on any part of the body was found. Hence story of rape was totally false. Dhanraj v. State of U.P., 1995 (32) ACC 127 (All).

A well-corroborated testimony of the child prosecutrix can sustain a conviction. Bhawani Gil alias Deo Karan v. State of Rajasthan, (1995) 1 Crimes 559 (Raj).

The evidence of eye-witnesses corroborated by medical evidence. The delay in lodging complaint explained. Hence conviction under Sections 341 and 374 was proper. Periyasami In re, 1995 Cr LJ 1203 (Mad).

Where there was rape trial and accused was correctly identified in identification parade—Conviction was on the basis of prosecutrix evidence—It was held proper. Ram Pal v. State of Haryana, 1995 SCC (Cr) 136 (SC) : 1994 Supp(3) SCC 656.

The evidence of the prosecutrix was self-contradictory and not corroborated. It is highly improbable that accused/two cousins would commit rape on prosecutrix in each other's presence or their uncle. No implicit reliance can be placed on testimony of prosecutrix who is woman of easy virtues and seems to consenting. Conviction set aside. Daler Singh v. State of Haryana, 1995 Cr LJ 614 (P & H).

Held that the allegation of rape was not believed as there was no injury found due to dragging and there was no injury on her private part or elsewhere. Her allegations are likely to be false and do not inspire confidence and are also not corroborated hence conviction set aside. Mangi Ram alias Mangi Lal v. State of Rajasthan, 1995 Cr LR 264 (Raj).

Slight bleeding at introits with vulval tear—Victims mouth gagged— Corroborated by medical report—Offence proved beyond doubt—Plea of consent was rejected. Panna Lall v. State, (1994) 54 Del LT 426.

Medical evidence corroborating testimony of prosecutrix—Hymen of prosecutrix ruptured recently and bleeding—Injuries on her private parts noticed—Committal of rape in hotel room—Accused being stranger to prosecutrix— Offence was fully established against both two accused persons.—Conviction was fully justified. Raju Krishna v. State of Karnataka, (1994) 1 Crimes 156 (SC).

Evidence of victim shall be treated as the evidence of any other person. State of Karnataka v. H.B. Davidas, (1994) 2 Kar LJ 46 (DB).

Medical examination of the prosecutrix was done. It was held that accused should be tested in the circumstances in which the prosecutrix was examined. Mercier Bento Morenas v. State of Goa, (1995) 4 Crimes 532 (Bom).

Prosecutrix was the only evidence only in cases of doubt it requires corroboration. Jagannivasan v. State of Kerala, (1995) 9 OCR 480 (SC).

Where prosecutrix was 40 years old—Witness was her own son—FIR was delayed—Evidence of prosecutrix can not be discarded merely on the ground that no other public independent witness had come into picture—Conviction was upheld. Rehmal v. State of M.P., (1994) 1 Crimes 533 (MP).

Where the charge was of attempt of rape and incident of assault or outrage of women's modesty—Conviction under Sections 170, 376 read with Section 511—Which was challenged in appeal. It was held that appellant was seen holding the prosecutrix an inmate of mental hospital and pulling towards comer and embracing her with dress raised above knee. There was no determined effort to forcefully maintain sexual intercourse. Medical evidence also do not point out any physical effort or violence which appellant might have made. Hence, conviction quashed. However, he was liable to be convicted u/Sec. 354, IPC. Shivaji Tukaram Kurie v. State, (1994) 2 Crimes 516 (Bom).

Where the evidence of prosecutrix is fully corroborated by other evidence on record, there is nothing to disbelieve her statement because corroboration is not sine qua non for a conviction in rape case. Bal Kishan v. State of Haryana, (1995) 3 CC Cases 119 (P&H).

The FIR was lodged after a month. The doctor who medically examined the prosecutrix was not examined by prosecution. The Doctor did not give any definite opinion regarding recent sexual intercourse. No semen was detected from vaginal swab and vaginal smear. Due to these mitigating circumstances sentence for offence under Section 376, IPC reduced from 7 years to period already undergone by the accused. Appeal partly allowed. Saddique Mohd. v. State, 1994 RCC 488.

The testimony of prosecutrix cannot be disbelieved on the ground that there was no injury or her private parts and the hymen was not found ruptured. The non-rupture of hymen or absence of injury on victim private parts does not necessarily belie the version of rape. Pappu and Balwant v. State of Rajasthan, 2000 Cr LJ 1256 (Raj).

In the recent case of Ranjit Hazarika v. State of Assam, (1998) 8 SCC 635, their Lordships have observed as follows :

> "Neither the non ruputure of the hymen nor the absence of injuries on her private parts therefore belies the testimony of the prosecutrix particularly when we find that in the cross-examination of the prosecutrix nothing has been brought out to doubt her veracity or to suggest as to why she would falsely implicate the appellant and put her own reputation at stake."

When offence was committed in dark night—There was appreciation of evidence—Accused recognised in dark night by his voice, stature and feature was conviction on its basis.—It was held that such recognition of accused is very feeble type of evidence and misleading. Not safe to convict accused solely on basis of such evidence of recognition. Mazid Ali v. State of Assam, (1994) 1 Gau LR 196.

Medical evidence and ocular evidence corroborating each other hence accused cannot escape liability merely because the prosecutrix did not offer any resistance. Narayanamma (Km.) v. State of Karnataka, (1995) 1 CCR 53 (SC) : 1994(5) JT 436 : 1994(5) SCC 728 : 1994(3) Scale 879 : 1994(3) Crimes 286.

Failure of 90 to get accused examined was held of no significance when the accused had absconded and was available for examination only the months after the incident. Since he was a married man and had two children. There was no need to get him medically examined to ascertain the capacity to sexually perform. State of Karnatakata v. Revannaiah, 2005 Cr LJ 2676 (Kart.) : AIR 2005 Kant HCR 1255 : 2005(3) All Cri LR 739 : 2005(4) Crimes 268.

The prosecutrix clearly stated that both accused committed rape on her one by one. She further stated that both accused had bite her cheeks and she had also stated that there was injury on her private part and blood was also coming out of it and thereafter she told the whole story to her parents who corroborated the statement of prosecutrix in all material particulars. The prosecutrix was cross examined at length but nothing had come out which affected her testimony. Not only this, the statement of prosecutrix witnesses was further corroborated by medical evidence. There was a clear cut evidence, both medical as well as oral, that rape had been committed on prosecutrix. Moti Chand v. State of Rajasthan 2001 Cr LJ 1916 (Raj) (1923, 1924) : 2001(1) WLC 524 (Raj).

Evidence of prosecutrix not corroborated by medical evidence or any independent witnesses—No hue and cry raised by prosecutrix and her explanation in this respect not believable—The report of chemical examination not produced—When raised adverse inference against prosecution case— There was also an unexplained delay in filing FIR—The conviction therefore was not justified. Koja Ram v. State of Rajasthan, 1995 Cr LJ 1575 (Raj).

When evidence of prosecutrix is reliable and corroborated by evidence of her younger sister who was eye-witness to occurrence, prosecution case proved beyond reasonable doubt. Bhupinder Singh v. State of H.P., 1997 Cr LJ 339 (HP).

It came out from the report of the chemical analyst that on all the articles seized by the police, the same group of semen was found. Even the vaginal swab indicated the presence of semen. The report of the chemical analysis and also the medical examination report supported the case of the prosecutrix. The injuries found on the person of the accused also tallied with the time when the commission of rape was alleged. The prosecutrix was found weeping by her neighbour immediately after the incident and the accused was also found leaving the place at that time. The prosecutrix also complained to the said neighbour about the rape committed on her. In view of such evidences, there was no reason to hold that the case against the respondent had not been established. The acquittal was set aside and it was held that "the incident had taken place long time back and the respodent was then only 19 years old. He is now married and settled in life. In the aforesaid circumstances, he deserves to be leniently dealt with in the matter of sentence. As we are of the view that the accused had betrayed the trust reposed on him by a young girl of 13 years and had committed the heinous crime by ravishing a minor girl forcibly by holding out threats, we do not think that he deserves any leniency in the matter of sentence. State of Haryana v. Jang Bahadur, 1999 Cr LJ 5028 (SC) : 1998 SCC (Cr) 693.

Conviction of accused cannot be based on evidence of prosecutrix totally discredited in cross-examination when confronted with her police statements. Peter Fernandes v. State, 1997 Cr LJ 954: 1997 (1) Crimes 539 (Bom).

In offence of rape while quashing of charge High Court was not justified to seek independent corroboration at that stage and to discharge accused in absence thereof. State of Maharashtra v. Priya Sharan Maharaj, 1997 (1) Crimes 275 (SC) : AIR 1997 (SC) 2041 : 1997(4) SCC 393 : 1997(1) JT 84.

If a forcible rape has been committed there would have been injuries on the body of the prosecutrix. Though the prosecutrix has sated that she sustained injuries on her back when she was forcibly made to lie on the ground. This statement is not corroborated by the medical evidence. She has further stated that the accused in all took 15 minutes to commit the rape. She has stated that blood came out of her vagina when the accused committed rape which stained her clothes, but no blood fell on the ground. This story also is not supported by the report of the FSL. Therefore, the story of forcible rape has to be ruled out. Again it may be mentioned that in the examination-in-chief the prosecutrix has not supported the prosecution but in the cross-examination by the learned public prosecutor, she has stated what she had narrated to the police. The above evidence shows that there was no emission of semen at the time of alleged occurrence and that the prosecutrix had not bled at that time. It may be that the accused might have taken the prosecutrix to the gohara for the purpose of committing sexual intercourse with her consent but might have not been able to commit intercourse because of the above two witnesses reaching there or by any other reason. whatever the case may be, it cannot be said that the sexual intercourse was committed by the accused though he might have gone to the Gohara for committing such an act. The consent of the minor will not be helpfull to the accused if it is proved that there was penetration. However, when the evidence of penetration is found to be doubtful, the discussion of age would become academic. Om Prakash v. State of Haryana, 1999 Cr LJ 94 (P&H).

The medical evidence is ultimately merely a corroborative piece of evidence. By way of ordinary prudence, the court may insist upon the medical evidence to convict the accused of sexual offence. But it is not a hard and fast rule to accpet the version deposed by the prosecutrix. That even in the absence of medical evidence; if the evidence of prosecutrix is found to be otherwise dependable; the conviction could be founded on the sole testimony of the prosecutrix (1996) 2 Guj LR 200). It may also be noted that; in the matter of Harpal Singh v. State of H.P., AIR 1981 SC 361; (1981 Cr LJ 1) the Apex Court has held that the absence of injury on the private parts of the prosecutrix should not rule out her being subjected to rape. The said proposition of law is also followed by the High Court of Bombay in the matter of State of Maharashtra v. Savala Sagu Kokare, 1997 Cr LJ 786.

In the matter of Sate of Maharashtra v. V. K. Jain, (1990) I SCC 550: 1990 Cr LJ 889, while appreciating the evidence of the prosecutrix. The Apex Court has observed vide para 16 of the said matter as under :

> ".....Ordinarily, the evidence of prosecutrix must carry the same weight as is attached to an injured person, who is a victim of violence; unless there are special circumstances; which call for greater caution, in which case it would be safe to act on her testimony; if there is independent evidence lending assurance to her accusations...."

Furthermore; the Apex Court has also observed in the above stated matter that evidence of prosecutrix should be judged in the back-drop of the particular fact-situation in which, she was placed. Absence of resistance by the prosecutrix is required to be viewed in the context of the sense of owe attached to the authority and her helplessness. Generally, an Indian woman would not make false allegations of rape against any person, so as to attach stigma to her character and disrepute to her family. Dilip v. State of Gujarat 1999 Cr LJ 704 (Guj).

12. Duty of Court.—The Court, while convicting and sentencing the accused under Section 376, IPC, should avoid to mention of the victim in judgment. Rasik Khan Asgar Khan v. State of Gujarat, 2005 Cr LJ 1284 : 2005(30) Guj LH 601 : 2005(1) Guj LR 913 : 2005(2) Rec Cri R 694.

Trial in cases of Rape—Duty of Courts. Rape is not merely a physical assault – it is often destructive of the whole personality of the victim. A murderer destroys the physical body of his victim, a rapist degrades the very soul of the helpless female. The Courts, therefore, shoulder a great responsibility while trying an accused on charges of rape. They must deal with such cases with utmost sensitivity. The Courts should examine the broader probabilities of a case and not get swayed by minor contradictions or insignificant discrepancies in the statement of the prosecutrix, which are not of a fatal nature, to throw out an otherwise reliable prosecution case. If evidence of the prosecutrix inspires confidence, it must be relied upon without seeking corroboration of her statement in material particulars. If for some reason the Court finds it difficult to place implicit reliance on her testimony, it may look for evidence which may lend assurance to her testimony, short of corroboration required in the case of an accomplice. The testimony of the prosecutrix must be appreciated in the background of the entire case and the trial Court must be alive to its responsibility and be sensitive while dealing with cases involving sexual molestations. Raju vs. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 858 : 2008 (15) SCC 133 : 2008 (12) JT 457 : 2008 (16) SCR 1078 : 2008 (15) Scale 375 : 2009 (2) SLT 41.

13. Interrogation of victim.—Interrogation of victims, orphan girls of an Ashram in women police station to erase fear psychosis is not breach of Section 160, Cr PC as it was only for their safety and to serve interest of justice. Kamalanatha v. State of T.N., 2005 (3) East Cr C 78 (SC) : AIR 2005 (SC) 2132 : 2005(5) SCC 194 : 2005(5) SCC 194 : 2005(4) JT 170 : 2005(4) Supreme 501 : 2005 SCC (Cr) 1121 : 2005(3) Crimes 24 (SC).

14. Rape and Murder — Evidence.—In the present case where the deceased girl aged 3 years was complained to be missing. Her dead body was found by a young girl in the sugarcane crop. Two little boys informed grandmother of deceased and the family that on 23rd October 1995, while they were burning crackers on the road, they had seen the accused carrying a bag on his shoulder and they had noticed blood dripping from the bag. She, therefore, went to the police station and lodged First Information Report. The High Court disbelieved the evidene of these two child witnesses but the Apex Court observed and held as under : "Even otherwise, their evidence is supported by a number of other circumstances which have been proved by the prosecution. These two child witnesses had seen the respondent going beyond the canal. The dead body was found beyond the canal. They had seen the respondent carrying a jute bag. Next to the dead body a jute bag had been found. It was stained with human blood of group 'B'. In the house of respondent the ground had been found to be freshly covered with cow dung. On the wall of the house, on a newspaper and a quite found in the house, there were blood stains. The blood stains on the newspaper were of group 'B'. At the instance of the respondent his full pant and underwear were recovered from the sugarcane field where he had buried them. They also contained the blood of group 'B'. All these circumstances clearly and unerringly pointed to the guilt of the respondent. These circumstances strongly lend support to the evidence of the two child witnesses. The High Court has wrongly ignored and/or brushed aside these circumstances." State of

Doubtful evidence — Rape and murder. What has been stated above relating to the law on circumstantial evidence, only question to be examined is whether the presence of the injuries on the accused can be held to be sufficient to hold appellant guilty. The trial Court held that the accused was examined on 24.03.1993 by the doctor PW. 3 who found abrasions on the thighs and hip joints of the accused, as the injuries must have been received in a scuffle. This circumstance found supported from the finding of chappals and other articles. It was held that recovery of utensil and chappals of the deceased does not lead to the guilt of the accused but that circumstances show the involvement of the accused who was found to have injuries on the persons corresponding with the injuries on the deceased. The High Court noted as follows :

> "In our considered view, a very strong circumstance which connects the appellant with the commission of offence is the presence of injuries on his person especially thigh and hip joints."
> "This certainly is a very strong circumstance which by itself can be said to be conclusive in its nature pointing towards the guilt of the accused."
>
> "The recovery of chappals, Dolu (steel container) and certain other articles from the fields of the appellant speak volumes of the fact of a strong corroborative circumstance against the appellant."
> "The aforesaid strong circumstances can very well be taken in to account for upholding the conviction of the appellant."

Circumstances on which the trial Court and the High Court had relied to hold the accused guilty by no stretch of imagination can be determinative of the fact that accused was responsible for the commission of rape. Even if it is accepted that the chappals and the utensils were found in the fields of the appellant, the dead body was found by another place i.e. in the field of Sheo Ram.

Above being the position that the judgment of the trial Court affirmed by the High Court cannot be maintained and are set aside. The appeal is allowed. The appellant who is in custody shall be released forthwith unless required to be in custody in connection with any other case. Baldev Singh vs. State of Haryana, AIR 2009 SC 963 : 2008 CrLJ 948 : 2008 (14) SCC 768 : 2009 (2) SLT 243 : 2008 (15) Scale 366 : 2008 (16) SCR 826.

Circumstantial evidence — Chain of circumstances. In the instant case, the deceased went missing when she was playing near her house. Her naked dead body was found lying on public way in front of her neighbours house. She was found to be subjected to rape and died a homicidal death. The appellant accused was seen fleeing away from near the place where the dead body of the deceased was lying. Blood stained frock and blood stained underwear of the deceased concealed in the house of sister of the appellant were recovered pursuant to voluntary disclosure statement made by the appellant while in police custody. Underwear of the appellant seized during the course of investigation was found to be stained with blood and semen. The appellant evidence relating to extra judicial confession made by accused to Ex. Pradhan of village found to be reliable

Held, the cumulative effect of the above mentioned facts taken together is conclusive in establishing the guilt of the appellant. The chain of circumstantial evidence is complete and does not leave any reasonable ground for conclusion consistent with the innocence of the appellant. The chain of circumstances is such as to show that within all human probability the rape and murder of the deceased were committed by the appellant and none else and he had also caused disappearance of evidence of those offences. Further incriminating circumstances proved were put to appellant while recording his statement under Sec. 313 of Criminal Procedure Code. In his further statement, recorded under Sec. 313, the appellant has merely denied the same. Therefore, such denial on the part of the appellant and failure to explain the circumstances proved will have to be treated as an additional link in the chain of circumstances to bring home the charge against the appellant. The circumstances proved establish the guilt of the appellant beyond reasonable doubt. Therefore, conviction of accused not liable to be interfered with. Aftab Ahmad Anasari vs. State of Uttaranchal, AIR 2010 SC 773.

In the instant case, the deceased went missing in the evening of February 5, 1998 when she was playing near her house. Her naked dead body was found at about on Feb. 8, 1998 lying on public way in front of her neighbours house. She was found to be subjected to rape and died a homicidal death. The appellant accused was seen fleeing away from near the place where the dead body of the deceased was lying at about 4.30 a.m. on Feb 8, 1998. Blood stained frock and blood stained underwear of the deceased concealed in the house of sister of the appellant were recovered pursuant to voluntary disclosure statement made by the appellant while in police custody. Underwear of the appellant seized during the course of investigation was found to be stained with blood and semen. The appellant evidence relating to extra judicial confession made by accused to Ex pradhan of village found to be reliable.

Held, the cumulative effect of the abovementioned facts taken together is conclusive in establishing the guilt of the appellant. The chain of circumstantial evidence is complete and does not leave any reasonable ground for conclusion consistent with the innocence of the appellant. The chain of circumstances is such as to show that within all human probability the rape and murder of the deceased were committed by the appellant and none else and he had also caused disappearance of evidence of those offences. Further incriminating circumstances proved were put to appellant while recording his statement u/Sec. 313 of Cr. P.C. In his further statement, recorded under Sec. 313, the appellant has merely denied the same. Therefore, such denial on the part of the appellant and failure to explain the circumstances proved will have to be treated as an additional link in the chain of circumstances to bring home the charge against the appellant. The circumstances proved establish the guilt of the appellant beyond reasonable doubt. Therefore, conviction of accused not liable to be interfered with. Aftab Ahmad Anasari. vs State of Uttaranchal, AIR 2010 SC 773

The prosecutrix, who was gang raped, gave statement to her mother that she was forcibly dragged inside a room by two accused persons and they also committed rape on her. The mother stated that the accused poured kerosene on the victim and set her on fire but in her cross-examination she stated that there was no kerosene oil in the room in which the accused dragged her daughter. Factum of rape on date, time and place alleged by the prosecution was established. But there was nothing to show that the mother tried to save her daughter. The condition of deceased was precarious but she was not taken to the hospital which was only at a distance of one furlong, though a number of persons were present in the house. The Court held that the circumstances lend support to the defence case that there was great probability of the deceased committing suicide. Conviction of accused under Section 302 and 34 was set aside and conviction under Section 376 was maintained. Santosh Kumar v. State of U.P. 2002 Cr LJ 301 (All) : 2001 All LJ 2581.

In Sham Lal v. State of M.P. the entire prosecution case hinged on circumstantial evidence consisting of following circumstances : (a) That the deceased was last seen with the accused who had taken her to his own house/Bada to help in collecting cow-dung cakes called kanda. (b) That on enquiry the accused gave false explanation that the deceased had gone to school. (c) That the trousers belonging to the accused was found on the body of the deceased. (d) That the blood-stained salwar of the deceased was recovered from the field of the accused in the wake of disclosure made by him in police custody; and (e) That presence of blood and human spermatozoa was confirmed on the clothes and public hair of the accused. The circumstance (a) appeared to be after thought. The circumstance (b) that the trousers belonging to the accused was found on the body of the deceased was not proved. Recovery of Salwar also led to no conclusion inasmuch as the same was recovered from an open Bada and on the basis of said recovery it cannot be said with certainty that it was the accused and he alone who knew about it. Again it appeared to be highly unnatural that the accused would leave his own trousers on the body of the deceased and take away her salwar and keep it in his own Bada. As regards stains of human blood on the shirt of the accused and stain of semen on his pubic hair, the Court held so far as the blood stains on the shirt are concerned, it may be stated that origin of the said blood and its group could not be ascertained. Mere presence of blood leads us nowhere as the evidence of blood group alone is conclusive to connect blood stains with the accused. As held in Kansa Behera AIR 1987 SC 1507 : 1987 Cr LJ 1857, no reliance can be placed on such circumstance. As regards the stains of semen on the pubic hair, we find that appellant Shyamlal is a young man of 18 years age. The semen stains on the private parts of a young man can exist because of variety of reasons and would not necessary connect him with the offence of rape.

The prosecution to support its case mainly relied on the oral dying declaration made by the deceased. The defence of the appellant was that the deceased and he were friends and they had love affair among them. The deceased came to his house on that fateful day. Some unknown person came and assaulted and suffered injuries. According to him deceased died on the spot itself. The brother of the deceased was not tolerant of the love affair between him and the deceased and that a false case was foisted against him after due deliberation and consultation. In the absence of explanation as to the serious nature of injuries sustained by the appellant giving rise to serious doubt as to the very genesis of the incident, the said portion of the statement appears to have been inserted after deliberation and consultation. This insertion probabilises the defence version that the appellant and the deceased were in love. The very fact that the deceased was totally naked and underclothes of both the deceased and the appellant were found in the same room probabilises the theory of intercourse by consent and negatives the story of rape. PW 5 did not tolerate his sister having sex with accused. Ronal Kiprono Ramakant v. State of Haryana 2001 Cr LJ 3942.

15. Evidence of deaf and dumb or mentally retarded prosecutrix.—In a case when rape was committed on a deaf and dumb child, the Court held that "a deaf and dumb person may utter something and if he utters something, it does not mean that he was not deaf and dumb. There are so many cases where deaf and dumb person speaks some words or makes other person understand by making gesture. Thus, if child prosecutrix has uttered something in Court, it does not mean that she was not deaf and dumb. Therefore, the testimony of the child prosecurtix which gets corroboration from other sources is reliable". Bhagwania v. State of Rajasthan 2001 Cr LJ 3719 (Raj.)

The instant case was an unfortunate case, where a helpless dumb child had been involved in such an act. The medical evidence clearly supported the version of the prosecution. It was true that except signs and gestures, victim was unable to explain further and the Court after taking necessary assistance was able to understand the evidence of dumb witness, well supported by the evidence of the prosecution witnesses and other witnesses. It was held that though victim was only a dumb witness, in view of the evidence available on record, the prosecution was able to establish the guilt of the accused beyond all reasonable doubt. Devalla Raghavulu v. State of AP, 2005 Cr LJ 1041 (AP) : 2005(2) Andh LT (Cri) AP 9 : 2005(2) Rec Cri R 344.

On a reading of Sections 4 and 5 of Oaths Act, the interpreter as well as the witness both have to be administered oath before the Court proceeds to record evidence of dumb-witness. The Court while resending the evidence of dumb witness must record both signs as well as the interpretation of the interpreter and then only it becomes admissible under the Indian Evidence Act. D.A. Jakati v. State of Karnataka, 2005 Cr LJ 2687 (Kant) : AIR 2005 Kant HCR 1289 : 2005(4) Crimes 382 : 2005(3) Rec Cri R 290 : 2005(2) KCCR 139.

16. Proof of Rape.—The cases involving sexual molestation and assault require a different approach - a sensitive approach and not an approach which a court may adopt in dealing with a normal offence under penal laws. It was also sought to be suggested that there were some disputes between the accused and the father of the prosecutrix over exchange of some land and that is the reason for their implicating the accused. There is nothing reliable on the records to substantiate that aspect. No such suggestion was even put in the cross examination of the father of the prosecutrix. On the facts in hand, it could not be said that the revenge on account of alleged dispute regarding exchange of land would be taken by the father of the prosecutrix by foisting on the accused a false case of rape involving this young daughter particularly in the setting of a village environment. State of Rajasthan v. Om Prakash 2002 Cr LJ 2951 SC : AIR 2002 (SC) 2235 : 2002(3) Crimes 386.

Hymen of the prosecutrix was intact. Perusal of the record would show that FIR was lodged by the prosecutrix herself on the date of the incident at the police station soon after the incident. When she was sent for medical examination, she again narrated rape on her by the appellant before the medical officer which finds place in her medical report. Thus, the testimony of the prosecutrix stands corroborated by her FIR and contents of medical report.

Cumulative reading of the aforesaid would prove beyond shadow of doubt that it was the appellant who had committed offence of rape on minor girl and had completely ravished her.

However, in the case in hand, even without the examination of doctor, the evidence of prosecutrix stands fully corroborated by the evidence of Sub-inspector of the police station who had virtually caught the appellant red-handed. Thus, even if doctor had not been examined it would not throw or completely discard the prosecution story. The evidence of prosecution witnesses is fully trustworthy and there is no reason to doubt genuineness thereof.

It was also contended by learned counsel for the appellant that since hymen of the prosecutrix was found to be intact, therefore, it cannot be said that an offence of rape was committed on her by the appellant. This contention cannot be accepted as offence of rape has been defined in Sec. 375 of the IPC. Wahid Khan vs State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2010 SC 1 : 2009 AIR SCW 7410 : 2010 CrLJ 517 (SC).

Allegation of rape of a girl of 8 years. Doctor found abrasion on the glans penis of the accused but no injury to prepuce. The doctor found that clothes of the victim were stained with blood and mud. She preserved the clothes and handed over the same to the police duly sealed. Blood stains were present on the inner side of thigh supra pubic region and perineum. Labia majora was swollen and stained with blood. There was laceration of right labia majora. This laceration was continued downward with the laceration of posterior commissure and perineum. The margin of the wound was swollen, tender and red on touch. Hymen was lacerated at 6' clock position. Edges of the wound were tender and read on touch. On pressing the abdomen a soft reddish clot came out of the vagina. Bhupinder alias Mohinder Singh v. State of Haryana, 2002 Cr LJ 1286 (P&H) : 2001(4) All Cri LR 460.

Where prosecutrix was subjected to forcible sexual intercourse and commission of rape was proved by medical evidence and the doctor stated that vagina was tender and from the report of chemical analyst, the smear taken from the vagina found to contain semen and spermatozoa which was also detected on her petticoat, it was clear that offense of rape was made out, conviction upheld. Shaik Mehtab v. State of Andhra Pradesh, 2002 Cr LJ 1421(A.P.) : 2001(2) Andh LT (Cri) AP 324.

Where it was not a case of abduction and kidnapping of Nitu by the accused, it is rather a case of Nitu's eloping with the accused, if were not a case of her willingly eloping with the accused, she could have raised hue and cry when she was being taken in a rickshaw to bus stand, Gurgaon. She could have raised hue and cry when she was being taken from Gurgaon to Delhi by bus. She could have raised hue and cry when she was being taken from Gurgaon to Delhi by bus. She could have raised hue and cry when she was being kept in a room at Delhi when other rooms adjoining to that room were in occupation of the people who were residing there. She could have raised hue and cry when she was being kept in a room at Delhi when other rooms adjoining to that room were in occupation of the people who were residing there. She could have raised hue and cry at Bus Stand, Delhi when the accused were proposing to take her to Rai Bareilly. Chand and Another v. state of Haryana 2002 Cr LJ 752 (P&H) : 2002(1) All Cri LR 397.

17. Statement of Prosecutrix.—(a) Proof of Rape and Murder.—It is true that no sign of rape was found by the doctor conducting post-mortem of the deceased but the statement of Km. Anita deceased given to her mother shows that she was forcibly dragged inside a room by two accused persons and they also committed rape on her.

The manner in which rape was committed on her there could be no apparent sign of rape. However, Dr. S. K. Rai (P.W.4), who conducted post-mortem on the dead body of the deceased has mentioned that hymen had old tear scars and vagina allowed 2 fingers. Dr. Rai has clarified in his cross examination that admitting of two fingers into vagina and tearing of hymern would have been for other reasons such as illness or use of insertion of pad etc. Post mortem report indicates that on account of burn injuries and the condition in which the body was produced before the Doctor it was not possible to detect apparent signs of rape. Santosh Kumar and etc. v. State of U.P. 2002 Cr LJ 301 (Allah.) : 2001 All LJ 2581 : 2001(43) All Cri C 888.

Accused took prosecutrix to a school on pretext of giving toffee and raped her. Prosecutrix being a young girl aged 8-9 years at time of incident it is extremely unlikely that she would make false allegation of rape against accused who was residing in same locality. Plea of false implication on account of quarrel with parents of prosecutrix over parking of vegetable carts.

It is by now settled proposition of law by a catena of decisions of the Hon'ble Supreme Court, including Rafiq vs. State of U.P, 1980 CriLJ 1344 = AIR 1981 SC 559 and Bhoginbhai Hirjibhai vs. State of Gujarat AIR 1983 SC 753 = 1983 CriLJ 1096, State vs. Chandra Prakash, AIR 1990 SC 658 = 1990 CriLJ 889, and also the decision in the case of Radhu vs. State of MP, AIR 2007 SC (Supp) 847 relied upon by the learned counsel for the appellant herself that conviction in a case of rape can be based solely upon the uncorroborated evidence of the prosecutrix, which should not be rejected on the basis of minor discrepancies and contradictions, unless there are such facts and circumstances present in a particular case which would persuade the Court to look for corroboration for her testimony. In the present case, there are no such circumstances as would justify looking for the corroboration of the testimony of the prosecutrix. The Court cannot treat the testimony of the prosecutrix in a rape at par with that of an accomplice in a crime which requires corroboration and no infirmity is attached to the testimony if a victim of such a heinous crime. In fact, it would only be adding insult to the injury if the Court insists on corroboration of her testimony, even in the absence of circumstances which would warrant adoption of such a course of action.

In any case, even if the Court does look for corroboration of the testimony of the prosecutrix, the same is available in abundance in the present case. The testimony of the prosecutrix, finds full corroboration not only from the injuries, including torn vagina found on her person when she was examined in the hospital but also from the statement made by her first to her parents and then to the doctor soon after this incident took place. The previous statements of the prosecutrix are admissible in evidence under Section 157 of the Evidence Act and this proposition of law was recognized by the Hon'ble Supreme Court in Madan Lal vs. State of J & K, AIR 1998 SC 386 = 1998 CriLJ 667, where the statement made by the prosecutrix to her mother soon after the incident was accepted as a corroboration of her testimony in the Court.

The appellant had raped the prosecutrix taking advantage of her tender age and taking her to a secluded school which had no watchman and, therefore, he has rightly been convicted under Section 376(f) of Indian Penal Code the age of the prosecutrix at the time of commission of offence being less than 12 years. Hari Om vs. State (NCT). 2010 (2) CrLJ 1281 (Delhi).

Where victim girl was between 18 to 19 years, and according to her she left the house at her own will on the pretext that she was going to her friends home and the accused took him from one place to other and she never raised objection, however she stated that she was raped against her will, was sufficient for conviction of the accused. It was contended that the victim was the consenting party and she was major as well as the doctor did not find any sign of rape and as such the offence under Section 376 of the Indian Penal Code is not made out. It is also argued that the victim girl was under menstrurating period and so the question of rape does not arise. It is also the question of rape does not arise. It is also argued that the brother-in-law and one Bapi had gone to Calcutta to trace out the girl, so there was no possibility for the appellant to commit rape on her. The submission of the learned counsel have got no substance in view of the fact that the victim girl very consistently and emphatically stated about committing rape forcibly which finds support from the evidence collected as the victim was kept confined in the room for such a long period. Ranjeet Lohra v. The State of Bihar, 2002 Cr LJ 329. (Jhar.) : AIR 2002 Jhar HCR 33.

Where Eight year old girl was raped and throttled to death which was proved by medical evidence and there were semen stains on private parts of the accused absence of injury mark on the private part of the accused will be of no consequence. Prosecution case is afflicted infirmity which the court below seems to have ignored or attached no due importance thereto, Dr. Patidar (PW 25) besides performing autopsy of the body of the deceased had also examined appellant accused Shyamlal. He has clearly opined that accused appellant is a fully developed man capable of committing sexual intercourse. However, he did not find any mark of injury on his private part. Rape in question was committed on a girl aged 8 years who was virgin and whose hymen was intact. Normally, when such a girl is subjected to rape by a fully developed man, there are likely to be injuries on the male organ of the man. No such injury was, however, detected by the Doctor on the male organ of the appellant. "Absence of such injuries." observed the Supreme Court in Rahim Beg (AIR 1973 SC 343, "on the male organ of the accused would thus point to his innocence." The FSL Report revealed no stains of blood or semen on the stray on which the alleged rape was committed, therefore guilt of the accused was not established beyond reasonable doubt. Shyamlal v. State of M.P. 2002 Cr LJ 344 (MP).

(b) Circumstantial Evidence.—The accused, a labourer alleged to have committed rape on a 3 year old girl whose father was employed for some construction. It was also supported by medical evidence. It is well-established rule in criminal jurisprudence that circumstantial evidence can be reasonably made the basis of an accused person's conviction, if it is of such a character that the same is wholly inconsistent with innocence of the accused and is consistent only with his guilt. The incriminating circumstances for being used against the accused must be such as to lead only to a hypothesis of guilt and reasonably exclude every possibility of innocence of the accused. In a case of circumstantial evidence, the whole endeavour and effort of the court should be to find out whether the crime was committed by the accused and the circumstances proved from themselves into a complete chain unerringly pointing to the guilt of the accused. If the circumstances proved against the accused in a case are consistent either with the innocence of the accused or with his, guilt, he is entitled to the benefit of doubt. Subhash v. State of Haryana. 2002 Cr LJ 398 (P & H).

Circumstantial evidence—Last seen evidence.—In last seen theory, an element of identification is an important and strong factor. If either of the party i.e., culprit or the victim was not identified by a witness of lastly seen saying that they were in the company of each other, the circumstance of last seen fails because in that case it would not be established by the prosecution that who accompanied whom. If in a case based on last seen together, the identity of the culprit or the victim is doubtful or is not established beyond reasonable doubt, the circumstance shall not be held to be proved and the conviction based on such circumstance cannot be sustained. In the present case, the prosecution has failed to prove that it was the deceased who was accompanying the accused on his bicycle on the fateful day. Therefore, the guilt of accused was not proved beyond all reasonable doubt and he was entitled to get benefit of doubt. Sheo Kumar v. State of Chhattisgar, 2009 CriLJ 3165 (Chha).

In the instant case, the deceased went missing when she was playing near her house. Her naked dead body was found lying on public way in front of her neighbours house. She was found to be subjected to rape and died a homicidal death. The appellant accused was seen fleeing away from near the place where the dead body of the deceased was lying. Blood stained frock and blood stained underwear of the deceased concealed in the house of sister of the appellant were recovered pursuant to voluntary disclosure statement made by the appellant while in police custody. Underwear of the appellant seized during the course of investigation was found to be stained with blood and semen. The appellant evidence relating to extra judicial confession made by accused to Ex. Pradhan of village found to be reliable

Held, the cumulative effect of the above mentioned facts taken together is conclusive in establishing the guilt of the appellant. The chain of circumstantial evidence is complete and does not leave any reasonable ground for conclusion consistent with the innocence of the appellant. The chain of circumstances is such as to show that within all human probability the rape and murder of the deceased were committed by the appellant and none else and he had also caused disappearance of evidence of those offences. Further incriminating circumstances proved were put to appellant while recording his statement under Section 313 of Criminal Procedure Code. In his further statement, recorded under Section 313, the appellant has merely denied the same. Therefore, such denial on the part of the appellant and failure to explain the circumstances proved will have to be treated as an additional link in the chain of circumstances to bring home the charge against the appellant. The circumstances proved establish the guilt of the appellant beyond reasonable doubt. Therefore, conviction of accused not liable to be interfered with. Aftab Ahmad Anasari vs. State of Uttaranchal, AIR 2010 SC 773.

In the instant case, the deceased went missing in the evening of February 5, 1998 when she was playing near her house. Her naked dead body was found at about on Feb. 8, 1998 lying on public way in front of her neighbours house. She was found to be subjected to rape and died a homicidal death. The appellant accused was seen fleeing away from near the place where the dead body of the deceased was lying at about 4.30 a.m. on Feb 8, 1998. Blood stained frock and blood stained underwear of the deceased concealed in the house of sister of the appellant were recovered pursuant to voluntary disclosure statement made by the appellant while in police custody. Underwear of the appellant seized during the course of investigation was found to be stained with blood and semen. The appellant evidence relating to extra judicial confession made by accused to Ex pradhan of village found to be reliable.

From evidence on record, the following circumstances have surfaced :—

1. The deceased was missing from 3/3.30 p.m. of 11.12.2002;
2. She was last seen with the appellant in the counter of his studio, which was adjacent to his residence;

3. She was wearing a pair of silver bangles (churi) and jangia (panty);
4. Earlier also, she used to visit the said tenanted premises and meet the appellant, whom she called 'Kaku' (uncle), who was well-known to the deceased;
5. The accused procured a carton from the witness, in the morning the day the said deceased disappeared;
6. The dead body of the deceased was found folded in the said carton;
7. In the said carton, along with the dead body, a piece of check cloth (Lungi) and a part of the newspaper (Dainik Sambad), dated 16.09.2002, was found;
8. The bangles (Churis), which the deceased used to wear, were not available with the dead body;
9. Similar/identical portion of the cloth, which was found with the dead body, was also recovered from the studio of the accused by the police, on being produced by him, in presence of witnesses;
10. The other part of the said newspaper was recovered from the studio of the accused on being produced by him, before the police, in presence of witnesses;
11. The bangles (churis), which were used by the deceased immediately prior to her disappearance and which were not available with her dead body, came to be recovered from the studio of the accused on being produced by him, before the police, in presence of witnesses. The said seized bangles were identified to be the bangles used by the deceased;
12. The deceased sustained injury on her vagina, causing destruction of hymen and making an opening into the abdominal cavity, through which loops of small intestine protruded out. This injury, in the opinion of the Medical Officer, was caused due to forceful penetration of adult erect penis;
13. All the injuries were ante-mortem and there was no post-mortem injury;
14. There was some nail marks on the cheeck of the deceased due to smothering;
15. The death, in the opinion of the Medical Officer, who performed, the autopsy, was caused due to combined effect of asphyxia caused by smothering and shock as a result of penetration of the penis causing the injuries, above mentioned;
16. Post-mortem examination was done at 1.15 p.m. on 13.01.2003. The deceased was missing from 3/3.30 p.m. of 11.12.2002. The approximate time of death, with variation by few hours, as per the medical evidence, was 54 to 60 hours. From 3 p.m. of 11.12.2002 to 1 p.m. of 13.12.2002, there was a time gap of around 46 hours. As there cannot be any definite opinion regarding the exact time of death, the said medical opinion indicates that the victim died around 3/3.30 p.m. or immediately thereafter i.e. after she was seen with the appellant in his studio.

In the case of Sarad Birdhichand Sarda vs. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1984 SC 1622, the Supreme Court, while discussing a few decisions on the nature, character and essential proof required in a criminal case, which rests on circumstantial evidence and also referring to the most fundamental and basic decision of the Apex Court in Hanumant vs. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1952 SC 343 = 1953 Cri LJ 129 = 1952 SCR 1091, laid down the following golden principles, which were termed as Panchashil :

(i) The circumstances from which the conclusion of guilt is to be drawn should be fully established. It may be noted here that this Court indicated that the circumstances concerned 'must' or 'should' and not 'may be' established. There is not only a grammatical but a legal distinction between 'may be proved' and 'must be or should be proved' as was held by this Court in Shivaji Sahebrao Bobade vs. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1973 SC 2622 = 1973 Cri LJ 1783 = 1973 (2) SCC 793, where the following observations were made :

"certainly, it is primary principle that the accused must be and not merely may be guilty before a Court can convict and the mental distance between 'may be' and 'must be' is long and divides vague conjectures from sure conclusions.

(ii) The fact so established should be consistent only with the hypothesis of the guilt of the accused, that is to say, they should not be explainable on any other hypothesis except that the accused is guilty.

(iii) The circumstances should be of a conclusive nature and tendency.

(iv) They should exclude every possible, hypothesis except the one to be proved and,

(v) There must be a chain of evidence so complete as not to leave any reasonable ground for the conclusion consistent with the innocence of the accused and must show that in all human probability the act must have been done by the accused".

The circumstances, as revealed from the evidence on records, must form a complete chain pointing to the guilt of the accused to the exclusion of any other hypothesis. Keeping in mind the said principles of law, laid down by the Apex Court, we deem it appropriate to examine if the circumstances emerging from the evidence on record constitute a complete chain leading to the conclusion not consistent with the innocence of the accused.

In the light of specific medical evidence regarding rape and in view of the evidence that the accused was a full grown adult person, his non-examination by medical officer and non-forensic examination of the wearing apparels of the deceased were not fatal. The said Medical Officer ruled out that forceful penetration on a 7 years minor would always cause injury to the penis. He also made it clear that spermatozoa can be detected only in respect of living female within 48 hours and that as the dead body had already started decomposition he made to report regarding presence of spermatozoa. There is also clear medical evidence to show that there was penetration of male genital organ into the vagina of the deceased. Therefore non-forensic examination of the wearing garments of the deceased and non-medical examination of the apparels was not fatal to the prosecution. Hence, we do not find force in the contention of the learned defence Counsel on this point.

Regarding the last seen theory also, there is the unimpeachable evidence of witnesses. There is nothing to hold that the said witnesses had any reason or grudge to falsely depose against the accused. From their evidence, it appear that the said witnesses had their shops in front of the studio of the appellant and that the said studio was visible from their respective shops. They are found to be natural witnesses. No contradiction could be established to be lie their evidence. Hence, we find sufficient positive evidence that the accused and the deceased were seen together by. There is nothing on record to show that after the deceased was seen with the accused, she was found with any other person. Hence, we do not find substance in the contention that the evidence, regarding last seen theory, was false and concocted.

It is the natural instinct of a person to try to save himself, as such, in the present case also, the accused, after committing the death of the deceased, in the alleged manner, tried to dispose of the dead body by putting the same in the carton with a view to remove the evidence against him.

This case does not fall within the category of "the rarest of the rare case". Therefore, in our view, it is not a case, where extreme penalty of death should be imposed. We have no hesitation in holding that imposition of punishment of rigorous imprisonment for life would be sufficient to meet the ends of justice. Accordingly, the death penalty is commuted to rigorous imprisonment for life. The appellant, therefore, instead of being awarded the death penalty, is hereby sentenced to undergo imprisonment for life for the offence under Section 302, IPC. Samir Bhowmik vs. State of Tripura, 2010 (3) Cri LJ 3018 (Gau).

(c) Proof of Gang Rape.—Allegation that victim was girl of 16 years, and was lured abducted and subjected to gang rap age of the girl proved not below 16 years, there was no violence or injury mark on the body and private parts of prosecutrix. Therefore it was case of sexual intercourse by consent.

It is also really surprising, as it appears from the own evidence that she never disclosed to Sushanta with whom she stayed for 15/ 16 days about her forcible rape by Haradhan who according to prosecutrix raped her twice. Firstly, when she initially went with Sushanta from Mela on being asked to follow her at dagger point, Haradhan joined Sushanta and after talk with him as Sushanta went a little away, Haradhan committed rape on her and again for second time he forcibly raped her in the house of Shillong Mog, P.W. 9, during the absence of Sushanta that also for a considerable time, according to the prosecutrix, but it would have been accepted as quite natural if she would have mentioned about such forcible rape on her by Haradhan to Sushanta. The story narrated by the prosecutrix clearly depicts that she did not put any resistance to such action rather she enjoyed such coitus. Shri Sushanta alias Tutun Chakraborty alias Bhattacharjee etc. v. State of Tripura, 2002 Cr LJ 195 (Guj.) : 2002(1) Gau LR 400.

Once it is found that version of the prosecutrix is worth reliance, then it goes without saying that the offence of rape is duly proved. Balaji Laxman Itkar and Anr. v. State of Maharashtra, 2008 CriLJ 3224 (Bom).

Accused persons compelled prosecutrix to enter inside structure called Khooni Darwaja and robbed her and thereafter appellant accused raped her by stripping her and continuously threatened her with knife. Testimony of prosecutrix, truthful and reliable.

The injuries on the body of accused MLC have not been explained by accused and the said injuries also suggest that accused had knelt on a hard surface and had pressed his knees. This would have happened if accused either exercised by shifting his weight on his knees or indulged in sexual intercourse with a girl lying below. The injury on the right cheek of accused has not been explained by him.

The report shows that the DNA fingerprint isolated from the blood sample of accused matched the fingerprints isolated from the sanitary pad.

This Court need to note no further qua his involvement in the crime of criminally intimidating prosecutrix using a knife to rob her and thereafter raping her. Amit vs. State, 2010 (3) Cri LJ 3154 (Del).

The question of identification is, to our mind, the determining factor in this case. In the FIR the prosecutrix has named four of the accused as having committed rape on her, they being Nandoo, Bindu, Pintoo and Raju. PW. 8, who was unsure, as to the identity of the accused, however, stated that she knew Nandoo, Pyaru, Pawan, Pintoo and Raju but conceded that she had not known any of the accused at the time of the incident but after the police had enquired about the names of the boys in her presence, she had come to know who they were. It is also significant that the Court had recorded a note that even after she had named the five accused she had been able to identify only Pawan and she had not been able to identify any of the other accused. She also stated that some of the boys had been arrested on the day of the incident and that she had been called to visit the police station several times to identify them and that the police had often threatened her and her daughter that if they did not come to the police station they would file a case against them. In the last paragraph of her examination-in-chief PW. 8 clearly stated that she was not in a position to identify the boys at the time of incident or even in Court. It is significant that the prosecutrix, her mother and all the accused were residents of Ruabandha and as per the prosecutrix's evidence she was aware of the identity of only a few of them whom she had named in the FIR. It is also significant that in her examination-in-chief the prosecutrix stated that at the time when she had been taken away on the Luna she did not know the names of the accused who were taking her away and that she was not personally acquainted with any of the boys at the time of incident and did not know their names and was not in a position to recognize them. In paragraph 46 of the evidence, this is what she had to say :

> "Police personnel had taken me to Police Station at about 2.30 O'clock in the night. Immediately after lodging the report there, they came at the place of occurrence taking me there and had got identified the accused persons having taken them out of their houses. Then the police personnel had taken the accused persons also at the Police Station. In that night nine boys had been brought having arrested. Remaining five boys had been brought by the police on the second day. I had identified those also in the Police Station.
> After arrest of nine-ten boys, they had taken near the house where incident had taken place and they had asked to identify the remaining boys. Then I had identified 4-5 boys from that crowd. I had gone to the Police Station having sit in Daga with all those boys. Witness now states that 2-3 boys had been arrested from the houses, remaining 6-7 boys had been arrested from Dance site, remaining 4-5 boys had been brought having arrested on the second day.
> I had not gone to the houses of the boys for identification. Police personals had called them in the hotel and I used to identify them there."

We are of the opinion that in the light of the categorical statements of the two main prosecution witnesses, the identification of the accused is extremely doubtful. Raju vs. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 858 : 2008 (15) SCC 133 : 2008 (12) JT 457 : 2008 (16) SCR 1078 : 2008 (15) Scale 375 : 2009 (2) SLT 41.

Accused persons allegedly took victim away and committed rape on her. The evidence of victim to the aforementioned extent is cogent and convincing and has been corroborated by her brother who not only is a witness of the events which took place immediately prior to the actual occurrence of rape but also a witness to the scene of occurrence where he found his sister lying naked in an unconscious state.

The material objects were found to have semen stains. The accused were also tested as regards proof of potency and the doctors who examined them categorically came to the conclusion that they were not incapable of committing sexual intercourse. There may be some inconsistency as pointed by Mr. Viswanathan with regard to recovery of the clothes or sending the same for chemical examination, but our findings on the aforementioned grounds, in our opinion, are sufficient to prove the common intention on the part of accused. Viswanathan and Ors. v. State, Rep. by Inspector of Police, Tamil Nadu, AIR 2008 SC 2222 : 2008 (6) SCR 1222 (SC) : 2008 (5) SCC 354 : 2008 (5) JT 629 (SC) : 2008 (6) Scale 462 (SC) : 2008 (4) SLT 795 (SC) : 208 (6) SRJ 41 (SC) : 2008 (2) SCC (Cr) 593 : 2008 (2) Recent CR 888 (SC).

The learned State Counsel has, however, placed special emphasis on the fact that the underwear handed over by the accused to the Investigating Officer were found by the chemical examiner to be stained with semen which corroborated the prosecution story. In the light of the fact that we have found the identification of the accused to be doubtful, the recovery of the underwear becomes meaningless. But we have nevertheless chosen to examine this submission as well. In this connection, we have gone through the evidence of Durga Prasad Shukla PW. 10, the Investigating Officer. We notice that the underwear of some of the accused had been produced by them on 29.12.1986 whereas the remaining accused had likewise produced their underwear on 02.01.1987. We find it some what difficult to believe that the accused had themselves provided the evidence of having committed rape soon after the incident, and even more surprising, that some of them had done so three days after the incident. The recovery of the stained underwear is a factor which, by itself, cannot support a case of rape against the accused. Raju vs. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 858 : 2008 (15) SCC 133 : 2008 (12) JT 457 : 2008 (16) SCR 1078 : 2008 (15) Scale 375 : 2009 (2) SLT 41.

Common intention. A bare reading of Section 375 makes the position clear that rape can be committed only by a man. The section itself provides as to when a man can be said to have committed rape. Section 376(2) makes certain categories of serious cases of rape as enumerated therein attract more severe punishment. One of them relates to "gang rape". The language of Sub-section (2)(g) provides that "whoever commits gang rape" shall be punished etc. The Explanation only clarifies that when a woman is raped by one or more in a group of persons acting in furtherance of their common intention each such person shall be deemed to have committed gang rape within this Sub-section (2). That cannot make a woman guilty of committing rape. This is conceptually inconceivable. The Explanation only indicates that when one or more persons act in furtherance of their common intention to rape a woman, each person of the group shall be deemed to have committed gang rape. By operation of the deeming provision, a person who has not actually committed rape is deemed to have committed rape even if only one of the group in furtherance of the common intention has committed rape. "Common intention" is dealt with in Section 34 IPC and provides that when a criminal act is done by several persons in furtherance of the common intention of all, each of such persons is liable for that act in the same manner as if it was done by him alone. "Common intention" denotes action in concert and necessarily postulates a pre-arranged plan, a prior meeting of minds and an element of participation in action. The acts may be different and vary in character, but must be actuated by the same common intention, which is different from same intention or similar intention. The sine qua non for bringing in application of Section 34 IPC that the act must be done in furtherance of the common intention to do a criminal act. The expression "in furtherance of their common intention" as appearing in the Explanation to Section 376(2) relates to intention to commit rape. A woman cannot be said to have an intention to commit rape. Therefore, the Counsel for the appellant is right in her submission that the appellant cannot be prosecuted for alleged commission of the offence punishable under Section 376(2)(g). State of Rajasthan vs. Hemraj, AIR 2009 SC 2644 : 2009 (12) SCC 403 : 2009 (2) Crimes 332 (SC) : 2009 (6) JT 87 : 2009 (6) SCR 1123 : 2009 (6) Scale 586 : 2009 (3) Supreme 698.

Accused persons raped a girl aged 14 years. After going through the entire prosecution case, Court finds that the evidences of witnesses have fully supported the prosecution case that in the night of occurrence when the victim had gone out of her house for easing and coming back to her house she was caught hold by the accused. Bablu Singh alias Surya Deo Singh of Rehla committed rape upon her by force. Doctor has also found that the victim girl was a minor aged about 14 years and there was sign of rape. She had external injury on her hand and back which she had alleged was caused when by force the accused threw her on the ground and committed forceful rape, then she received injuries on her back and hand. The doctor also found injury on her private part, which was caused by forceful penetration by erected penis.

The Investigating Officer has also supported the prosecution case and as such, in my opinion, the learned trial Court rightly convicted the appellant, Bablu Singh alias Surya Deo Singh of Rehla.

However, as far as the appeal filed by co-accused is concerned, the informant has only alleged that he was present with the main accused, there is no allegation that he also instigated co-accused to commit rape upon the victim girl, nor he touched her or even attempted to commit any offence against her as per her statement when the main accused after closing her mouth dragged her to the field behind the wall of Mahabir Sao. He did not go behind him rather he stayed in the lane. There is no allegation that even after the occurrence when was giving threat to the victim girl, he simply went away. In that view of the matter, there is no allegation of either committing rape or helping the main accused in committing rape only because he was standing in the lane. The victim, thought that he was guarding the occurrence. Bablu Singh alias Surya Deo Singh and Anr. vs. State of Jharkhand, 2010 (1) Cri LJ 622 (Jhar).

18. Plea of alibi.—Where alibi pleaded by accused, supported by evidence of defence witnesses was not considered by trial Court while convicting accused on the basis of suspicion, on proved facts the High Court rightly set aside conviction of accused. State v. Shyam Raj, 2004 CrLJ 377 (SC) : 2003(4) Crimes 410 : 2003(8) JT 287 : 2003(11) SCC 207 : 2004 SC CriR 1205 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 79 : 2003(7) Supreme 669.

19. Probation.—Where there was appeal by state for enhancement of sentence which was also against acquittal under Sections 376 and 406. In absence of medical evidence to substantive charge of rape or any mark of resistance finding of acquittal not to be lightly interfered. Conviction under Section 498-A maintained and as factum of dowry demand not corroborative, benefit of Section 4 of Probation of Offenders Act extended. Radha Through State v. Khajan Singh, (1995) 1 CCR 104 (Raj).

20. Acquittal.—When there was carnal intercourse and rape leading to—Murder—Conviction under Section 376, IPC was challenged in appeal. The case rested only on circumstantial evidence. Except the circumstance that deceased was last seen in company of A-1 nothing more was established. Hence prosecution failed to establish the guilt of the accused for all alleged offence. Acquittal. Pillai, Vittal v. State of A.P., (1995) 2 ALT (Cr) 23 (AP).

House trespass and rape. Brother-in-law entered house of victim lady and committed rape on her. There was some dispute with appellant and prosecutrix with regard to partition of family properties. Medical evidence does not support her version that appellant raped her. Further no sign of any injury of any kind was found on her person. Prosecution tried to exaggerate and develop story from one stage to other and further delay of 11 days in lodging FIR was not explained. Held, therefore appellant is entitled to be acquitted. Elbish Guriya vs State of Jharkhand, 2010 (4) CriLJ 4014 (Jhar).

Two eye-witnesses examined by the prosecution who happen to be the brother and the friend of the deceased did not support the prosecution version and resiled from their statement made during investigation. Therefore, the residual question is the acceptability of two dying declarations. The trial Court did not place any reliance on the dying declarations.

The discrepancy pointed by the trial Court is that in Exh. PD there is mention about one incident of rape on her on 28.07.1989 in a hotel at Sector 22 Chandigarh by Honey and two other accused. She does not state in the dying declaration in Ex PJ that she was raped on July 17th and stated that accused Honey had simply taken her to Rose Garden. In Exh. PJ she does not mention the date of the first incident as July 17th but states that her friend Rajni was also with her and they were taken to some unknown hotel while Honey raped her and accused Longoal raped Rajni. She also did not mention the second incident to have taken place on 28th July and stated that it was 2/3 days ago and not yesterday, when the boys took them to a hotel in Sector 22 and raped them. There are several inconsistencies and contrediations in the Exh. PD1 and PJ1.

Above being the position, when two Courts on analysis of the evidence found the respondents not guilty, there is no scope for interference in this appeal. The reasons indicated by the trial Court and affirmed by the High Court discarding the two dying declarations do not suffer from any infirmity. The appeal fails and is dismissed. State of Punjab vs. Chatinder Pal Singh, AIR 2009 SC 974 : 2008 (16) SCR 23 : 2008 (15) Scale 359.

Where the appellant, a police constable alleged to have committed rape on minor girl of 16 years age while in police custody—Report lodged after two days. Prosecutrix not narrating incident to her parents next day when she met them. This being most unnatural. Another by present in same room where incident occurred not examined and her statement not corroborated. Conviction of appellant not sustainable. Baburao Ramdas Padgil v. State of Maharashtra, (1995) 4 Crimes 15 (Bom) (DB).

In a case, it was alleged that the accused took the victim to a sugarcane field and ravished her and then fled away. Evidence showed that there was long standing enmity between accused and the prosecution witnesses in the case were interested witnesses. Medical evidence did not show any injury of violence on her person or any injury on her private part. The conviction of evidence was set aside. Bodho Sah v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 4215 (Jhar) : AIR 2003 Jhar HCR 1162 : 2003(2) Crimes 151 : 2003(2) JCR Jha 213 : 2003(2) JLJR 316.

Where just after alleged incident of rape, prosecutrix went to village Mukhiya to report instead of going home then in absence of any medical evidence to suggest that rape was actually committed, accused acquitted. Banarasi Singh v. State of Bihar, 2005 Cr LJ 1532 (Jhar) : AIR 2005 Jhar HCR 241 : 2004(1) East Cri C 364.

There was delay in lodging FIR and victim had not suffered any bodily injury. The victim had raised the alarm only after accused went away from her house. It was held that prosecution had failed to prove its case beyond doubt and acquittal of accused was proper. State of Karnataka v. *Masitta P.P. The appellant was alleged to have committed rape on prosecutrix in the night in her house. Evidence showed that both were neighbours and appellant was paralysed from both his lower limbs and could not stand or walk without support. Looking to the disabled condition of appellant it was clear that his act of intercourse with prosecutrix was a consenting act. The conviction was held not proper as prosecution had failed to prove its case beyond reasonable doubt. Bhan Singh Lodhi v. State, 2003 Cr LJ (NOC) 287 (MP) : 2003(1) Jab LJ 310 : 2003(2) MPHT 170.

The accused allegedly raped & killed his own daughter of 6 years of age, but investigation was tainted as extra-judicial confession of accused was result of manipulation and creation of investigation officer to fix criminal liability upon accused. It was held that guilt was not proved beyond doubt and conviction was not proper. State v. Rewa Singh, 2003 Cr LJ NOC 235 (P&H) : 2003(1) P&H 180.

In an Orissa case, woman was habituated to sexual intercourse. No mark of injury was found on her person. Medical and chemical examination report also did not support testimony of prosecutrix. Prosecutrix did not shout for help nor sent words to her husband immediately after incident. It was held that accused was entitled to benefit of doubt. Sania Jani v. State, 2004 Cr LJ 226 (Orissa) : 2003(2) Crimes 449 : 2003(25) OCR 433 : 2003(1) Orissa LR 569.

It was alleged by the prosecutrix that she was raped by the accused on threat of putting her parents to death. The accused was tenant in her house and she complained to her mother after he had left the place. The statement of prosecutrix was held unreliable and, therefore, accused was acquitted on benefit of doubt. Devanand v. State (NCT of Delhi), 2003 Cr LJ 242 (Del) : 2003(102) DLT 708 : 2003(66) DRJ 703 : 2003(1) Rec Cri R 771.

The incident had taken place in Jawar field but none of standing crop was disturbed although whole drama lasted for one hour. Except evidence of victim no other supporting evidence was available and medical evidence of very weak nature indicated that only minor injury on leg of victim was caused and that was not connected with sexual assault. It was held that prosecution version was unreliable and acquittal of accused was proper. State v. Basappa, 2003 Cr LJ 4146 (Kant); Dukhharan Mandal v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 4248 (Jhar) : AIR 2003 Jhar HCR 1264 : 2003(3) East Cri C 269.

The accused allegedly raped an aged lady while she was returning to her sasural with her child. He confessed his crime when two lathi blows were given to him. It was held that confession would be said to have been obtained under threat of assault and pressure and accused was entitled to acquittal as no woman of matured age could easily be overpowered and raped without any protest. Malindo Marandi v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 4431 (Jhar) : AIR 2003 Jhar HCR 1264.

Except prosecution statement that she was raped forcibly against her will no other corroborative evidence was available. There was no sign of injury on person of prosecutrix and three was 3 or 4 days unexplained delay in filing of FIR and no seizure of garments was effected. It was held that no conviction could be based on unreliable solitary statement of prosecution. Jogi Dass v. State, 2004 Cr LJ 1926 (Raj).

Where there was conviction under Section 376 and sentenced to 7 years RI and fine of Rs. 1,000/-. Appeal under Section 374, Cr.P.C. which was challenged of.—The prosecutrix stated that the accused persons was not the offender but on further questioning, she pointed him as such. She was declared hostile No identification parade was arranged. Such vacillating statement does not inspire confidence. Hence, conviction is set aside. Kishore Singh v. State of Rajasthan, 1994 Cr LR (Raj) 537.

Where the charge was of committing rape when prosecutrix was alone in the house and was convicted under Section 376, IPC and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for 10 years. Revision petition was filed.—The prosecutrix was below 16 years. The medical evidence not supporting case of rape. The complaint was written by prosecutrix herself immediately after incident with details and particulars which suggests it was written after full deliberation. There was no evidence to prove that the accused has committed rape hence, entitled for acquittal and is acquitted. Sundaram alias Balasundaran v. State, 1994 Cr LJ 2490 (Mad).

The accused who was in love with prosecutrix, raped the accused due to some difference. The prosecutrix was also in love with accused. Letter written by prosecutrix to the accused showed that the prosecutrix was forced to file complaint against the accused. The accused was assaulted by the cousin before the incident and former had filed complaint against the later. There was discrepancy in statement of prosecutrix and her cousin brother and medical report did not support the prosecution case. It was held that the accused was entitled to acquittal. Teenu Kanta Vardhan v. State, 2003 Cr LJ (NOC) 175 (AP) : 2003(1) ALD (Crl) 906 : 2003(2) Andh LT (Cri) AP 490.

The prosecutrix was allegedly raped by the respondent in whose flat she was working as a domestic maid. Evidence showed that she did not lodge FIR soon after the incident nor made any hue and cry at the time or after the occurrence of the incidence. The prosecutrix also had taken bath and washed her clothes knowing it well that this would cause disappearance of evidence of rape. The acquittal of accused on these facts was held proper as conduct of prosecutrix was unnatural and her testimony being uncorroborated was unreliable. Vimal Suresh Kamble v. Cheluverapinake Apal, SP, 2003 Cr LJ 910 (SC).

The accused forcibly took the girl to the field, raped her and strangulated her to death. The witnesses were not reliable as they had not stated about basis of prosecution case in their statements. It was alleged that the accused took to one house and forcibly raped her. Medical examination report showed no visible mark of external or internal injury. There was property related dispute between husband and wife who had tried to falsely implicate the husband on charge of raping his own daughter. It was seen that wife with collusion of daughter wanted to compel accused husband to part with money he had received by selling certain portion of his estate. The acquittal of accused was held proper. State v. PA Bidappa, 2004 Cr LJ (NOC) 37 (Kant) : AIR 2003 Karn HCR 52 : 2003(4) KCCR 2888.

It was alleged by the prosecutrix that the accused gagged her mouth with a towel and raped her. In the cross-examination the doctor stated that the prosecutrix was habituated for sexual intercourse. There were no marks of violence in or around the external genitals or redness around the external genitals. There were no injuries on thigh, back, legs, face, chest etc. The Doctor did not find and physical signs of rape. There was no other evidence to corroborate version of the prosecution. The accused was held entitled to benefit of doubt. Anmula Raji Reddy v. State of AP, 2005 Cr LJ 220 (AP) : 2005(3) Cur CriR 135 : 2005(3) JKJ 351.

Where the intention was to deceive victim girl—Accused sexually exploited victim and was caught red handed—Accused promised to marry her—But on coming to know that victim was pregnant, he failed to keep promise—Hence subsequent conduct of accused makes it clear that only to escape from punishment he promised to marry her and it exposes his mens rea that his promise was false to his knowledge. Conviction under Section 417 upheld though acquitted for offence under Section 376. John Bosco v. State, (1995) 2 LW (Cr) 661 (Mad).

The accused was alleged to have raped a minor girl of 12 years and made a confessional statement before the Magistrate when brought from police custody. The doctor who examined the victim girl and accused did not find any injury on private parts of both of them. The accused was a poor illiterate man his statement was recorded in printed form and signature of accused was obtained. It was held that the order of conviction was liable to be set aside. Shri Lalhunpuia v. State of Mizoranm, 2004 Cr LJ 3447 (Gau) : 2004(2) Crimes 165 : 2004(3) Gauhati LR 196 : 2004(3) Rec Cri R 205.

Prosecutrix stated that she had been paid rupees 50/- on earlier occasions by the accused and she also had taken tea with him but she never stated that she was forcibly raped by the accused. The father of the prosecutrix discovering that she was involved with accused after due deliberations had lodged report implicating him. It was held that prosecutrix being married, medical evidence was of no relevance and it was unsafe to rely upon the testimony of prosecutrix to convict the accused. Mohan Lal v. State of Rajasthan, 2003 Cr LJ 862 (SC) : AIR 2003 (SC) 698 : 2003(2) Crimes 501 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1383 : 2003(2) East Cri C 144 : 2003(2) Rec Cri R 782.

Identity of accused was not established and the prosecution failed to produce record relating to the Test Identification parade. The prosecutrix failed to give features enabling identification of accused. Medical evidence was also not conclusive as to offence. Moreover, evidence of investigating officer and that of father of prosecutrix was contradictory on the point of notice of Test Identification parade. Conviction of accused was set aside. Shailesh Dharmaji Wahane v. State of Maharashtra, 2005 Cr LJ 274 (Bom) (NOC) : 2006 All MR (Cri) 103: 2005(4) Mah LT 758.

The prosecutrix while working as maid servant had stolen Rs. 7500/- from accused's house and when accused recovered money from her house she filed rape case against her. Evidence in the case was discrepant as no door was broken and no positive sign of rape was detected in medical examination. The conviction of accused was set aside. Bhola Ram Tewari v. State, 2003 Cr LJ (NOC) 175 (AP) : 2003(1) ALD (CRL) 906 : 2003(2) Andh (Cri) AP 490.

The evidence of victim does not prove the guilt of the accused, the trial court was justified in rendering the verdict of not guilty. The finding was neither perverse nor unreasonable. State of Karnataka v. H.B. Devidas, (1995) 1 ALT (Cr) 291 (Karn).

In a case the accused was charged only for offence of murder. There was no evidence to than that accused had committed rape on victim. Even charge under Section 376 was framed. The doctor has deposed that the vaginal smear does not disclose presence of semen and that no definite opinion could be given about rape. Further no other injury was found on person of prosecutrix. Hence conviction under Section 376, IPC cannot be sustained. Papuria alias Rajesh v. State, 1995 Cr LR 258 (Raj).

Appeal against acquittal. Accused lifted victim, a minor handicapped girl on her request in getting down to ground floor and took her into his house, laid her on a cot and committed rape. There is every possibility of these witnesses to get down from the upstairs through the stair case to watch television, was unable to get down from the stairs because of physical incapacity i.e. right leg and right hand were affected with polio. At that time, the accused came there and child witnesses requested him to take her to the ground floor, but the accused after taking her by physically lifting to the ground floor, taken her inside his house and committed rape on her. There is a ring of truth in the evidence of other children coupled with the objective findings in the observation report. When child witnesses was taken inside the house, there will be curiosity for the other children to see what was happening inside the house. Admittedly, wooden door planks have not been fixed to the door frames, but only curtains were fixed. When such is the case other children peeped through the curtain by pushing the curtain slightly aside and witnessed the incident, cannot be ruled out.

Testimony of child witnesses that accused removed his lungi and laid on victim girl after lifting her skirt. Is truthful and corroborated with medical evidence. In view of the above discussion, this Court has no hesitation in holding that there was no appreciation of evidence at all by the trial Court and that the prosecution proved its case against the accused beyond all reasonable doubt of the offence punishable under Section 376, IPC. Therefore, the impugned judgment is liable to be set aside. The Public Prosecutor, High Court of A.P., Hyderabad vs K. Venkateshwarlu, 2010 Cri LJ 1568 (AP).

Accused took prosecutrix, passed through various erowded and public places during day time to house of co-accused persons and ruped her.

From Kasauli upto Patiala she passed through various crowded and public places during day-time. She could have easily raised hue and cry on the way attracting public attention. Importantly, as per her deposition threats were meted out by accused only till the time they reached Patiala. At least thereafter, as per her own admission that she was free to move in and out of the house, she could have contacted people in the colony or made a phone call to her parents or relatives at Kasauli, disclosing her whereabout. This was not done so. She could have conveniently slipped out of the house and returned to her house or at least gone to the local police station for help. She knew accused since long and it appears to be a case of prosecutrix having voluntarily left with him from Kasauli and be with him thereafter.

Farther prosecution fail to prove that the prosecutrix was under eighteen years of age at time of incident. Delay in registration of FIR not explained. Sole testimony of prosecutrix was not reliable and hence acquittal of accused persons is proper. State of H.P. vs. Narender Kumer @ Hira, 2010 (3) CriLJ 3545 (HP).

21. Benefit of doubt.—When all prosecution witnesses turned hostile—There was not a fringe of evidence against petitioners—Petitioner was given benefit of doubt.—The term 'benefit of doubt' used in impugned judgment quashed since such rider is tantamount to abuse of the process of court. Santosh Das v. State of Rajasthan, 1995 Cr LR 436 (Raj).

Where there was deliberate improvement in the prosecutrix version and possibility of making the accused a scape goat not ruled out.—Accused was held entitled to benefit of doubt. Ashok Kumar v. State of M.P., (1995) 1 CCR 444 (MP).

There were no mark or injury on person of prosecutrix. The hymen was torn with old tear and was not redish. There was no report of chemical examiner on record regarding shalwar of prosecutrix. Hence accused entitled to benefit of doubt Acquittal. Sadhu v. State, 1995 (32) ACC 667 (All).

Where the conviction under Section 376 read with Section 511 for attempt to commit rape—Sole testimony of prosecutrix—Medical evidence not corroborating it—No injury marks on private part of prosecutrix's body—It tends to support defence version and presence of semen on pant of accused arrested after 12 days of incident cannot connect accused with offence.—Guilt of accused not established beyond reasonable doubt.—Hence conviction set aside. Mohan Shivaram Yadav v. State of Maharashtra, 1994 BCRC 3 (Bom).

Prosecution story that both real brothers committed rape on prosecutrix one by one appears to be improbable—There was no immediate lodging of report—No medical examination of prosecutrix's private part—Incident of rape not narrated to doctor—Prosecutrix narrated incident to mother who then narrated to father—Mother not examined—Testimony of father is of no help to prosecution. Hence it was held that veracity of prosecution story doubtful. Conviction of appellants set aside. Nankai v. State of U.P., 1994 ACC 176.

Where there was rape trial and was delayed in FIR—Prosecutrix statement before police and court being contradictory—Medical report was not proved.—Accused was held entitled to benefit of doubt. Samlu v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (1995) 1 CCR 386 (MP).

Where conviction was based on evidence of prosecutrix—Her evidence found highly unreliable—Absence of spermatozoa and injuries on persons of both prosecutrix and accused ruling out theory of forcible intercourse— Prosecutrix being married woman and grown up—Medical evidence not corroborating rape—Accused was held to be entitled to benefit of doubt. Ram Nivas v. State of Karnataka, 1994 SCC (Cri) 503 (SC).

Benefit will go to accused in absence of corroboration to offence of rape of married woman. Ramcharan v. State of M.P., 1993 Cr LJ 1825 (MP).

Where testimony of victim and witnesses was not probable and deceased was present at some other place on date of occurance which took place 21 years ago. acquittal of accused was upheld. State of Rajasthan v. Bhusa Ram, 1997 Cr LJ 1073 (Raj).

Conviction for offence under Section 376, IPC—Prosecution withholding the evidence regarding the injuries found on the person of the accused, the complaint filed by his wife and the evidence of the family members of the accused which would be highly relevant in proving or disproving their, presence in the house at the relevant time. It was held that accused not undergone fair trial, resulting in failure of justice. Further held that prosecution has failed to prove the offence of rape against the accused beyond reasonable doubt hence conviction and sentence set aside. Gulam Mohamed Mohamed Yusuf v. State of Gujarat, (1995) 2 CCR 524 (Guj.) (DB).

22. Defence injuries.—Injuries caused while resisting the offender is commonly described as defence injuries. Much importance cannot be given to the absence of defence injuries, because it is not an invariable rule that in the absence of defence injuries the prosecution must necessarily fail to establish its case. Such a plea is often raised to prove that no occurrence at all took place, and at times the plea is raised to suggest consent on the part of the victim. So far as consent is concerned this is wholly irrelevant when the girl is hardly 9 years old. The existence of defence injuries on the person of the victim may go to support the case of the prosecution, if the other evidence on record points to the truthfulness of the prosecution case. However, in its absence, the prosecution may still be able to establish by cogent evidence on record, that the offence was committed. The absence of defence injuries has to be considered out in the facts and circumstances of the case and no invariable rule can be laid down. It may be that the victim may offer resistence and in that process some injuries may be caused to her. It may also be that the victim may be so shocked that she may not be able to offer resistance. The circumstances under which the offence is committed is also relevant and in many cases the victim may be under such imminent threat to her life that she may not be able to resist and in any event, finds resistance futile. The victim may be overawed by the physical strength of the offender and thus unable to resist him.

She may not even have the moral courage at times to resist the onslaught of the offender. All these factors have to be taken into account while considering the plea of absence of defence injuries on the person of the victim. In the case of a minor, who was hardly nine years old it cannot be said that she was in a position of equal strength so as to resist the accused who was a grown up young person. She may have been so shocked that she could not offer any resistence and was perhaps unaware as to what was going to follow, Neyaz Ahmad v. State of Bihar, 1999 Cr LJ 2550 (Pat).

Absence of injuries on her private parts—Effect.—Victim is married, grown up lady blessed with two children. One more aspect that requires our consideration is as to whether the medical evidence does not support the prosecution's case? The High Court rightly expressed its indignation as to the manner in which the trial Court completely misread the vital medical evidence. Dr. A. Chakraborty, (PW-8) examined the victim on 29.04.1984. On examination he opined that the victim is habituated to sexual intercourse and, therefore, could not express his firm opinion in his report about the commission of rape at the time of medical examination. But in the evidence he clearly stated after considering the report of FSL regarding stains on victim's clothing, that there is sufficient proof of recent sexual intercourse. The vaginal swab and smear were sent to Chemical Examiner. Based on the FSL report and the report of Serologist (Exhibit 7) he found that the semen was present in the vaginal swab of the victim. Court fail to appreciate as to how and in what manner the medical evidence supports the case of the defence.

The Counsel for the appellants however, submitted that the medical examination report of the victim shows that no injuries were found on her private parts or on any part of her body. Court is required to note that victim Sita Rani Jha is a married grown up lady and blessed with two children and in such circumstances the absence of injuries on her private parts is not of much significance. The mere fact that no injuries were found on private parts of her body cannot be the ground to hold that she was not subjected to any sexual assault. The entire prosecution story cannot be disbelieved based on that singular assertion of the Counsel. In this regard another submission was made by the Counsel for the appellants that the sexual intercourse, if any, was with the consent of the victim. According to him it was consensual sexual intercourse. This proposition canvassed for the first time across the bar is absolutely untenable and unsustainable. There is not even a suggestion made to the victim that she has consented to sexual intercourse. The sequence of events clearly apparent from the evidenced of witnesses, leading to the sexual assault completely rules out the possibility of consensual sex. Court has no hesitation to reject the submission. Utpal Das and Anr. vs. State of West Bengal, 2010 (3) CrLJ 2867 (SC).

23. Penetration.—Indications of broken bangles and injuries on hands of victim prove resistance by her and commission of rape against her consent. Mere penetration is sufficient for offence of rape. The evidence available on record and medical evidence clinchingly support that prosecution has proved the guilt of the accused beyond all reasonable doubt. Hence, conviction and sentence passed does not call for interference. Guntuboyina Gangulu v. State of A.P, (1995) 1 ALT (Cr) 323 (AP).

Hymen was intact. The mere fact that hymen was intact, would not by itself negative the commission of rape by the accused as tearing of hymen would depend upon the extent of penetration and force used while committing sexual assault. Ramachandrappa v. State by CPI, Hiriyur, 2007 CriLJ 3504 (Kar).

To constitute a rape there must be penetration. Appellant did not undress himself. Held, question of his male organ penetrating into the private part of victim did not arise. Hence offence of rape not made out. Tika Ram Chettri vs State of Sikkim, 2010 (4) CriLJ 4025 (Sikkim).

The absence of semen would not bring this case out of purview of rape which only defined that while doing actual sexual intercourse without the consent and against the will of prosecutrix only penetration in process is required. The same was proved through medical evidence and through statement of prosecutrix herself. Mere penetration amount to rape. Hence conviction and sentence does not call for interference. State of H.P. v. Vijay Kumar, (1994) 1 Sim LC 9.

When the charge was of committing rape on 6 years old girl—Conviction was challenged in appeal. The hymen of victim girl found intact and there were no injury on vaginal passage or place near about. Hence evidence makes story of penetration highly improbable conviction unsustainable. Sahajan Khan v. State of Orissa, (1994) 2 Crimes 203 (Ori).

In case hymen is not torn injuries on private part would be only trivial and hence from fact of absence of injuries rape could not be disbelieved. State of Maharashtra v. Savala Sagu Kokare, 1997 Cr LJ 786 (Bom).

Penetration—Sufficiency of. In 'Encyclopedia of Crime and Justice' (Volume 4, Page 1356) it is stated" . . . . . even slight penetration is sufficient and emission is unnecessary". In Halsbury's Statutes of England and Wales (Fourth Edition) Volume 12, it is stated that even the slightest degree of penetration is sufficient to prove sexual intercourse. State of Madhya Pradesh vs. Sheikh Shahid, AIR 2009 SC 2951 : 2009 (12) SCC 715 : 2009 (8) JT 277 : 2009 (5) SCR 1038 : 2009 (5) Scale 679 : 2009 (3) SLT 744.

Penetration—Male organ completely, partially or slightly. A bare perusal of explanation to Section 375 clearly shows that penetration is necessary to constitute the sexual intercourse to the offence of rape. In the absence of any penetration the offence would not fall within the four corner of Section 375 of the Indian Penal Code. However, it is not necessary that the entire sexual act should be completed. Mere penetration of the male organ within the private part of the woman with or without any emission of semen is sufficient to constitute a rape. Penetration of the male organ completely, partially or slightly would be enough to constitute an offence within the meaning of Sections 375 and 376 IPC. State of H. P. v. Amrish Kumar, 2009 CriLJ 2126 (HP).

24. Absence of dead or mobile spermatazoa in vaginal smears and slide.—In State of Maharashtra v. Chandraprakash Kewalchand Jain, (1990) 1 SCC 550 : AIR 1990 SC 658 : 1990 Cr LJ 889 relying upon medical evidence observed that spermatozoa can be found if the woman is examined within 12 hours after intercourse thereafter they may be found between 48 and 72 hours but in dead form. If the prosecutrix washes herself by then, the "spermatozoa may not be found. In that case the court after satisfying itself regarding the presence of semen on the clothes of the prosecutrix held that the absence of semen or spermatozoa in the vaginal smear and slides, cannot cast doubt on the creditworthiness of the prosecutrix."

Modi in his Medical jurisprudence and Toxicology has noted :

"The presence of spermatozoa in the vagina after intercourse has been reported by Pollak (1943) from 30 minutes to 17 days and by Morrison (1972) 9 days in vagina and 12 days in the cervix. However, in the vagina of a dead woman, they persist for a longer period". State of H.P. v. Lekh Raj 2000 Cr LJ 44 (SC) : AIR 1999 (SC) 3916 : 2000(1) SCC 247 : 1999(9) JT 43.

The presence of spermatozoa, dead or alive, would differ from person to person and its positive persence depends upon various circumstances. Otherwise also the presence or absence of spermatozoa is ascertained for the purposes of corroboration of the statement of the prosecutrix. If the perosecutrix is believed to be truthful witness in her deposition no further corroboration may be insisted Corroboration is admittedly only a rule of prudence. State of H.P. v. Lekh Raj, 2000 Cr LJ 44 (SC) : AIR 1999 (SC) 3916 : 2000(1) SCC 247 : 1999(9) JT 43.

25. FIR.—The subject regarding delay on lodging FIR has been dealt with by the Apex court in State of Punjab v. Gurmit Singh, (1996) 2 SCC 384 : 1996 AIR SCW 998 : AIR 1996 SC 1393 : 1996 Cr LJ 1728.

"........In our opinion, there was no delay in the lodging of the FIR either and if at all there was some delay, the same has not only been properly explained by the prosecution but in the facts and circumstances of the case was also natural. The Court cannot overlook the fact that in sexual offence delay in the lodging of the FIR can be due to variety of reasons particularly the reluctance of the proseutrix or her family members to go to the police and complain about the incident which concerns the reputation of the prosecutrix and the honour of her family. It is only after giving it cool thought that a complaint of the sexual intercourse offence is generally lodged.......The conduct of the prosecutrix in this regard appears to us to be most natural. The trial court overlooked that a girl, in a traditional bound non-permissive society in India would be extremely reluctant even to admit that any incident which is likely to reflect upon her chastity had occurred, being conscious of the danger of being ostracized by the society or being looked down by the society. Her not informing the teachers or her friends at the examination center under the circumstances cannot detract from her reliability. In the normal course of human conduct, this unmarried minor girl, would not like to give publicity to the traumatic experience she had undergone and would feel terribly embarrassed in relation to the incident to narrate it to her teachers and others overpowered by a feeling or shame and her natural inclination would be to avoid talking it to anyone, lest the family name and honour is brought into controversy." See State of Karnataka v. Hanjanna, 2000 Cr LJ 3471 (SC) : AIR 2000 (SC) 2231 : 2000(6) SCC 188 : 2000(6) JT 529.

Accused persons forcibly took prosecutrix from one place to another and raped her firstly in hotel and then in house.

As far as charge under Section 376 of IPC is concerned, the appellants are guilty even if they had sexual intercourse with the prosecutrix with her consent as the prosecutrix was less than 16 years old at the time when she was subject to sexual intercourse.

Whatever be the circumstances in which all the three came to stay in the same room, it is difficult to believe that the appellant Mohd. Imran Khan who was carrying an affair with the prosecutrix would have allowed his co-accused Jamal Ahmad a young man to stay alone with the prosecutrix in a hotel in the night. Once it is shown that both the appellants had stayed in the same room with the prosecutrix, it is difficult to accept that only one of them had sex with her. If either of them did not want to have sex with the prosecutrix, he would not have stayed in that room during the night. In any case, had the prosecutrix been subjected to sexual intercourse only by the appellant Jamal, she would not have implicated Imran, with whom she was friendly.

Mere delay in lodging FIR not fatal on facts and circumstances of case. Accused persons guilty of offence of rape even if they had sexual intercourse with prosecutrix with her consent as prosecutrix was less than 16 years old. Mohd. Imran Khan & etc. vs. State, 2010 (2) CrLJ 1756 (Delhi).

Sufficient reason. When FIR by a Hindu lady is to be lodged with regard to commission of offence like rape, many questions would obviously crop up for consideration before one finally decides to lodge FIR. It is difficult to appreciate the plight of victim who has been criminally assaulted in such a manner. Obviously prosecutrix must have also gone through great turmoil and only after giving it a serious thought, must have decided to lodge the FIR. Precisely this appears to be the reason for little delayed FIR. Sohan Singh vs. State of Bihar, 2010 (1) SCC 68 : 2009 (4) Crimes 116 (SC) : 2009 (13) JT 161 : 2009 (15) SCR 140 : 2009 (13) Scale 207 : 2009 (7) Supreme 4 : 2009 (8) SLT 78.

An uneducated rustic persons, did not complain about rape to doctor and instead complained only that she was assaulted.

The medical certificate granted by the Doctor suggests that the Hymen was torn at 6'O clock position and the rugosity was lost and that the Prosecutrix suggested that she was assaulted by Zindar Ali SK, about 6 months back. It is to be noted that the girl was produced for medical examination only on 08.08.2003. The Sessions Court, as well as, the High Court have rightly accepted the evidence of the prosecutrix.

We have seen that the prosecutrix has very specifically spoken about the rape. It is. undoubtedly true that the First Information Report in this case was lodged late. however, it has come on record that the prosecutrix had filed a petition under Section 156(3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure on 27.02.2003, on the basis of which, the direction was issued by the Chief Judicial Magistrate, Krishnagar, Nakashipara Police Station, for calling investigation into the said allegation. We fail to understand this unusual stance of police. They high handedly advised the Prosecutrix to "settle" the matter amicably. The High Court has, in our opinion, very rightly criticized that the First Information Report should have been registered only on 19.07.2003 and the direction issued by the Chief Judicial Magistrate, Krishnagar on 10.07.2003 should not have been followed for good long more than 17 days. All this, undoubtedly, resulted in the prosecutrix being sent for the medical examination only after 6 months of the offence. Very important evidence was, therefore, lost. However, the High Court came to the finding, on the basis of the evidence of PW-7 Dr. Roy and the evidence of the prosecutrix , that prosecutrix was subjected to sexual intercourse. We do not find anything wrong with that finding.

It is tried to be suggested that the girl did not complain about rape even to the medical officer PW-7 and instead, complained only that she was "assaulted", and that PW-7 had deposed that the tear was not injury, as there was no bleeding. We cannot forget that the girl is an uneducated rustic person, who had to work to sustain the family. It cannot also be ignored that she had disclosed the facts to her parents whose version has again gone unchallenged. She had also asserted that she had told about the rape in the Village Meeting which version was supported by her parents and other witnesses. Besides, her medical examination was conducted after 6 months of the incident. We would, therefore, choose to go on the basis of the evidence of the prosecutrix.

The shabby quality of investigation was severaly criticized by the learned Counsel. There can be no dispute that the investigation in this case is not at all satisfactory. There are discrepancies galore. However, in this case, the truthful version of the prosecutrix cannot be ignored. It is trite law that the defence cannot take advantage of such bad investigation where there is clinching evidence available to the prosecution as in this case. We, therefore, confirm the finding of the High Court that the accused is guilty of the offence under Section 376 of IPC. Zindar Ali Sheikh vs. State of West Bengal, AIR 2009 SC 1467 : 2009 (3) SCC 761 : 2009 CrLJ 1324 : 2009 (1) Crimes 315 (SC) : 2009 (2) JT 253 (SC): 2009 (1) SCR 968 : 2009 (2) Scale 248 : 2009 (1) Supreme 617.

The delay in a case of sexual assault, cannot be equated with the case involving other offences. There are several factors which weigh in the mind of the prosecutrix and her family members before coming to the police station to lodge a complaint. In a tradition bound society prevalent in India, more particularly, rural areas, it would be quite unsafe to throw out the prosecution case merely on the ground that there is some delay in lodging the FIR. State of Himachal Pradesh vs Prem Singh, 2009 AIR SCW 105 : 2009 CriLJ 786 (SC) : AIR 2009 SC 1010 : 2008 (15) SCR 1058 (SC) : 2009 (1) SCC 420 : 2008 (5) Scale 132 (SC) : 2009 CrLJ 786 (SC).

There was delay in lodging FIR. There was no medical evidence to prove commission of rape. The prosecutrix imposed her statement and there was contradiction in her testimony. No offence under Section 376 was made out, but offence under Section 363, IPC was proved. Hence, conviction under Section 363, IPC was confirmed but sentence was reduced to period already undergone. Ganesh v. State of Rajasthan, 1995 R Cr C 250 (Raj).

Delay in lodging FIR. If the incident of rape was true and the complainant had the support of Laxman Sarpanch, he would have gone to police station to lodge the report soon after the occurrence, but after passing more than 50 hours, the complainant is found to have lodged the report with the police, whereas the distance between the place of occurrence and the police station is only 5 kms. The prosecution has utterly failed to furnish reasonable and satisfactory explanation of more than 50 hours inordinate delay in lodging the FIR. Hence, this delay is found to be fatal to the prosecution. Ramdhan vs. State of Rajasthan, 2010 (3) CrLJ 2652 (Raj).

Acquittal of the accused on ground that the girl failed to mention the precise time in FIR. Acquittal was not held justified. State of U.P. v. Padam Singh, (1995) 4 CCR 694 (All).

We find no merit in the submission made for the appellants that FIR was ante timed and brought into existence so as to falsely implicate the appellants. There is no reason to disbelieve the evidence of prosecutrix and her mother that attempts were made to lodge the FIR on the next day of the occurrence of the incident but the police did not co-operate and intimated any action. The attempt on the part of the police to protect the accused from day one of the occurrence is clear and obvious.

This Court, in exercise of its jurisdiction under Article 136 of the Constitution of India, does not act as a third appellate Court. Suffice it to hold that the verdict in the instance case did not result in any miscarriage of justice. The impugned judgment is not an erroneous one. Nor the judgment is vitiated on account of any error either in appreciation of evidence or application of legal principles. Jaswant Singh & Ors. vs. State of Punjab, AIR 2010 SC 894.

When there is unexplained delay of 9 days in lodging complaint and victim was desirous to marry one of accused and there are various infirmities in prosecution evidence, accused can be acquitted. Shatrughan and another v. State of M.P., 1993 Cr LJ 120 (MP).

Delayed FIR does not necessarily indicate that prosecutrix's version is false. Kamel Singh v. State of M.P., (1995) 3 Crimes 527 (MP).

A lady was brought to police station for investigation of a case against her on when rape was committed by its officer-in-charge on 27/28, October, 1980 but its FIR lodged on 4.11.1980. Delay in so doing remained unexplained. The accused was acquitted for want of substantiation of the charge. Held, an acquittal order did not call for interference. (1986) 2 Crimes 577.

Inconsistency in FIR and statement under Section 161, Cr PC and inherent defect in prosecution case do not attract conviction specially when victim is married woman. Sanya v. State of Orissa, 1993 Cr LJ 2784 (Ori).

Delay in lodging FIR—Contra. In normal course of human conduct an unmarried girl who is victim of sexual offence would not like to give publicity to the traumatic experience she had undergone and would feel terribly embarrassed in relation to the incident to narrate such incident. Overpowered, as she may be, by a feeling of shame her natural inclination would be to avoid talking to anyone, lest the family name and honour is brought into controversy. Thus, delay in lodging the first information report cannot be used as a ritualistic formula for doubting the prosecution case and discarding the same on the ground of delay in lodging the first information report.

In the instant case, the girl was a minor below the age of 16 years. She was studying in Class VIII and the accused was the drawing teacher of that class. It is no doubt true that the prosecutrix did not report the incident to anyone either on the first occasion or on the second. Ultimately a stage was reached when she could not keep it a secret since her mother discovered that she was pregnant. In these circumstances, she was compelled to disclose the true facts. Having regard to the facts and circumstances of the case, delay could not be treated as fatal to prosecution case. Dildar Singh v. State of Punjab, 2006 CriLJ 3914 (SC).

In the instant case the accused alleged to have committed rape on a girl of 11 years of age. Victim stated that due to fear she could not disclose about alleged rape to her parents or to police but nothing could be stated as to whether such threat was persisting all throughout. Father of victim, informant stated that he came to know about the alleged incident when accused himself disclosed about it in drunken condition. Informant further stated that he demanded some amount as compensation through a messenger from the accused and on denial of accused for the same he filed FIR. Alleged messenger denied his meeting with accused. The FIR was lodged after two years from date of alleged incident. Delay was not explained properly. Investigating Officer was not examined. Age of victim girl was also doubtful. In circumstances. her deposition before police about incident, could not be relied on. Said contradictions, in prosecution story would result in acquittal of accused. Shri Vanalalbela v. The State of Mizoram, 2006 CriLJ 1733 (Gau).

26. Consent.— In the context of Indian Culture, a woman-victim of sexual aggression would rather suffer silently than to falsely implicate somebody. Any statement of rape is an extremely humiliating experience for a woman and until she is a victim of sex crime, she would not blame anyone but the real culprit. While appreciating the evidence of the prosecutrix, the Courts must always keep in mind that no self-respecting woman would put her honour at stake by falsely alleging commission of rape on her and, therefore, ordinarily a look for corroboration of her testimony is unnecessary and uncalled for. But for high improbability in the prosecution case, the conviction in the case of sex crime may be based on the sole testimony of the prosecutrix. It has been rightly said that corroborative evidence is not an imperative component of judicial credence in every case of rape nor the absence of injuries on the private parts of the victim can be construed as evidence of consent. Insofar as the present case is concerned, the circumstances referred to and pointed out by the learned Counsel are neither sufficient nor do they justify discarding the evidence of the prosecutrix. There is nothing on record that creates any doubt/disbelief or a suspicion about the evidence of the prosecutrix. In a case, such as this, where the prosecutrix was misrepresented by the accused that he would show her to his cousin (a doctor) as she was suffering from some throad pain and she accompanied him but the accused took her to other places and when it became dark, took her to a lonely place and committed sexual intercourse, the prosecutrix was not expected to put any resistance lest her life would have been in danger. In the facts and circumstances, the absence of injuries on the person of the prosecutrix does not lead to an inference that she consented for sexual intercourse with the accused. The young girl became victim of lust of the accused who was more than double her age and yielded to sexual intercourse against her will. Rajinder vs. State of Himachal Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 3022 : 2009 CrLJ 4133 : 2009 (3) Crimes 222 (SC) : 2009 (9) JT 9 : 2009 (9) Scale 176 : 2009 (10) SCR 248 : 2009 (5) Supreme 233 : 2009 (9) SLT 361.

Willingly consented—Assurance of marriage. In the instant case admittedly the prosecutrix was a grown up lady and she was in love with the appellant and she without informing her parents and other persons, used to meet the appellant frequently for last few years at the lonely place and cohabited with him. The only question which needs to be considered is whether she has consented to sexual intercourse after giving assurance of marriage by the appellant to her or not. From scrutinizing the evidences of the witnesses including the informant on record and the contents of the Panchayati report, it is clear that they were in love and they used to meet often. There is no such evidence that the first act of the sexual intercourse was done after giving assurance of marriage by the appellant to the prosecutrix. It usually happens in such cases, when two young persons are madly in love, they make promises several times to get themselves married whatsoever obstacle may come in their way. As stated by the prosecutrix the appellant also made such a promise on more than one occasion. In such circumstances the promise loses all significance, particularly when they are overcome with emotions and passion and find themselves in situations and circumstances where they in a weak moment, succumb to the temptation of haveing sexual relationship. This is what appears to have happened in this case as well, and the prosecutrix willingly consented to having sexual intercourse with the appellant with whom she was in love, not because he promised to marry her but because she also desired it. In these circumstances it would be very difficult to impute to the appellant's knowledge that the prosecutrix had consented in consequence of a misconception of fact arising from his promise. In any event, it was not possible for the appellant to know what was in the mind of the prosecutrix when she consented, because there were more reasons than one for her to consent.

Considering all these circumstances, we find that the prosecution has miserably failed to bring home the charge under Section 376, IPC against the appellant beyond all reasonable doubts. Therefore, we allow this appeal and set aside the judgment of conviction and sentence. Supai Hansda vs. State of Bihar, now Jharkhand, 2010 (3) Cri LJ 3359 (Jhar).

Mistaken belief. However, in such eventuality, prosecution should have pursued the trial on the basis that it was a case of mistaken belief, and should have been pursued it accordingly.

The assertion of mistaken belief cannot be pressed and pursued barely in the form of argument. There has to be a charge to that effect. It is not the case of the prosecution and it is apparent from the charge that the prosecution has proceeded on the basis or foundation that due to mistaken belief of the prosecutrix she had consented for sexual intercourse. Anwar Khan Iqbal Khan vs. State of Maharashtra, 2010 (3) CriLJ 3597 (Bombay) (Nagpur).

Consent of victim below age of 16 years—Immaterial. The prosecutrix in the present case was aged below 16 years of age at the time of incident of kidnapping and rape as deposed by her. The evidence of prosecutrix contained detailed history of events of rape and kidnapping and appears natural and truthful. It inspires confidence to believe that she was kidnapped and then sexually exploited and raped by the accused while she could not have validly consented for sexual intercourse with the accused. There is sufficient credible evidence to prove that prosecutrix was much below the age of 16 years at the time of incident and thus accused could not have claimed benefit of her alleged consent for his sexual advances towards her which resulted in crime of kidnapping and rape. Govind Shripat Maraskolhe vs. State of Maharashtra, 2010 (3) CriLJ (NOC) 1051 (Bom).

Victim a minor girl — Consent immaterial. When out of the two victims of rape, one of them is a minor girl, plea of consent would be unsustainable. The plea of consent is too shallow to even need detailed analysis or consideration. A minor girl cannot legally give a consent which would necessarily involve understanding of the effect of such consent. It has to be a conscious and voluntary act. There is a gulf of difference between consent and submission. Every consent involves a submission but the converse does not follow, and mere act of submission does not involve consent. An act of helpless resignation in the face of inevitable compulsion, quiescence, non-resistance or passive giving in when the faculty is either clouded by fear or vitiated by duress or impaired due to deficiency cannot be considered to be consent as understood in law. For constituting consent, there must be exercise of intelligence based on the knowledge of the significance and the moral effect of the act. In the instant case, the faculty of the victims was clouded by fear and duress. Therefore, the contention with regard to the consent is not tenable. Even assuming that the victim was previously accustomed to sexual intercourse, that is not a determinative question. On the contrary, the question which was required to be adjudicated was did the accused commit rape on the victim on the occasion complained of. Even if it is hypothetically accepted that the victim had lost her virginity earlier, it did not and cannot in law give licence to any person to rape her. Sarafat v. State of Uttaranchal, 2006 CriLJ 654 (Uttaranchal).

Love. Appellant took away informant's daughter on allurement of solemnizing marriage and committed rape on her. Ocular evidence by witnesses and medical evidence fully supported version of victim girl. Victim and appellant were in love does not inspire confidence. Held conviction of appellant is proper. Maheshwar Singh Munda vs State of Jhar-khand, 2010 (4) CriLJ 4011 (Jhar).

For the offence of rape as defined in section 375 of the Indian penal code, the sexual intercourse should have been against the will of the woman or without her consent. Consent is immaterial in certain circumstances covered by clauses thirdly to sixthy, the last one being when the woman is under 16 years of age. Based on these provisions an argument is usually advanced on behalf of the accused charged with rape that absence of proof of want of consent where the prosecutrix is not under 16 years of age takes the assault out of the purview of section 375 of the Indian Penal Code. Certainly consent is no defence if the victim has been proved to be under 6 years of age. If she be of 16 years of age or above, her consent cannot be presumed, an inference as to consent can be drawn if only based on evidence or probabilities of the case. The victim of rape stating on oath that she was forcibly subjected to sexual intercourse or that the act was done without her consent has to be believed and accepted like any other testimony unless there is material available to draw an inference as to her consent or else the testimony of prosecutrix is such as would be inherently improbable. State of Rajasthan v. N.K. 2000 Cr LJ 2205 (SC): AIR 2000 (SC) 1812 : 2000(3) JT 643 : 2000(2) Scale 652.

This Apex Court find that the High Court was justified in its conclusions about the prosecutrix having accompanied the accused on her own and being a consenting party to the sexual acts. As rightly contended by learned counsel for the State, if the age of the prosecutrix was below 16 years, the consent would be of no consequence But the High Court's findings as regards the age of the prosecutrix cannot be said to be without any basis. The High Court has analysed the oral evidence and the documentary evidence to come to a conclusion that the date of birth of the prosecutrix as claimed by the prosecution has not been established. Held, there was inconsistency in evidence of prosecutrix. She appeared to have accompanied accused of her own accord and she was a consenting party to sexual acts. That being so, we find no merit in this appeal which is accordingly dismissed. State of H. P. v. Suresh Kumar @ Chhotu, AIR 2009 SC 1109

Consent for the purpose of Section 375 requires voluntary participation not only after the exercise of intelligence based on the knowledge of the significance and moral quality of the act but after having fully exercised the choice between the resistance and assent. Whether there was consent or not, is to be ascertained only on a careful study of all relevant circumstances. In the instant case there was clear credible incidence that she resisted the onslaught and made all horrible efforts to prevent the accused from committing rape on her. From the oral evidence of the prosecutrix, it was proved that the accused caught her from behind and he lifted her and pushed her down and despite her attempt to cover herself with the salwar, the accused pulled it down. She also stated that the accused gagged her mouth when she attempted to cry a loud. The subsequent conduct of the prosecutrix also showed that she was very much resistant to the sexual on slaught on her. She came to her father immediately and told the entire incident as to how she was ravished by the accused. The evidence as a whole indicated that there was resistance by the prosecutrix and there was no voluntary participation by her for the sexual act. The absence of nail marks or minor injuries on the body of the accused was held to be of not much significance. As the incident occurred on 17.4.93 and the accused was examined on 20.4.93, even if there were any marks of violence on the body of the accused the same would have been obliterated. State of H.P. v. Manga Ram. 2000 Cr LJ 4027 : AIR 2000 (SC) 2798 : 2000(7) SCC 224.

High Court says that "law is well settled that it is not possible for a single man to commit sexual inter course with a healthy adult female in full possession of her senses against her will". There is not even a single decision which says so. The presumptuous conclusion is that PW. 1 was an able bodied tribal lady capable of taking care of herself. On that basis the High Court has come to this conclusion is not fathomable. To add to the confusion the High Court itself noticed that there were two contradictory stands. One was that no such incidence had taken place and this was a case of false implication, other was that the act was with consent. Such irreconcilable stand should not have found favour with the High Court. The High Court observed that except PWs. 1 and 2, there were no other eye witnesses, and therefore, prosecution version was not acceptable. To say the least, the conclusion is not only contrary to law laid down by this Court, but also shows scant regard to law declared by this Court.

We would have set aside the order of the High Court and restored that of the trial Court. But it is considered appropriate to remit the matter back to the High Court to hear the appeal afresh for disposal of the same as the accused-respondent has not appeared before the Court in spite of notice, keeping in view the correct legal principles. State of Orissa vs. Sukru Gouda, AIR 2009 SC 1019 : 2009 (2) SCC 118 : 2009 CrLJ 831 : 2008 (13) JT 4 : 2008 (16) Scale 189 : 2008 (17) SCR 617.

Prosecutrix being 14 years of age—Her testimony corroborated on all material particulars—Prompt lodging of FIR and prompt medical examination proved offence. It was held that prosecutrix being below age of consent accused cannot escape liability of his guilt merely because of absence of marks of injury. Held, acquittal order not proper. Conviction by trial Court upheld. (Km) Narayanama v. State of Karnataka, (1994) 3 Crimes 286 (SC).

A minor girl was raped by the accused when she was alone in the house and fact come to the notice when girl became pregnant and was at its advance stage. The complaint was filed with the police when accused had refused to marry with prosecutrix. This was clear case of consent but consent was of no consequence for purposes of determination of guilt of accused. However it was considered to have some bearing on the quantum of sentence which was reduced. Bandu Charandas Dighade v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 1990 (Bom). Raj Nath v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 2056 (All) : 2003 All LJ 699 (ALU).

Where there was rape trial under Section 376 (1)—Presumption as to absence of consent for rape was not applicable. Further held, it is applicable only in special classes of rape under Section 376(2) clauses (a) to (g). Sitaram Rameshwar Kewat v. State of M.P., 1995 MPLJ 1009 (MP).

Conviction was under Section 376 IPC—Prosecutrix willingly accompanying the accused/appellant—Appellant was willing to marry her. Action of appellant does not fall within the purview of crude act of rape. Consideration of mitigating circumstances calling for attenuation in accordance with first proviso to Section 376, IPC. Sentence reduced. Joaquim Constantinho Carvalho v. State, 1995 Cr LR 215 (Bom).

In the case of rape the medical evidence showed that there were no signs of rape on the victim and that she was habituated to sexual intercourse. The victim was found to be below 16 years. Held, that consent of such woman was wholly immaterial and furnished no defence. 1987 Cr LJ 212 (MP).

Prosecutrix's minority not proved—Offence of rape under Section 376, IPC not made out accused's conviction and sentence liable to be quashed and set aside. Pradeep Ambadas Shinde v. State of Maharashtra, (1995) 2 B Cr C 272 (Bom).

The absence of injuries on the person of the prosecutrix showed that the accused had sexual intercourse with the prosecutrix with her tacit consent. The medical evidence clearly disclosed that prosecutrix did not appear to have put up any resistance to the alleged onslaught committed on her by the accused. From this the only irresistible inference could be that the prosecutrix was a consenting party. Inder Singh v. State of Rajasthan, 2002 CrLJ 721 (Raj) : 2002(1) RajCriC 398 : 2002(2) RecCriR 428.

The girl was taken to tea shop and raped consecutively for three times. Evidence showed that after raping her for first time accused had gone out for two hours leaving the girl at tea shop but she did not tried to run away. She stayed there overnight and was raped twice again. She had not even taken permission of hostel warden before leaving the hostel. The victim was consenting party and accused was held entitled to acquittal. State of Karnataka v. Shankarappa, 2004 Cr LJ (NOC) 43 (Kant) : AIR 2004 Kant HCR 366 : 2004(3) All Cri LR 289 : 2003(10) All ind Cur 470 : 2003(4) KAR 2820 : 2004(2) Rec Cri R 30.

The accused taking the undue advantage of loneliness of victim who was accompanying him raped her whereas both were related to each other and victim was a married woman. There were no sign of injuries on any part of body of victim and medical evidence completely negatived the application of any force on her. It was held that prosecutrix seemingly was consenting party and the accused was entitled to acquittal. Gokul v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 1100 (All) : 2003 All LJ 138 : 2003(46) All Cri C 174 : 2003(1) All Cri R 386.

The accused committed sexual intercourse with a girl below sixteen years of age with her consent. It was held that consent in the matter was of no consequence as it was no consent. The conviction of accused for offence of rape was held proper. The offence under S/C and S/T (Prevention of Atrocities) Act was not established as evidence showed that accused had not committed sexual intercourse in order to take revenge on scheduled caste woman. Hanmant Ramhari Godake v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 4368 (Bom) : 2003 Att MR (Cri) 236 : 2003(3) Andh LJ 584.

Since no injury was found on person of prosecutrix by doctor though place of incident was ditch and also no blood stains were noticed on seized clothes, it creates serious doubts in prosecution case. Udai Prakash Ojha v. State of Bihar, 2005 Cr LJ NOC 53 (Jhar) : AIR 2005 Jhar HCR 206 : 2005(4) Crimes 438 : 2004(4) JCR JHA 192 : 2004(4) JLJR 303.

Where victim/prosecutrix raised alarm only after accused went away from her house, and no injuries found on her body to indicate any forceful assault on her, offence of rape committed by accused was not established. State of Karnataka v. Mapilla P.P. Soopi, 2004 Cr LJ 44 (SC) : AIR 2004 (SC) 85 : 2003(4) Crimes 191 : 2003(8) SCC 202 : 2004 SC Cri R 1056 : 2003(6) Supreme 968.

Where birth registration certificate issued by municipal corporation was duly proved and according to which prosecutrix was minor on date of incident therefore no question of her consent arises. Rasik Khan Asgarkhan Pathan v. State of Gujarat, 2005 Cr LJ 1284 (Guj) : 2005(30) All ind Cus 837 : 2004(3) Guj LJ 913 : 2005(1) Guj LR 913 : 2005(2) Rec Cri R 694.

The prosecutrix consented to sexual intercourse with accused under misconception of facts that he was a bachelor and would marry her. Thus consent of the prosecutrix was no consent in provisions of law. It was held that discharge of accused was not proper. Renu Yadav v. Madhusudan Etawadi, 2003 Cr LJ 250 (MP).

The accused expressed love and affection and promised to marry prosecutrix in order to get her consent for cohabitation. The victim was grown up and knew that their marriage was not feasible as they belonged to different castes but she started cohabiting with accused and became pregnant. Setting aside the conviction order of High Court it was held that accused was entitled to the acquittal as consent of prosecutrix was not given under misconception of fact. Uday v. State of Karnataka, 2003 Cr LJ 1539 (SC) : AIR 2003 (SC) 1639 : 2003(2) Crimes 176 : 2003(4) SCC 46.

The evidence in a Karnataka case showed that witness while passing through the way the door was locked from inside and there was complete silence and after sometime the accused was seen leaving the place. It was held that incident had taken place by consent and accused was entitled to the acquittal. State v. H.D. Veeregowda, 2003 Cr LJ 4762 (Kant) : AIR 2003 Kant HCR 2835.

In the present case, the accused allegedly entered the house of the prosecutrix at night and raped her. Testimony of the prosecutrix did not impose confidence and was self contradictory. There was no injuries on the person of the prosecutrix and, therefore, it could not be said that the prosecutrix had struggled to save the honour. She did not raise any alarm to attract the attention of nearby resident. It was held that the present case was with the consent of prosecutrix and, therefore, conviction of accused was held proper. Vijay Kumar v. State of HP, 2006 Cr LJ 412 (HP).

The absence of visible marks of injuries on the person of the prosecutrix on the date of her medical exmination would not necessarily mean that she had not suffered any injuries or that she had offered no resistance at the time of commission of the crime. Absence of injuries on the person of the prosecutrix is not necessarily an evidence of falsity of the allegation or an evidence of consent on the part of the prosecutrix. It will all depend on the facts and circumstances of each case. In Sheikh Zakir v. State of Bihar 1983 Cr LJ 1285, AIR 1983 SC 911 absence of any injuries on the person of the prosecutrix who was the helpless victim of rape belonging to backward community, living in a remote area not knowing the need of rushing to a doctor after the occurrence of the incident, was held not enough for discrediting the statement of the prosecutrix if the other evidence was believable. In Balwant Singh v. State of Punjab, 1987 Cr LJ 971 : AIR 1987 SC 1080, the Apex Court held that every resistance need not necessarily be accompanied by some injury on the body of the victim; the prosecutrix being a girl of 19/20 years of age was not in the facts and circumstances of the case expected to offer such resistance as would cause injuries to her body. In Karnel Singh v. State of M.P. (1995) 5 SCC 518 : 1995 AIR SCW 3644 : AIR 1995 SC 2472 the prosecutrix was made to lie down on a pile of sand. The apex court held that absence of marks of external injuries on the person of the prosecutrix cannot be adopted as a formula for inferring consent on the part of the prosecutrix and holding that she was a willing party to the act of sexual intercourse. It will all depend on the facts and circumstances of each case. A judge of facts shall have to apply common sense rule while testing the reasonability of the prosecution case. The prosecutrix on account of age of infirmity or overpowered by fear or force may have been incapable of offering any resistance. She might have sustained injuries but on account of lapse of time the injuries might have healed and marks vanished.

In a case as far as the evidence of the prosecutrix herself was concerned, it was beset with numerous flaws, inconsistency bordering on the line of falsehood and concealment of truth. In fact it gave a clear impression that she was a consenting party. It was clear from her evidence that the accused and prosecutrix were known to each other from childhood their wadis were adjacent to each other. There was no resistance from prosecutrix as per the deposition given by herself when the accused allegedly tried to have intercourse with her. As per her own version, nor was there any abrasion or scratches at any part of her body nor was there any injury on her private parts. Her clothes were not torn and she was not crying when she went home after the so called forcible intercourse. All those were indication of only one circumstance that she was a consenting party. She had also gone to the extent of saying that though accused used to have intercourse with her at one and the same place, she did not change her route after the first intercourse with her by the accused, and on the second occasion even when she had seen the accused she did not shout. The defence of the accused that as he was a well to do person from a rich family and the proseuctrix and her mother wanted her to get married with the accused was found probable. The accused was held entitled to acquittal. State of Maharashtra v. Subhash Sitaram Sangare 2001 Cr LJ 4468 (Bom).

The victim girl in another case was carrying four months pregnancy and accused was alleged to have promised to marry her. The consent of girl was meaningless as she was minor but acquittal of accused was also justified as he was a fourteen years juvenile. Shabuddin Sheikh v. State, 2004 Cr LJ (NOC) 26 (Jhar) : 2004 AIR Jhar HCR 109 : 2004(1) JCJR 140.

The accused committed rape by giving threat to kill her and other members of her family. When sexual relations between parties continue for sometime, the victim became pregnant. The accused assured to marry her but then refused. He pleaded consent of victim. It was held that there was no consent when sexual intercourse was committed for first time by giving her threats to murder her. The Trial Court was therefore, directed to proceed with the case in accordance with law. Pinki Kumari v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 4019 (Jhar) : 2003 AIR Jhar HCR 1126 : 2003(2) East Cri C 636 : 2003(3) JCR JHA 220.

The accused in a case took the girl with the consent of her mother for medical check up but committed the rape and left her alone at the lonely place. It was held that plea of consent was not admissible as there was no reason for the accused to leave the prosecutrix at the place of occurrence all alone. Conviction of accused was held proper. Rajender v. State, 2003 Cr LJ (NOC) 143 (HP) : 2002(3) Shim LC HP 141.

Where a minor girl was taken to a particular place at a point of dagger and subjected to sexual assault and she remained there for two nights, but did not make any noise, it was held that though she was a consenting party, being minor her consent was of no use and the accused was convicted. Baida Ram v. State, 2004 Cr. LJ 1923 (Jhar) : 2005 AIR Jhar HCR 1112 : 2004(1) East Cri C 643.

In an Orissa case, the victim was an able-bodied tribal woman aged thirty five years. The eye-witness proved that he found victim lying on ground and the accused on her. The witness said nothing about the fact whether victim was struggling or making any endeavour to dislodge. It was held that guilt of accused was not proved beyond doubt and he was entitled to accused. Sukru Gouda v. State, 2004 Cr. LJ 1566 (Orissa) : 2004(2) Crimes 55 : 2004(2) East Cri C 342 : 2004(1) Orissa LR 243 : 2004(3) Rec Cri R 168.

Bad character of the girl does not mean that she was a consenting party. Public Prosecutor v. Badana Ramayya, 2004 Cr. LJ 3510 (Mad) : 2004(1) ALD (CRL) 983 : 2004(2) Andh LT (Cri) AP 452 : 2004(4) Rec Cri R 766.

When testimony of prosecutrix inspiring confidence then its corroboration not necessary and it cannot be discarded on trivial grounds. Shanabhai Madhavbhai Koli Patel v. State of Gujarat, 2004 Cr. LJ 268 (Guj) : 2004(1) Guj LH 408.

Proof of sexual intercourse with consent—Presence of marks of violence will determine whether it was with consent or without consent—No internal examination done by doctor—No sign of external violence.—Thus it was not case of intercourse without consent. Prahilad Nath v. State of Assam, (1994) Gau LR 392 : (1994) 2 East Cr C 18 (Gau).

The probability of consent was ruled out of the simple reason that on medical evidence the prosecutrix was carrying 20 weeks pregnancy. She could hordly likely to take the adventure of having sexual intercourse in the field in the village of her parents with the accused that too in broad daylight. Lakhan Singh v. State of U.P., 1999 Cr LJ 4087 (All).

Accused not raising the plea of prosecutrix consent—Trial court acquitting the accused on ground of consent—Acquittal order, was held to be perverse and appellate court can interfere. State of M.P. v. Raju, (1994) 1 CCR 432 (MP).

The prosecutrix crossed 16 years and consent was live issue. It was impossible to believe that she was not in the game. She played her role willingly and actively. Since she was all along a willing party the appellant sails through the ordeal unscattered. Mahabir v. State, (1994) 3 CC Cases 61 : (1994) 3 Recent Cr R 46 (Del).

The victim girl in her entire deposition nowhere complained to any body about commission of offence to her by the appellants. She was with the appellant for 15/16 days on being taken from one place to other place and during these period she had enough scope and chances to disclose about her plight to any person. From her own evidence it also transpired that she did never resist the intercourse with the appellants which would amount to a consent on her part. It was also deposed by her in her cross-examination that the appellant was known to her prior to the occurrence. He visited her house some times and also wrote letters. The entire conduct of the victim girl reflected that she was a consenting party to the entire episode. Further the medical evidence also lend credence to the fact that the prosecurtix was a consenting party and the appellants had not committed forcible sexual intercourse with her. Shri Sushanta v. State of Tripura 2001 Cr LJ 195 (Gau).

When victim was a minor girl at time of incident, there is no question of her being a consenting party to incident. M. Ramachandran v. State of Kerala, 1996 Cr LJ 3566 (Ker).

The very fact that the deceased was totally naked and underclothes of both the deceased and the accused were found in the same room probabilities the theory of intercourse by consent and negatives the story of rape. Ronal Kiprono Ram Kant v. State of Haryana, 2001 Cr LJ 3942 (SC).

Prosecutrix being consenting party and above 16 years of age, offence under Section 376, IPC not made out. Anath Bandhu Kandu v. State of W.B., 1996 Cr LJ 3449 (Cal).

When rape without consent of prosecutrix and her abduction is established by the evidence, conviction is fully justified. Ranvir Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh 1997 (2) East Cr C 273 (SC) : 1996(11) SCC 595.

The prosecutrix by the time of her evidence in Court gave birth to a child. She stated that the accused was the father of the child. The evidence of the prosecutrix was that the accused has procured her consent by telling/assuring that he would marry her and believing on the same she had submitted to sexual intercourse with him. It was held that "even if the accused—appellant had made false promise to marry her and whereupon she had consented to sexual intercourse with him, it would not vitiate her consent for the sexual intercourse which she had given fully understanding the nature and implication of the act involved therein." The court further held that it was not a case "where the girl had an misconception about the nature of the act which she consented. In the instant case, the prosecutrix fully knew that what they were going to commit was the act of sexual intercourse fully knowing the nature and implication of such act and when she was fully aware that the person concerned was not yet her husband even if he had proposed to marry her"—The court also held that "The conduct of the accused-appellant in betraying the prosecutrix after making her pregnant and hearing the son abandoned, no doubt is highly reprehensible yet with anguish. It must be held that such conduct by itself does not become a ground for holding the accused appellant guilty of the charge of rape under Section 376, IPC Baldhari Ohdar v. State of Bihar, 2001 Cr LJ 883 (Pat), see also Sirdhamoy Nath v. State of West Bengal, 1999 (2) Cr LJ 4482 (Cal). Mir Wali Mohd v. State of Bihar, 1990 (2) Pat LJR 375; Jaynti Ram Panda v. State of West Bengal, 1984 Cr LJ 1535 (Pat).

The important feature of the case is that the husband of the prosecutrix after entering the house did not straightway chase the accused. He first questioned his wife as to whether she had called him, and only after her stating that she had not called him and that he had forcibly raped her, he started chasing the respondent and caught him. This gain probabilises the fact that the husband also at least some suspicion about the nefarious activities of his wife, otherwise it would be quite unnatural for a husband asking his wife, even before attempting to catch the accused, as to whether she had called him, and whether the accused had sexual intercourse with her consent. State of Rajasthan v. Kishanlal 2002 Cr LJ 2963 SC : 2002 Cal Cri LR 633 : 2002(2) Crimes 401.

Absence of injuries itself on her person negatived the allegation of rape. The medical evidence clearly discloses that P.W.1 Smt. Haju did not appear to have put any resistance to the alleged onslaught committed on her by the accused. From this the only irresistible inference that can be drawn is that the prosecutrix was consenting party. Thus, from every point of view, the present case is not a case of forcible intercourse with P.W. 1 Smt. Haju or against her will, but it is a case of consent between the two. Hence, statement of P.W.1 Smt. Hajui does not inspire confidence on the point that the accused appellant committed rape with her as there is no there is no other corroboration to her as there is no other corroboration to her statement. Hence, findings of learned Sessions Judge Dungarpur by which he convicted the accused appellant for offence under Section 376 I.P.C. are liable to be set aside and the accused - appellant is entitled to acquittal and appeal of the accused-appellant is liable to be allowed. Hurji v. State of Rajasthan, 2002 Cr LJ 472, (Raj.); See also Sukhbir Kabul Singh v. State of Haryana, 2005 Cr LJ 2457 (P&H) : 2005(3) AllCriLR 526 : 2005(2) Chand LT (Civ&Cri) 473 : 2005(3) Crimes 280 : 2005(2) Rec CriR 937; Vishwas Pandurang Dhivar v. State of Maharashtra, 2005 Cr LJ 2634 (Bom).

27. Testimony of Prosecutrix.—It is well settled that a prosecutrix complaining of having been a victim of the offence of rape is not an accomplice after the crime. There is no rule of law that her testimony cannot be acted without corroboration in material particulars. She stands at a higher pedestal than an injured witness. In the latter case, there is injury on the physical form, while in the former it is both physical as well as psychological and emotional. However, if the Court of facts finds it difficult to accept the version of the prosecutrix on its face value, it may search for evidence, direct or circumstantial, which would lend assurance to her testimony. State of UP v. Pappu, 2005 Cr LJ 331 (SC) : AIR 2005 (SC) 1248 : 2005(1) Crimes 37 : 2005(1) JT 153 : 2005(3) SCC 594 : 2004(8) Supreme 656.

Testimony of prosecutrix — Credibility. The law on the point is now too well settled. No doubt, it is true that doctor, who had initially conducted the medical examination of the prosecutrix, has not appeared on behalf of the prosecution to depose. But, that alone is not sufficient to discard the prosecution story. Corroboration is not the sine qua non for conviction in a rape case.

In this regard, the most celebrated observations in the case of Rameshwar v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1952 SC 54 may be quoted :

> "The rule, which according to the cases has hardened into one of law, is not that corroboration is essential before there can be a conviction but that the necessity of corroboration, as a matter of prudence, except where the circumstances make it safe to dispense with it, must be present to the mind of the judge...."

It is also a matter of common law that in Indian society any girl or woman would not make such allegations against a person as she is fully aware of the repercussions flowing therefrom. If she is found to be false, she would be looked by the society with contempt throughout her life. For an unmarried girl, it will be difficult to find a suitable groom. Therefore, unless an offence has really been committed, a girl or a woman would be extremely reluctant even to admit that any such incident had taken place which is likely to reflect on her chastity. She would also be conscious of the danger of being ostracized by the society. It would indeed be difficult for her to survive in Indian society which is, of course, not as forward looking as the western countries are.

Thus, in a case of rape, testimony of a prosecutrix stands at par with that of an injured witness. It is really not necessary to insist for corroboration if the evidence of the prosecutrix inspires confidence and appears to be credible. Wahid Khan vs State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2010 SC 1 : 2009 AIR SCW 7410 : 2010 CrLJ 517 (SC).

Normally, no girl or her parents would come forward to make humiliating statement against the honour of the girl, therefore, evidence of the prosecutrix and her parents cannot be discarded lightly. The testimony of the victim in case of sexual offence is vital and unless there are compelling reasons which necessitate looking for corroboration of her statement, Court should find no difficulty to act on the testimony of victim of sexual assault. Corroborative evidence is not an imperative component of judicial credence in every rape case. Premlal v. State of MP, 2005 Cr LJ 1145 (MP).

It is now well settled principle of law that conviction can be founded on the testimony of the prosecutrix alone unless there are compelling reasons for seeking corroboration. The evidence of a prosecutrix is more reliable than that of an injured witness. The testimony of the victim of sexual assault is vital unless there are compelling reasons which necessitate looking for corroboration of her statement, the Courts should find no difficulty in acting on the testimony of a victim of sexual assault alone to convict an accused where her testimony inspires confidence and is found to be reliable. It is also well settled principle of law that corroboration as a condition for judicial reliance on the testimony of the prosecutrix is not a requirement of law but a guidance of prudence under given circumstances. The evidence of the prosecutrix is more reliable than that of an injured witness. Even minor contradictions or insignificant discrepancies in the statement of the prosecutrix should not be a ground for throwing out an otherwise reliable prosecution case. State of HP v. Asha Ram, 2006 Cr LJ 139 (SC).

Testimony of prosecutrix as to commission of rape on her found to be remaining completey unchallenged. Same need not be corroborated by evidence of village meeting, where, accused allegedly admitted his guilt and decision taken that accused should marry prosecutrix. indar Ali Sheikh vs. State of West Bengal, AIR 2009 SC 1467 : 2009 (3) SCC 761 : 2009 CrLJ 1324 : 2009 (1) Crimes 315 (SC) : 2009 (2) JT 253 : 2009 (1) SCR 968 : 2009 (2) Scale 248 : 2009 (1) Supreme 617 : 2009 (2) JCC 861.

Look for corroboration — Not necessary except in cases of high imporbability. In the context of Indian Culture, a woman-victim of sexual aggression - would rather suffer silently than to falsely implicate somebody. Any statement of rape is an extremely humiliating experience for a woman and until she is a victim of sex crime, she would not blame anyone but the real culprit. While appreciating the evidence of the prosecutrix, the Courts must always keep in mind that no self-respecting woman would put her honour at stake by falsely alleging commission of rape on her and, therefore, ordinarily a look for corroboration of her testimony is unnecessary and uncalled for. But for high improbability in the prosecution case, the conviction in the case of sex crime may be based on the sole testimony of the prosecutrix. Rajinder @ Raju v. State of H. P., AIR 2009 SC 3022 : 2009 (10) SCR 248 (SC) : 2009 (9) JT 9 (SC) : 2009 (9) Scale 176 (SC) : 2009 (5) Supreme 233 (SC) : 2009 (9) SLT 361 (SC) : 2009 CrLJ 4133 (SC) : 2009 (3) Crimes 222 (SC).

Necessity of corroboration. Ordinarily evidence of a prosecutrix should not be suspect and should be believed, more so as her statement has to be evaluated at par with that of an injured witness and if evidence is reliable, no corroboration is necessary. But, said observation cannot be universally and mechanically applied to facts of every case of sexual assault which comes before Court. Raju vs. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 858 : 2008 (15) SCC 133 : 2008 (12) JT 457 : 2008 (16) SCR 1078 : 2008 (15) Scale 375 : 2009 (2) SLT 41.

Presumption of Correctness and absence of embellishment. Reference has been made in State of Punjab vs. Gurmit Singh and Ors., 1996 (2) SCC 384, case to the amendments in 1983 to Sections 375 and 376 of the Indian Penal Code making the penal provisions relating to rape more stringent, and also to Section 114-A of the Evidence Act with respect to a presumption to be raised with regard to allegations of consensual sex in a case of alleged rape. It is however significant that Sections 113-A and 113-B too were inserted in the Evidence Act by the same amendment by which certain presumptions in cases of abetment of suicide and dowry death have been raised against the accused. These two Sections, thus, raise a clear presumption in favour of the prosecution but no similar presumption with respect to rape is visualized as the presumption under Section 114-A is extremely restricted in its applicability. This clearly shows that in so far as allegations of rape are concerned, the evidence of a prosecutrix must be examined as that of an injured witness whose presence at the spot is probable but it can never be presumed that her statement should, without exception, be taken as the gospel truth. Additionally her statement can, at best, be adjudged on the principle that ordinarily no injured witness would tell a lie or implicate a person falsely. We believe that it is under these principles that this case, and others such as this one, need to be examined. Raju vs. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 858 : 2008 (15) SCC 133 : 2008 (12) JT 457 : 2008 (16) SCR 1078 : 2008 (15) Scale 375 : 2009 (2) SLT 41.

Testimony of prosecutrix is not unreliable solely on the ground of mentioning incorrect date of occurrence. Sunil Kumar v. State of HP, 2005 Cr LJ 2512 (HP).

Normally corroboration of the testimony of the victim cannot be insisted upon. In the present case the accused not only satisfied his lust by having sexual cohabitation with the victim but also he assaulted her physically in presence of the witnesses and confined her wrongfully in a room of his house till she was rescued by the police. While sitting in a court of revision for the reasons recorded and law on the subject discussed as above. Concurrent findings of fact recorded by the courts below not interfered. Kalia alias Kalakar Naik v. State of Orissa. 2002 Cr LJ 3233. Oril H.C.

In Apex Court Motilal v. State of Madhya Pradesh, 2008 SCC (11) 20 : AIR 2008 SC (Supp) 882 : 2008 AIR SCW 4846 contend that the evidence of the prosecutrix was liable to be believed save in exceptional circumstances. There can be no quarrel with this proposition (and it has been so emphasised by this Court time and again) but to hold that a prosecutrix must be believed irrespective of the improbabilities in her story is an argument that can never be accepted. The test always is as to whether the given story prima facie inspires confidence. We are of the opinion that the present matter is indeed an exceptional one. Dinesh Jaiswal vs State of M.P., 2010 AIR SCW 1606 : AIR 2010 SC 1540.

We find that this case is rather an unusual one. The fact that the appellant was in the house of the prosecutrix is admitted on both sides. The prosecution story that the appellant a young man of 31 years had been overpowered by a much older woman is rather difficult to believe.

As per the prosecutrix she had caused these injuries to the appellant during the time of rape and thereafter that the accused had caused her three minor injuries as well whereas the case of the appellant is that he had gone to her house to recover his cow and in a quarrel that followed both had received injuries. In any case as the investigating officer had not verified the statement of the appellant some corroboration for the prosecutrix's story was ´required. As already mentioned, her son Babulal and Shivbalak, a relative, who had reached the place of incidence, were both declared hostile and did not support the prosecutrix. We find that even her husband Sampat who had accompanied her to the police station to lodge the report did not come into the witness box and the doctor was also unable to confirm the factum of rape.

In Motilal v. State of Madhya Pradesh, 2008 SCC (11) 20 : AIR 2008 SC (Supp) 882 : 2008 AIR SCW 4846 held that the evidence of the prosecutrix was liable to be believed save in exceptional circumstances. There can be no quarrel with this proposition (and it has been so emphasised by this Court time and again) but to hold that a prosecutrix must be believed irrespective of the improbabilities in her story is an argument that can never be accepted. The test always is as to whether the given story prima facie inspires confidence. We are of the opinion that the present matter is indeed an exceptional one. Dinesh Jaiswal vs State of M.P., 2010 AIR SCW 1606 : AIR 2010 SC 1540.

Disbelieved testimony of prosecutrix. Judicial decisions rendered by the Apex Court the law as regards the credibility of the testimony of prosecutrix may be summarized thus: There is no rule of law that corroboration is essential before there can be a conviction solely on the testimony of the prosecutrix. But as a matter of prudence, the necessity of corroboration must be present to the mind of the Judge. There may be circumstances in a given case which might make it safe to dispense with such a corroboration. On the other hand, there may be factors in a case tending to show that the testimony of the prosecutrix suffers from infirmities in a manner so as to make it either unsafe or impossible to base a finding of guilt to the same. Some of the salient factors of this type may briefly be stated thus circumstances showing on the part of prosecutrix an animus against the accused where the question of want of consent is material circumstances tending to show consent e.g. absence of material showing an attempt at resistance absence of any marks of struggle attempt at improvement or exaggeration in the version as attempted the prosecutrix conduct on the part of the prosecutrix inconsistency with the credibility of the version e.g. omission to make a disclosure at the earliest opportunity element of artificiality or unnaturalness in the story as attempted by the prosecutrix and absence of signs of rape in the findings of the medical examination or on chemical analysis. Suresh Kumar v. State of Rajasthan, 2007 CriLJ 1939 (Raj).

28. Compensation.—Incident of rape found to be true as reported by Commission appointed by Supreme Court—State Government not yet concluded departmental enquiry pending against officers responsible for such offence. It was held that State Govt. directed to complete enquiry within three months and pay Rs. 50,000/- as interim compensation to victim woman. P. Rathinam v. State of Gujarat, 1994 SCC (Cri) 1163 (SC).

29. Attempt to rape.—Appellant called 6 years girl and removed her pant and made her to sit on his lap and exposed his private part. Appellant liable to be convicted for attempt to rape. Sahajan Khan v. State of Orissa,(1994) 2 Crimes 203 (Ori).

The accused attempted to commit rape. Section 375 IPC defines rape whereas Section 376 envisages punishment for rape. There is explanation in Section 375 IPC to the effect that penetration is sufficient to constitute the sexual intercourse necessary to the offence of rape. So, the natural corollary is that provisions of Section 376 / 511 IPC would be attracted in case the accused tried a penetrate his penis in the vagina of prosecutrix. In the present case, from the testimony of the prosecutrix, it is revealed that neither the accused undressed himself nor he undressed the prosecutrix. The only attribution to the accused is that he caught hold of the prosecutrix, laid her on the ground and then caught hold of her neck.

In the present case, there is neither allegation of ejaculation of accused nor undressing both the prosecutrix and himself. So, I am of the view that the finding of the learned trial Court whereby the accused stands convicted under Section 376 and / IPC is without any basis and the accused stands acquitted under the said provision of law.

The above said ingredients are complete, in the present case. By invoking the provisions of Section 222 Criminal Procedure Code, the accused stands convicted under Section 354 IPC. Pawan Kumar vs. State of Haryana, 2010 (2) CrLJ 2077 (P & H).

In the present case, the accused took the prosecutrix to lonely place inside a room where he undressed himself and also the prosecutrix. After laying her on the floor, the accused was just trying to sit over her, at that time, he was caught by the brother of the prosecutrix and other witnesses. This shows that with intention to commit the offence of rape the accused prepared himself by undressing himself and also undressing the prosecutrix and after laying her on the floor, he tried to sit over her. If he was not caught by the brother of the prosecutrix and others, he must have succeeded in the commission of offence of rape. Facts of the present case are suggestive of the fact that accused has not tried to, outrage the modesty of a woman, but had attempted to commit rape on her. Rupesh Kumar s/o Nischal Das v. State of Chhattisgarh, 2009 CriLJ 1822 (Chha).

1st accused gave threat not to disclose the incident to anybody and left her. While she was returning, she met her mother and informed about this incident. So, the scrutiny of the evidence of victim and her mother reveal the only discrepancy with regard to an act of forcible sexual intercourse and whereas her mother informed the doctor that the injuries are due to fall from the bicycle. Excepting these two circumstances, there is no such inconsistency so as to disbelieve the evidence of the prosecutrix. So far as the act for the offence punishable under Section 376, IPC is concerned, it is evident from the certificates produced that the injuries were on the vulva region. On perusal of the evidence of victim, it reveals that at the time of the incident, the 1st accused placed his male organ on the private part and nowhere she states that there was penetration of the male organ. In the absence of any such material in the evidence of victim it cannot be said that there was penetration and commission of forcible sexual intercourse. In the circumstances, in my considered opinion, the offence falls within the purview of Section 376 read with Section 511, IPC. The medical evidence does not support the version of the prosecution so far as commission of forcible sexual intercourse and so also, victim does not say anything about the penetration.

The trial Court has convicted appellant for the offence under Section 376, IPC. But had failed to see that there was no penetration and the medical evidence does not support the version of the prosecution and so also, victim. In that view of the matter, the conviction of the 1st appellant by the trial Court for the offence under Section 376, IPC is illegal and to that extent, his conviction is to be set aside. Channabasappa vs. State by Honnali Police, 2010 (3) CriLJ 3369 (Karn).

Where the accused rubbed his penis in the vagina but there was no penetration he was held guitly of attempt to commit rape under section 376/511, IPC. Bhursa v. The State, 2000 Cr LJ 2722 (Orissa); Shyam Lal v. State of Uttranchal, 2005 Cr LJ (NOC) 201 (Uttra).

Intended to do.—In order to find an accused guilty of an attempt to commit rape, the Court has to satisfy itself that the accused when he laid hold of the victim, not only desired to gratify his passions upon her person, but that he intended to do so at all events and notwithstanding any resistance on her part. Indecent assaults are often magnified into attempt at rape. In order to come to a conclusion that the conduct of the accused was indicative of a determination to gratify his passion at all resistance, then such materials must exist. Importantly, surrounding circumstances many times throw beacon light on that aspect. Kailash Laxman Khamkar vs. State of Maharashtra, 2010 (3) Cri LJ 3255 (Bom).

Where there was attempt to rape and criminal intimidation—Medical examination was performed—Hymen was found intact and no injury on the male organ—Prosecutrix's injury shows attempt of rape—Conviction under Section 376(1), read with Section 511 only made out. Bolleddu Sreenu v. State, Inspector of Police, Jaggayyapeta, (1994) 2 ALT (Cri) 469 (AP).

Conviction order was given by trial court—Appeal against—Hymen of victim found intact—Injuries found on throat and breast—Male organ found not injured—Whether offence of rape not made out—Only offence of attempt to rape made out. Bolleddu Sreenu v. State, (1994) 3 Crimes 602 (AP).

Medical examination—Injury on her right cheek of bite found—Supported by eye-witnesses—Conviction was felt to be fully justified. Papiya v. State of Rajasthan, (1994) 2 Crimes 651 (Raj).

The petitioner took prosecutrix aged 8 years and removed her under garments and prepared himself for commission of offence of sexual inter- course. It could not be committed due to hue and cry raised by prosecutrix. Hence order of trial court framed charge under Section 376/511, IPC does not warrant interference. Devanand Diwan v. State of M.P., (1994) 2 Crimes 173 (MP).

The accused removed the underwear of victim and put the saliva on the private part of the girl. It was held that it was not mere outraging of modesty as act of the accused was a step forward towards the commission of actual penetration of male organ and would amount to attempt to commit rape. Anokha Lal v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 2602 (Uttranchal) : 2003 (46) All Cri C 1071 : 2003(6) All Ind Cas 77 : 2003(2) Cur Cri R 638 : 2003(1) UC 420.

In a case, the accused rubbed his male organ on private part of a minor girl. The victim-girl stated that some coloured liquid had leaked out of his male organ and fell on her private part. it was held that the accused was guilty of attempt to commit rape and not of simple case of outraging her modesty. Kamla Nand v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 547 (HP) : 2003(1) Shim LC 75.

The accused had committed rape on girl of 5 years of age but she was not medically examined but accused had made extra-judicial confession that he had attempted to commit rape and finding of semen stain on victim's underwear in chemical examination lent support to the prosecution case. It was held that his conviction could be altered from under Section 376 to one under Section 376/511. Sanju v. Patangrao Jagtap, 2004 Cr LJ 1102 (Bom) : 2004 All MR (Cr) 344 : 2004(2) Rec Cri R 528.

Minor girl was alleged to have been raped but as per version of mother of victim which was duly corroborated by other witnesses, the accused had attempted to commit rape of on victim. The name of victim was not mentioned in charge sheet by investigating officer but Court said that this cannot be a ground to discard evidence of victim girl itself. Conviction of accused under Section 354, 376/511 was upheld but under Section 323 for causing injury was set aside. Babulal Sao v. State, 2004 Cr LJ 2465 (Jhar) : 2004 AIR Jhar HCR 1314 : 2003(3) East Cr C 140.

Alleged commission of offence punishable under Sections 376 and 323, IPC—Evidence by prosecutrix was corroborated by husband—Medical evidence was not definite. There was no material to show the penetration which is sine qua non for an offence of rape—Evidence clearly leading one to believe about attempt to rape—Hence, conviction under Section 376 not maintainable, is allowed to one under Section 511, IPC. Girideb v. State, (1995) 8 OCR 212 (Ori).

Where there was acquittal from the charge of rape—Accused can be convicted under Section 376, read with Sections 511 and 354—Held, Yes. Lingaraj Pillai v. State of Orissa, (1995) 1 OLR 380 (Ori).

In the present case the proecutrix in clear terms deposed that the applicant had initially caught her sister and gave her slaps due to which she intervened to rescue her sister. The accused caught hold the prosecutrix and took her to nala. The accused then removed her petticoat and also removed her blouse as also his Part and had intercourse with her. She has further stated that the applicant gave her jerk and also pressed her and she cried due to the accused having intercourse with her. She has further stated that when her father came there the accused ran away from the scene of offence. This evidence of the prosecutrix got corroboration from the evidence of doctor who has stated that she has examined the prosecutrix. She found that hymen of the prosecutrix was torn and red and inflamed and redness was seen over the vaginal orifice and labia minora and that there was clear pain visible on the touch. According to her, the age of the prosecutrix was 14 to 15 years, and that she was not used to sexual intercourse. She further stated that rape might have taken place 24 hours before the examination. The prosecutrix had seen the accused for quite some time and in cases where the girl is violated the picture of the violator always remains in her eyes and is not obliterated from the mind of the prosecutrix. Thus it was not difficult for the prosecutrix to identify the accused in Court after about 11 years. The FIR was promptly lodged. Conviction of accused under Section 376 read with Section 511, IPC was held proper. Barakatullakha v. State of Maharashtra 2002 Cr LJ 427 (Bom.) : 2001 All MR (Cri) 2024.

Accused alleged to have entered into the house made the prosecutrix, lie on the ground and committed rape but as medical evidence not proving comission of rape, accused was guilty of attempt of committing rape only. On the record nothing has been brought by the applicant / accused to show and suggest that the prosecutrix is telling lies. The defence of the consent can straightway be rejected because it is nobody's case that the prosecutrix was seen in the company of the accused and to save her skin she was lodging the false report. On the other hand, it has come on the record that none had seen them and it was the prosecutrix who had opened the bolt of the door of her parents in law. After giving my anxious considerations to the arguments of the parties and on going through the record, I am unable to hold that the applicant has been wrongly held guilty of the commission of the crime punishable under Sections 376 / 511, IPC. Ramdil v. State of M.P. 2002 Cr LJ 861 (Chattishgarh) : 2001(2) Crimes 267.

Where according to medical evidence hymen of the prosecutrix was torn and red and inflamed and redness was seen over the vaignal orifice and labia minora, and that there was clear pain visible on the touch. According to her the age of the prosecutrix was 14 to 15 years, and that she was not used to sexual intercourse. She further stated that rape might have taken place 24 hours before the examination. However, the isolated sentence in her deposition that in her opinion it was attempted rape was taken into account by the learned Additional Sessions Judge, and he did not appreciate the evidence of Doctor as a whole as a result of which he recorded the finding of attempt to rape. Unfortunately, the prosecution did not file any appeal in this behalf, and it is the applicant who has come before the court in revision challenging his conviction under Section 376 read with 511, I.P.C. Barkatullakha v. State of Maharasthra. 2002 Cr LJ 427 (Bom.) : 2001 All MR (Cri) 2024.

30. Gang rape.—The medical officer who medically examined the deceased found no local injury on their private parts of sorrounding it, no foreign hair or foreign substance and no matting or public hair and no sign of recent sexual intercourse. The medical officer who examined the urethral smear collected from the accused found no spermatozoa. He also examined the vaginal swab of victim and found no living or dead spermatozoa. Thus the medical evidence on record did not support the prosecution case. There was no sign or symptom of recent sexual intercourse and that the lady was married and was habituated to sexual intercourse and, therefore, it could not be said definitely as to whether she had any sexual intercourse or not. In her statement, in cross- examination of medical officer, stated that the abrasion noticed on the forearm of the victim was possible by self-infliction or by friendly hands. In her statement in cross-examination the prosecutrix stated that she also resisted the first rapist by inflicting injuries on his chest, face and other parts of the body and on the second rapist on different parts of his body by means of nail and that she sustained injuries on her shoulder, head and leg but this did not find corroboration from the medical evidence on record. The conduct of the prosecutrix in not reporting the incident to the immediate neighbours, but reporting the incident to the distant neighbours could not be held to be in the normal course of human conduct. In view of the above the accused were not held guilty of the charge under section 376(2)(g), IPC. Sampad v. State, 2001 Cr LJ 793 (Ori).

As per deposition of the prosecutrix that, two juvenile accused and accused compelled prosecutrix to go upstairs where she was raped by main accused, there is no evidence that accused stood guard when the prosecutrix was forcibly taken upstairs. It cannot be said that accused shared any common intention with main accused and in furtherance thereof facilitated prosecutrix being raped by main accused. Held, accused cannot be convicted for offence of gang rape. Amit vs. State, 2010 (3) Cri LJ 3154 (Del).

Accused persons raped a girl aged 14 years. After going through the entire prosecution case, Court finds that the evidences of witnesses have fully supported the prosecution case that in the night of occurrence when the victim had gone out of her house for easing and coming back to her house she was caught hold by the accused, Bablu Singh alias Surya Deo Singh of Rehla committed rape upon her by force. Doctor has also found that the victim girl was a minor aged about 14 years and there was sign of rape. She had external injury on her hand and back which she had alleged was caused when by force the accused threw her on the ground and committed forceful rape, then she received injuries on her back and hand. The doctor also found injury on her private part, which was caused by forceful penetration by erected penis.

The Investigating Officer has also supported the prosecution case and as such, in my opinion, the learned trial Court rightly convicted the appellant, Bablu Singh alias Surya Deo Singh of Rehla.

However, as far as the appeal filed by co-accused is concerned, the informant has only alleged that he was present with the main accused, there is no allegation that he also instigated co-accused to commit rape upon the victim girl, nor he touched her or even attempted to commit any offence against her as per her statement when the main accused after closing her mouth dragged her to the field behind the wall of Mahabir Sao. He did not go behind him rather he stayed in the lane. There is no allegation that even after the occurrence when was giving threat to the victim girl, he simply went away. In that view of the matter, there is no allegation of either committing rape or helping the main accused in committing rape only because he was standing in the lane. The victim, thought that he was guarding the occurrence. Bablu Singh alias Surya Deo Singh and Anr. vs. State of Jharkhand, 2010 (1) Cri LJ 622 (Jhar).

The allegations made in the First Information Report are not evidence. She might have named four persons, namely, accused Nos. 1 to 4 in the FIR, but, as indicated hereinbefore, she named only accused Nos. 1 to 3 in her deposition. Only accused No.1. Babu, has been named by PW7 and none other. She, therefore, knew only the four persons. She had not named accused Nos.5 and 6 either in the FIR or in her deposition.

They had been arrested on the basis of the statements made by their co-accused. They had not been put to Test Identification Parade. The prosecutrix, in her deposition before the learned Trial Judge, neither named nor identified accused Nos. 4 to 6. On what basis, therefore, their guilt is said to have been established is not known. Both, the learned Trial Judge as also the High Court, in their judgments did not deal with this aspect of the matter.

In a situation of this nature, a Test Identification Parade was required to be held at least for the purpose of identification of accused Nos. 5 and 6. Some weight should have been given for arriving at a finding as regards the guilt of accused Nos.5 and 6, as they had not been identified in the court.

We, therefore, are of the opinion that in absence of any Test Identification Parade having been held or they having been identified in Court, the accused Nos.4 to 6 cannot be held guilty of commission of the said offence. They are, in our opinion, have wrongly been convicted. Viswanathan and Ors. v. State, Rep. by Inspector of Police, Tamil Nadu. AIR 2008 SC 2222 : 2008 (6) SCR 1222 (SC) : 2008 (5) SCC 354 : 2008 (5) JT 629 (SC) : 2008 (6) Scale 462 (SC) : 2008 (4) SLT 795 (SC) : 208 (6) SRJ 41 (SC) : 2008 (2) SCC (Cr) 593 : 2008 (2) Recent CR 888 (SC).

Common intention. Sec. 376(2)(g), Explanation-I one appended to the said provision clearly states that the persons who have common intention to commit the said offence would also be liable in terms of Sec. 376(2)(g) of the Act. The common intention of all the accused need not be supported by the fact that each one of them took part in actual commission of the offence. The very fact that they came on cycles and dashed with the cycle of victim's brother would clearly show that they had a common intention to commit the offence. If they had the common intention of committing the offence, they although were charged under Sec. 376 in general, they could be convicted also under Sec. 376(2)(g) as the latter is merely a graver form of the offence of rape as defined in Sec. 375 of the Code. In any event, we do not find that they were prejudiced in any manner whatsoever; as evidently :

(1) they not only gathered and obstructed her from proceeding towards her residence with her brother in the bicycle but also deliberately making her and her brother to fall down from the cycle; and

(2) She was physically removed to a secluded place and at least three of them took part in committing the offence of rape on her one by one. Viswanathan and Ors. v. State, Rep. by Inspector of Police, Tamil Nadu, AIR 2008 SC 2222 : 2008 (6) SCR 1222 (SC) : 2008 (5) SCC 354 : 2008 (5) JT 629 (SC) : 2008 (6) Scale 462 (SC) : 2008 (4) SLT 795 (SC) : 208 (6) SRJ 41 (SC) : 2008 (2) SCC (Cr) 593 : 2008 (2) Recent CR 888 (SC).

The accused took the prosecutrix in the field where both of the accused persons raped her one by one. She categorically stated that she was raped by both the accused persons. The evidence of prosecutrix cannot be disbelieved only for the reason that she forgot as to which of the accused had raped her first. There was nothing to disbelieve the evidence of the prosecutrix which stand duly corroborated by medical evidence which stated that hymen of prosecutrix was found torn and swollen. Thalli v. State of M.P., 2001 Cr LJ 4606 (M.P.).

Accused persons compelled prosecutrix to enter inside structure called Khooni Darwaja and robbed her and thereafter appellant accused raped her by stripping her and continuously threatened her with knife. Testimony of prosecutrix, truthful and reliable.

The injuries on the body of accused MLC have not been explained by accused and the said injuries also suggest that accused had knelt on a hard surface and had pressed his knees. This would have happened if accused either exercised by shifting his weight on his knees or indulged in sexual intercourse with a girl lying below. The injury on the right cheek of accused has not been explained by him.

The report shows that the DNA fingerprint isolated from the blood sample of accused matched the fingerprints isolated from the sanitary pad.

This Court need to note no further qua his involvement in the crime of criminally intimidating prosecutrix using a knife to rob her and thereafter raping her. Amit vs. State, 2010 (3) Cri LJ 3154 (Del).

On examination of testimony of prosecutrix, it is clear that she was friendly with the appellant No. 1. The appellant No. 1 was apparently financially well of. The appellant No. 1 had been proposing marriage to P.W.2 Edalina. On the day of the incident the appellant No. 1 had promised to marry P.W. 2 if he cooperated. It is, thus, clear that P.W. 2 Edalina had succumbed and had agreed to the sexual intercourse with the appellant No. 1 on the promise of marriage made by the appellant No. 1. Her conduct thereafter in repeatedly going to the house and to the office of the appellant No. 1 would clearly show that since the appellant No. 1 was not fulfilling his promise, she was berating him to fulfill his promise. It is, thus, clear that this report came to be lodged with the police complaining of rape when the appellant No. 1 did not fulfill his promise of marriage. Agnelo alias Róbert Fernandes and others v. The State 2002 Cr LJ 3007 : 2002 All MR (Cri) 1294.

A girl of 19 years while walking in public street with her sister was forcibly abducted by 10 accused persons and she was taken to Secluded place where she was gang raped by the accused, one after another. It was fully supported by medical evidence the doctor found that there were injuries on her breasts and hymen ruptured. The reading of Section 376 IPC would clearly show that the minimum punishment is 10 years and the same may be extended to life and shall also be liable to fine. The language of the proviso to Sex Section makes it abundantly clear that the court is under an obligation to impose a minimum punishment once the conviction is recorded under Section 376(2) (g). Undoubtedly, the proviso rest power on the court to award less than minimum punishment, if the court convicting and sentencing the accused, is of the opinion that for any special reasons which the court is under an obligation to record in writing, a sentence of imprisonment for a term less than the minimum is called for. Rajendran and etc. etc. v. State of Tamil Nadu, 2002 Cr LJ 2292 (Mad.) : 2003(1) Andh LT (Cri) MD 27 : 2002 (4) Crimes 368.

Prosecution case cannot be rejected only on the ground that there was delay in lodging FIR. Much was said about delay in the FIR, invariably in the rape case, there would be delay. The parents of the victim would be reluctant to come to police to give a complaint of rape, since they may think that the victim's future will be spoiled. Under those circumstances, the delay in lodging the FIR or the delay in FIR reaching the court in this case cannot be a ground to reject the prosecution case unless there is a material to show that the delay has been used by the prosecution to implicate several accused persons falsely. Rajendran and etc. etc. v. State of Tamil Nadu 2002 Cr LJ 2292 (Mad.) : 2003(1) Andh LT (Cri) MD 27 : 2002(4) Crimes 368.

In the instant case, the accused took away the victim to the forest from the field where she had gone to serve meal to her grand mother and gang-raped her. The delay in filing of FIR was properly explained and testimony of victim was corroborated by medical evidence as doctor had stated that signs of forcible sexual assault were visible. The conviction of accused for gang rape was held proper. Dev Kishan v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 1118 (Raj) : 2002(3) Raj LR 441 : 2003(4) Raj LW 2606 : 2003(1) WL 661.

It was alleged that the victim was gang-raped and murdered and victims' brother was eye-witness. It was held that the evidence of victims brother was not reliable as under circumstances of the case no human being would have remained passive if his own sister was being raped and butched to his death before his own eyes. The conviction of accused was set aside. State v. Dayanand, 2003 Cr LJ (NOC) 259 (Kant) : AIR 2003 Kant HCR 2510 : 2003(2) Andh LT (Cri) Kar 515 : 2003(4) Crimes 93.

Though the evidence of prosecutrix that she was raped by accused persons was fully corroborated by medical evidence yet since accused persons aged below 22 years and remaining in custody for about six years hence sentence reduced to 8 years. Gulthu Soren v. State of Bihar, 2005 (3) East Cr C 184 (Jhar).

The victim was caught and gang raped by accused persons. There was no evidence showing that victim was a consenting party and consent cannot be presumed merely because she was 16 years of age. The evidence of prosecutrix and her mother was trustworthy and reliable. The conviction of accused was held proper. Kuldeep Singh v. State, 2003 Cr LJ 3777 (P&H) : 2003(3) Rec Cri R 455.

In a Jharkhand case the victim was repeatedly gang-raped. She was so much ravished that she was unable to wear her clothes and to walk. In a Bombay case, the victim was raped by her husband, father in law and three other relatives. She was so shocked that police sent her for medical treatment first and registered the FIR after 3 days when she became normal. Her statement was supported by medical evidence and recovery of torn clothes. The conviction under Section 376(G) was held valid. State v. Ambarnath, 2004 Cr LJ 4445 (Bom) : 2004(2) Bom CR (Cri) 342.

Woman cannot be prosecuted for alleged commission of offence of gang rape. In the present case, complaint was lodged by the prosecutrix alleging that she was returning by Utkal Express after attending a sports meet. When she reached her destination at Sagar, accused-husband of appellant-accused met her at the railway station and told her that her father has asked him to pick her up from the railway station. Since the prosecutrix was suffering from fever, she accompanied accused to his house. He committed rape on her. When commission of rape was going on, appellant-accused his wife, reached there. The prosecutrix requested the appellant to save her. Instead of saving her, the appellant slapped her, closed the door of the house and left place of incident. On the basis of the complaint lodged, investigation was undertaken and charge-sheet was filed. While accused was charged for offences punishable under Ss. 323 and 376, I.P.C. the appellant was charged for commission of offences punishable under Ss. 323 and 376(2)(g), I.P.C. The High Court was of the view that though a woman cannot commit rape, but if a woman facilitates the act of rape, Expln. I to Sec. 376(2) comes into operation and she can be prosecuted for 'gang rape.' Held, the language of sub-section (2)(g) of Sec. 376 provides that whoever commits 'gang rape' shall be punished etc. The Explanation only clarifies that when a woman is raped by one or more in a group of persons acting in furtherance of their common intention each such person shall be deemed to have committed gang rape within this sub-section (2). That cannot make a woman guilty of committing rape. This is conceptually inconceivable. The Explanation only indicates that when one or more persons act in furtherance of their common intention to rape a woman, each person of the group shall be deemed to have committed gang rape. By operation of the deeming provision, a person who has not actually committed rape is deemed to have committed rape even if only one of the group in furtherance of the common intention has committed rape. The sine quo non for bringing in application of Sec. 34, I.P.C. that the act must be done in furtherance of the common intention to do a criminal act. The expression 'in furtherance of their common intention' as appearing in the Explanation to Sec. 376(2) relates to intention to commit rape. A woman cannot be said to have an intention to commit rape and, therefore, appellant-accused cannot be prosecuted for alleged commission of the offence punishable under Sec. 376(2)(g). Priya Patel v. State of M.P. and Anr., 2006 CriLJ 3627 (SC).

31. Rape of married woman.—The injuries found on the person of the prosecutrix PW-1 Kalawati have corroborative value and her complaints just after the occurrence to /PW-2 Kumbharam and after coming over to her house, to her sister and mother-in-law, warrant credence to her statement. The medical evidence amply corroborates that she had injuries on her body and this leads to only one conclusion that she resisted at her best to the act of the accused-appellant, as she has clearly stated that in third attempt, the accused - appellant became successful in committing rape with her. Apart from this, even the chemical examination report Ex. P/13 shows that gagra of the prosecutrix PW.1 Kalawait was stained with human semen and this fact also corroborates the statement of the prosecutrix PW-1 Kalawat. Therefore the statement of prosecutrix was fully corroborated by medical evidence. Therefore conviction upheld. Jaswant Singh v. State of Rajasthan. 2002 Cr LJ 3260 Raj. H.C.

32. Presumption.—Presumption is attracted to cases falling under Section 376(2) and not to cases falling under Section 376(1). Ramcharan v. State of M.P., 1993 Cr LJ 1825 (MP).

33. Abetment.—Offence was committed in hut in possession of accused—Hence it was held that simply because said hut was in possession same would not be sufficient to conclude any abetment on his part. Ashok Nivruti Desai v. State of Maharashtra, 1995 Cr LJ 826 (Bom).

34. Sexual Assault.—The evidence of the Doctor showing that victim was less then 16 years. The word 'hath path', according to this dictionary, means "Laying hands on - Garnu to lay hands on, (esp) to violate (a woman)". Learned counsel submits that 'hath path means only laying hands on. This submission ignores the words "to violate (a woman)". It is true that Sashikala in her evidence used the expression 'indecent act'. But note has also been taken of the fact that she used the expressions 'forcibly' and 'without her consent' also. All the words taken together could with the fact that her father used the word 'rape' in his examination-in-chief left no manner of doubt that the words, 'indecent act' and 'hath path' were understood by all the witnesses suggesting sexual intercourse. This is further fortified by the fact that subsequently, a female child was born from Sashikala after a pregnancy of about 34 weeks. Madan Chettri v. State of Sikkim 2002 Cr LJ 3149 (Sik).

From the evidence of P.W.1. It is clear that only A-1 to A-6 committed the offence and A-7 and A-8 only watched the incident. She further deposed that all the accused physically lifted her to her own fields and made her to stand at one place and discussed about the manner in which she should be killed i.e., whether she should be put in a gunny bag and thrown in a well or to kill her by stabbing. That indicated that the accused had the initial intention to commit the offense under Section 302, I.P.C., but somehow they developed the idea of committing the offense under Section 376. IPC and such idea culminated into offense. Therefore, it is clear from the evidence on record that A-1 to A-6 are liable for the offense under Section 376, I.P.C. and as per the evidence of P.W.1, A-7 and A-8 did not participate in the offense and they simply watched the incident. As already discussed, the initial intention of all the accused was to kill and therefore, it cannot be accepted that A-7 and A-8 also had an intention to commit the offense under Section 376, I.P.C. Mekala Raji Reddy and Others v. State of Andhra Pradesh 2002 Cr LJ 3407 A.P. H.C. : 2002(1) ALD (CrL) 477 : 2002 Andh LT (Cri) AP 306.

35. Charge. —I, (name and office of the Sessions Judge, ect.) hereby change you (name of the accused) as follows—

"That on or about the........day of....... at........you committed rape on (the woman raped) and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 376 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance."

36. Medical Evidence.—Having gone through the evidence on record, it was found that the evidence of the prosecution was to the effect that the appellant caught hold of Smt. Usha Devi and made her fall down. There was no sufficient evidence on record to show that the appellant attempted to commit rape on the deceased. The medical evidence also did not indicate any such attempt. The catching hold of the deceased and making her fall down fall down cannot be said an attempt to rape, but it amounted to assault or force used to outrage the modesty of the deceased. Therefore, though there was no sufficient evidence to make out the offense punishable under Section 376 read with 511 I.P.C. Therefore held conviction of appellant under Section 376/511 I.P.C. is liable to be converted into conviction under Section 354 I.P.C. Shiv Shankar v. State of U.P., 2002 Cr LJ 2673 (Allah.) : 2002 All Cri C 731 : 2002(1) All Cri R 693.

A case of this nature should be viewed having regard to the materials brought on record in their entirety. We have noticed hereinbefore the prosecution case. Indisputably, the prosecutrix was examined medically after a long time. The explanation offered by PW-5 in this behalf, in our opinion, is clear and sufficient. Not only the father of the prosecutrix was not in the village, he had to be sent for and came back to the village only on the next day. Evidently, for good reasons, they did not want to lodge a First Information Report immediately. A panchayat was convened and only when it did not yield any fruitful result, the First Information Report was lodged.

The evidence of the doctor appears to be wholly insufficient. Even she could not complete the medical examination. Despite passage of a long time, an injury on the private parts of the prosecutrix was found. The doctor at least testified that there had been an attempt to commit rape. While saying so, she found the hymen absent which having regard to the medical jurisprudence is of some significance.

Fault in the judgment of the High Court could have been found out if the prosecutrix was a major. Having regard to the nature of medical evidence as also the authorities noticed hereinbefore the conclusion arrived at by the High Court, in our considered opinion, cannot be said to be perverse. Furthermore, for the purpose of satisfaction of the ingredients of rape, it is not necessary that there should be complete penetration. See Aman Kumar and another v. State of Haryana., (2004) 4 SCC 379 : 2004 AIR SCW 827. Satyapal v. State of Haryana., AIR 2009 SC 2190 : 2009 (5) SCR 577 (SC) : 2009 (6) SCC 635 : 2009 (5) JT 291 (SC) : 2009 (5) Scale 431 (SC) : 2009 (3) Supreme 33 (SC) : 2009 (4) SLT 41 (SC) : 2009 (2) Crimes 96 (SC).

Accused lifted victim, a minor handicapped girl on her request in getting down to ground floor and took her into his house, laid her on a cot and committed rape. There is every possibility of these witnesses to get down from the upstairs through the stair case to watch television, was unable to get down from the stairs because of physical incapacity i.e. right leg and right hand were affected with polio. At that time, the accused came there and child witnesses requested him to take her to the ground floor, but the accused after taking her by physically lifting to the ground floor, taken her inside his house and committed rape on her. There is a ring of truth in the evidence of other children coupled with the objective findings in the observation report. When child witnesses was taken inside the house, there will be curiosity for the other children to see what was happening inside the house. Admittedly, wooden door planks have not been fixed to the door frames, but only curtains were fixed. When such is the case other children peeped through the curtain by pushing the curtain slightly aside and witnessed the incident, cannot be ruled out.

Testimony of child witnesses that accused removed his lungi and laid on victim girl after lifting her skirt. Is truthful and corroborated with medical evidence. In view of the above discussion, this Court has no hesitation in holding that there was no appreciation of evidence at all by the trial Court and that the prosecution proved its case against the accused beyond all reasonable doubt of the offence punishable under Section 376, IPC. Therefore, the impugned judgment is liable to be set aside. The Public Prosecutor, High Court of A.P., Hyderabad vs K. Venkateshwarlu, 2010 Cri LJ 1568 (AP).

DNA test is clinching piece of evidence. In the instant case a minor school student was raped by a watchman in her school. Medical evidence corroborated evidence of witness. The clinching evidence has come from the Senior Scientific Officer who carried out the DNA test on the basis of the material forwarded to him and which was collected by Dr. 'S'. He has confirmed that the accused is the contributor of the semen which was collected by Dr. 'S' in the form of vaginal swab. DNA (Deoxyribonucleic acid) is found specially in cell nuclei which are the foundation of heredity. DNA is the genetic blue print for life and is virtually contained in every cell. No two persons, except identical twins have ever had identical DNA. DNA testing can make a virtually positive identification when the two samples match. It exonerates the innocent and helps to convict the guilty. The DNA testing hits the nail on the head of the accused and is the last and clinching piece of evidence which shows that it is the accused and the accused alone who committed the rape on the victim. Raghuvir Dessai v. State. 2007 CriLJ 829 (Bom).

37. Application for Bail.—Where the victim could recognise all the accused however, did not know their names and the accused was later on recognised by the prosecutrix, prima facie involvement of the accused, stood proved and therefore, bail could not be granted. If prima facie material is available to show that the accused has actively participated in the commission of offence the court may in its discretion refuse to grant bail. In the present case, at the time of lodging F.I.R. though the victim lady had seen all the four accused persons did not know two of them by name including the petitioner. While searching for the accused persons along with the police officers, she could identify the petitioner along with two other accused persons standing together and, therefore, there is no scope to disbelieve the victim lady. Anil Kumar Samartha v. State of Orissa 2002 Cr LJ 1194 (Ori.) : 2002(4) All Cri LR 118.

38. Conspiracy of wife of accused.—The co-accused wife took the minor girl to her house and closed door from outside leaving girl and her husband (accused) alone inside the house. Thereafter accused committed rape on her and disclosure of fact was made by prosecutrix to her parents after two days. There was convincing evidence of prosecution that co-accused had entered into in conspiracy with her husband. Her plea that no wife will help her husband in commission of sexual intercourse with another woman was not accepted. The conviction of accused under Section 376 and co-accused under Section 376 read with Section 120B was held proper. Tej Khan v. State. 2004 Cr LJ 276 (MP) : 2003 Cri LR (SC&MP) MPJ 815 : 2003(4) MPLJ 581.

39. Kidnapping, rape and offence of business of prostitution.—It is clear from the statement of the prosecutrix under Section 164 Criminal Procedure Code, recorded by the Magistrate, in her written report and in her statement before the Court that the accused appellant kidnapped her from Nagpur on the pretext of leaving her to her house at Vardha, but he taken her away to his village Ramnagar in Bundi where he committed rape with her and also business of prostitution by collecting money from other persons. The brother of the accused appellant also stated that he has seen Sharda prosecutrix with the accused appellant in a rented house, though he has been declared hostile. The police witnesses in equal vocal terms stated about the mischief done with the prosecutrix by the accused appellant. I am in agreement with the finding of rape arrived at by the trial Court with the prosecutrix and she has been forced by the accused appellant to do prostitution with other persons and collected money from them. It is also clear from the evidence of the prosecution witnesses mentioned above and as per the statement of the prosecutrix coupled with the report of FSL and medical examination done by the doctors, her statement under Section 164 Criminal Procedure Code and her written report submitted to the police, that accused committed rape with her and further the accused appellant forced her to do the business of prostitution and he collected money from the persons who came to him for sex satisfaction with the prosecutrix. The findings arrived at by the trial Court cannot be said to be perverse. I am also in agreement with the finding of the trial Court that the prosecution has been able to prove the charges levelled against the accused appellant beyond reasonable doubt. The judgment of conviction recorded by the trial Court on the charges levelled against him and proved by the evidence of prosecution witnesses is confirmed. But looking to the age of the accused appellant his sentence can be reduced from 10 years to 7 years.

In the result the conviction of the accused appellants for Sections 366, 366-A, 368, 372, 376 IPC and for Sections 3, 6 and 9 of the Immoral Traffic (Prevention) Act, 1956 is confirmed but his sentence is reduced from 10 years to 7 years. Yogesh vs. State of Rajasthan, 2010 (1) CriLJ 629 (Raj).

40. Rape and unnatural offence.—Accused Headmaster have raped or subjected school girls aged between 8-12 years to unnatural offence. Victims, capable of being tutored and overwhelming evidence reflecting such tutoring. Their testimony being not corroborated, cannot form basis for conviction. Sekaran vs. State, 2010 (2) CrLJ 2341 (Mad).

41. Rape and Unnatural intercourse—Intercourse is necessary ingredient in both offences.—In the instant case the prosecution itself has alleged that the accused is guilty of the offences punishable under Sections 376 and 377 of IPC. It is true that such a charge in a given case can be levelled and framed. However, both acts are separate offence. If sexual intercourse forcibly with a woman and that too a minor is an offence punishable under Section 376 and unnatural intercourse is independently made an offence under Section 377, then mere version of the victim when both charges are levelled i.e. the act of rape and unnatural intercourse, would not necessarily be conclusive to hold that the charges are proved. The medical evidence and the reports of chemical analyzer assume some significance. In this case, the samples have been collected nearly two months from the incident and the analysis report has been forwarded a good five and half months after the date of incident. The findings therein do not conclusively show that either of the offences have been committed. The charge under Section 375 can be proved by demonstrating that the case falls in the explanation to Section 375. However, there has to be evidence of atleast intercourse and penetration so as to bring it within the case of the explanation. In the instant case, even that is not conclusive, leave alone, reliable and trustworthy. Rape constitutes sexual intercourse with a woman. The explanation states that penetration is sufficient to constitute the sexual intercourse necessary to the offence of rape. Section 377 of IPC presupposes carnal intercourse against the order of nature. It has similar explanation. However, intercourse is necessary ingredient in both the offences. That itself is not proved in this case. Hence accused would be entitled to acquittal. Kailash Laxman Khamkar vs. State of Maharashtra, 2010 (3) Cri LJ 3255 (Bom).

42. Delay.—Delay in lodging FIR.—If the incident of rape was true and the complainant had the support of Laxman Sarpanch, he would have gone to police station to lodge the report soon after the occurrence, but after passing more than 50 hours, the complainant is found to have lodged the report with the police, whereas the distance between the place of occurrence and the police station is only 5 kms. The prosecution has utterly failed to furnish reasonable and satisfactory explanation of more than 50 hours inordinate delay in lodging the FIR. Hence, this delay is found to be fatal to the prosecution. Ramdhan vs. State of Rajasthan, 2010 (3) CrLJ 2652 (Raj).

We find no merit in the submission made for the appellants that FIR was ante timed and brought into existence so as to falsely implicate the appellants. There is no reason to disbelieve the evidence of prosecutrix and her mother that attempts were made to lodge the FIR on the next day of the occurrence of the incident but the police did not co-operate and intimated any action. The attempt on the part of the police to protect the accused from day one of the occurrence is clear and obvious.

This Court, in exercise of its jurisdiction under Article 136 of the Constitution of India, does not act as a third appellate Court. Suffice it to hold that the verdict in the instance case did not result in any miscarriage of justice. The impugned judgment is not an erroneous one. Nor the judgment is vitiated on account of any error either in appreciation of evidence or application of legal principles. Jaswant Singh & Ors. vs. state of Punjab, AIR 2010 SC 894.

The offence alleged against accused is particularly an offence under Section 376, IPC. So also an offence under Section 377, IPC. Such an offence committed against the victim at the instance of the 1st accused would be a stigma during the lifetime of the victim and it is in these circumstances, taking into consideration the culture, and the effect on the reputation of the victim that the complainant was hesitant to approach the Police to lodge a complaint immediately after the incident. They think many a times whether a complaint is to be lodged or not. So, if this aspect is taken into consideration. Held, the delay has not any effect to disbelieve the evidence led. Channabasappa vs. State by Honnali Police, 2010 (3) CriLJ 3369 (Karn).

Delay in lodging complaint—Properly explained.—Appellants raped two victim sisters. It is further seen from the evidence of PWs. 1 and 2/victims that on reaching their home, apart from informing their mother, they also informed about the incident to one Nonayya Gowda PW. 5 who, in turn, informed their owner Subhash Jain PW. 4. PW. 1 explained that though PW. 4 asked them to make a complaint, because of the threat posed by accuseds and out of fear they did not inform the incident to the police and after gaining confidence an courage, finally a complaint (Exhibit. P1) was lodged with the police on 14.07.2004. Though there was a delay of 42 days in lodging complaint to the police, PWs. 1 and 2, in their evidence, explained that all their family members including themselves are uneducated, no male members in their family for their assistance and they settled in the present village to take out their livelihood. Admittedly, on the date of the incident, they were working in quarry owned by PW. 4 and while returning from their workplace by force accuseds committed rape of PWs. 1 and 2. The mother of PWs. 1 and 2 was examined as PW. 14. She also corroborated the assertion of PWs. 1 and 2 about their illiteracy and fear due to the threat call of accuseds. In those circumstances, the evidence of PWs. 1 and 2 and their complaint Exhibit. P1 cannot be rejected as unacceptable. In a case of rape, particularly, the victims are illiterate, uneducated, their statements have to be accepted in toto without further corroboration.

From the evidence of PW. 1, PW. 2, owner of the quarry PW. 4 and mother of the victim PW-14, there was a delay of 42 days in lodging the complaint, the same was properly explained by the victims and the other witnesses. In addition to the same, Court had also noticed that except the victims, no male member is available in their family to help them. In fact they came to the village where the incident occurred to take out their livelihood. Further, PWs. 1 and 2 asserted that after committing rape A-1 and A-2 threatened that they would kill them if they inform anyone. All these material aspects were duly considered by the trial Court and accepted by the High Court. Court concur with the same.

Coming to the discrepancies in the evidence of PWs. 1 and 2, as rightly pointed out by the prosecution and accepted by both the Courts below, they are negligible in nature and it had not affected their grievance, hence Court rejected the said contention also.

Discrepancies in evidence of victims were negligible in nature. Absence of injury on private part of victims due to fact that they were taken to doctor after a month and 14 days. Conviction of appellants is proper. Santosh Moolya and Anr. vs. State of Karnataka, 2010 (3) CrLJ 2892 (SC).

Delay in lodging FIR—Contra. In normal course of human conduct an unmarried girl who is victim of sexual offence would not like to give publicity to the traumatic experience she had undergone and would feel terribly embarrassed in relation to the incident to narrate such incident. Overpowered, as she may be, by a feeling of shame her natural inclination would be to avoid talking to anyone, lest the family name and honour is brought into controversy. Thus, delay in lodging the first information report cannot be used as a ritualistic formula for doubting the prosecution case and discarding the same on the ground of delay in lodging the first information report.

In the instant case, the girl was a minor below the age of 16 years. She was studying in Class VIII and the accused was the drawing teacher of that class. It is no doubt true that the prosecutrix did not report the incident to anyone either on the first occasion or on the second. Ultimately a stage was reached when she could not keep it a secret since her mother discovered that she was pregnant. In these circumstances, she was compelled to disclose the true facts. Having regard to the facts and circumstances of the case, delay could not be treated as fatal to prosecution case. Dildar Singh v. State of Punjab, 2006 CriLJ 3914 (SC).

43. Evidence of prosecutrix—Evidentory value.—Accused took prosecutrix to a school on pretext of giving toffee and raped her. Prosecutrix being a young girl aged 8-9 years at time of incident it is extremely unlikely that she would make false allegation of rape against accused who was residing in same locality. Plea of false implication on account of quarrel with parents of prosecutrix over parking of vegetable carts.

It is by now settled proposition of law by a catena of decisions of the Hon'ble Supreme Court, including Rafiq vs. State of U.P, 1980 CriLJ 1344 = AIR 1981 SC 559 and Bhoginbhai Hirjibhai vs. State of Gujarat AIR 1983 SC 753 = 1983 CriLJ 1096, State vs. Chandra Prakash, AIR 1990 SC 658 = 1990 CriLJ 889, and also the decision in the case of Radhu vs. State of MP, AIR 2007 SC (Supp) 847 relied upon by the learned counsel for the appellant herself that conviction in a case of rape can be based solely upon the uncorroborated evidence of the prosecutrix, which should not be rejected on the basis of minor discrepancies and contradictions, unless there are such facts and circumstances present in a particular case which would persuade the Court to look for corroboration for her testimony. In the present case, there are no such circumstances as would justify looking for the corroboration of the testimony of the prosecutrix. The Court cannot treat the testimony of the prosecutrix in a rape at par with that of an accomplice in a crime which requires corroboration and no infirmity is attached to the testimony if a victim of such a heinous crime. In fact, it would only be adding insult to the injury if the Court insists on corroboration of her testimony, even in the absence of circumstances which would warrant adoption of such a course of action.

In any case, even if the Court does look for corroboration of the testimony of the prosecutrix, the same is available in abundance in the present case. The testimony of the prosecutrix, finds full corroboration not only from the injuries, including torn vagina found on her person when she was examined in the hospital but also from the statement made by her first to her parents and then to the doctor soon after this incident took place. The previous statements of the prosecutrix are admissible in evidence under Section 157 of the Evidence Act and this proposition of law was recognized by the Hon'ble Supreme Court in Madan Lal vs. State of J & K, AIR 1998 SC 386 = 1998 CriLJ 667, where the statement made by the prosecutrix to her mother soon after the incident was accepted as a corroboration of her testimony in the Court.

The appellant had raped the prosecutrix taking advantage of her tender age and taking her to a secluded school which had no watchman and, therefore, he has rightly been convicted under Section 376(f) of Indian Penal Code the age of the prosecutrix at the time of commission of offence being less than 12 years. Hari Om vs. State (NCT), 2010 (2) CrLJ 1281 (Delhi).

Accused took prosecutrix, a minor girl inside his house and committed rape on her. Testimony of prosecutrix inspires full confidence and corroborated with medical evidence and serological report indicating presence of human semen on salwar of prosecutrix clearly brings home the guilt of the appellant that he raped a young girl of eight years of age who was an orphan and was living on the platform. Her statement was recorded by investigating officer only after her medical examination when it revealed that she had been ravished by someone. It was the prosecutrix who in her statement had given the detail description of the house, its surroundings and the gali number. Not only this, she led the police to the house of the appellant and identified him. It was on her identification that the appellant was arrested. She also identified the appellant in the court. Held, Conviction of accused is proper. Arshad vs The State, 2010 Cri LJ 954 (Delhi).

Hymen of the prosecutrix was intact. Perusal of the record would show that FIR was lodged by the prosecutrix herself on the date of the incident at the police station soon after the incident. When she was sent for medical examination, she again narrated rape on her by the appellant before the medical officer which finds place in her medical report. Thus, the testimony of the prosecutrix stands corroborated by her FIR and contents of medical report.

Cumulative reading of the aforesaid would prove beyond shadow of doubt that it was the appellant who had committed offence of rape on minor girl and had completely ravished her.

However, in the case in hand, even without the examination of doctor, the evidence of prosecutrix stands fully corroborated by the evidence of Sub-inspector of the police station who had virtually caught the appellant red-handed. Thus, even if doctor had not been examined it would not throw or completely discard the prosecution story. The evidence of prosecution witnesses is fully trustworthy and there is no reason to doubt genuineness thereof.

It was also contended by learned counsel for the appellant that since hymen of the prosecutrix was found to be intact, therefore, it cannot be said that an offence of rape was committed on her by the appellant. This contention cannot be accepted as offence of rape has been defined in Sec. 375 of the IPC. Wahid Khan vs State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2010 SC 1 : 2010 CrLJ 517 (SC).

We find that this case is rather an unusual one. The fact that the appellant was in the house of the prosecutrix is admitted on both sides. The prosecution story that the appellant a young man of 31 years had been overpowered by a much older woman is rather difficult to believe.

As per the prosecutrix she had caused these injuries to the appellant during the time of rape and thereafter that the accused had caused her three minor injuries as well whereas the case of the appellant is that he had gone to her house to recover his cow and in a quarrel that followed both had received injuries. In any case as the investigating officer had not verified the statement of the appellant some corroboration for the prosecutrix's story was required. As already mentioned, her son Babulal and Shivbalak, a relative, who had reached the place of incidence, were both declared hostile and did not support the prosecutrix. We find that even her husband Sampat who had accompanied her to the police station to lodge the report did not come into the witness box and the doctor was also unable to confirm the factum of rape.

In Motilal v. State of Madhya Pradesh, 2008 SCC (11) 20 : AIR 2008 SC (Supp) 882 : 2008 AIR SCW 4846 held that the evidence of the prosecutrix was liable to be believed save in exceptional circumstances. There can be no quarrel with this proposition (and it has been so emphasised by this Court time and again) but to hold that a prosecutrix must be believed irrespective of the improbabilities in her story is an argument that can never be accepted. The test always is as to whether the given story prima facie inspires confidence. We are of the opinion that the present matter is indeed an exceptional one. Dinesh Jaiswal vs State of M.P., 2010 AIR SCW 1606 : AIR 2010 SC 1540.

The learned Counsel for the appellants made at attempt to contend that the appellants were falsely implicated in the present case due to enmity between the parents of prosecutrix and the appellants with regard to construction of a wall. The Courts below having considered the similar submission rejected the same and observed that the alleged dispute over a common wall was not of such a grave nature compelling the entire family of the prosecutrix to go to the extent of putting at stake its reputation and fair name of a young girl child to settle the scores with the accused. Jaswant Singh & Ors. vs. State of Punjab, AIR 2010 SC 894.

Rape on minor girl — Sole testimony of prosecutrix. The following parameters and factors that need to be kept in mind, which emerge in cases of a rape of a girl child. Such cases need to be dealt with sensitively and not like cases involving other penal offences. In other words, the whole approach of the Courts must be quite different. The traditional non-permissive bounds of Indian Society must be kept in mind while examining the evidence in cases involving sexual offences. Social factors play an important role in the nature and quality of available evidence. The sole testimony of a prosecutrix is enough to convict a person accused of rape, if the testimony is free from blemish and implicitly reliable. Such testimony does not need corroboration; but if there is some doubt about the implicit reliability of the testimony, then the Court may look for assurance to the acceptability of the testimony, short of its corroboration. If the testimony of the prosecutrix is reliable and trustworthy, then minor contradictions are not enough to throw out the evidence and other issues such as non-examination of an available witness, even the non-examination of a doctor or the non-production of the doctor's report would not be fatal to the case of the prosecution. Mohd. Alam v. State (NCT of Delhi), 2007 CriLJ 803 (Del).

Contra. The bare statement by a child, aged 16 years that she was "raped" alone may not be sufficient for the Court to come to a finding that an offence under S. 376 IPC is committed. The Court must be satisfied that she was subjected to penile penetration or that there was at least an attempt of penile penetration. In the light of the medical evidence that the vagina admits only one finger, a more detailed investigation into the relevant details would be necessary. But in the absence of it it will be improper for the High Court to enter a finding that accused committed only an offence under S. 354 IPC and not under S. 376. Santhosh Madhavan alias Amrutha Chaithanya v. Circle Inspector of Police Ernakulam and Anr., 2008 CriLJ 4246 (Ker).

44. False implication due to enmity.—The learned Counsel for the appellants made at attempt to contend that the appellants were falsely implicated in the present case due to enmity between the parents of prosecutrix and the appellants with regard to construction of a wall. The Courts below having considered the similar submission rejected the same and observed that the alleged dispute over a common wall was not of such a grave nature compelling the entire family of the prosecutrix to go to the extent of putting at stake its reputation and fair name of a young girl child to settle the scores with the accused. Jaswant Singh & Ors. vs. state of Punjab, AIR 2010 SC 894.

45. Extra-judicial confession.—According to this Court, in such a situation, to go in search of corroboration itself tends to cause a shadow of doubt over the evidence and if the evidence of extra-judicial confession is reliable, trustworthy and beyond reproaching, the same can be relied upon and a conviction can be founded thereon. Here, in this case, it is proved by the prosecution that witness (Ex-Pradhan of Village) was not on inimical terms with the appellant at all. After subjecting his evidence to a rigorous test on the touchstone of credibility, this Court finds that extra-judicial confession referred to by the witness is reliable and is rightly accepted by the trial Court and the High Court. The contention that when the appellant was being brought to the Court, he was in custody and, therefore, the extra-judicial confession referred to by witness would be hit by the provisions of Section 26 of the Evidence Act and could not have been received in evidence, cannot be accepted. The appellant could not probablise his defence that he was in custody of police officer. He could not name the police officer who had brought him to the Court premises for extension of judicial remand nor it is his case that to the hearing of the police officer who brought him to the Court premises, he had made confessional statement before witness. On the facts and in the circumstances of the case, this Court is of the opinion that it is not probabilised by the defence that the appellant was in custody of police officer while he had made extra-judicial confession before witness. The evidence relating to extra-judicial confession inspires confidence of this Court. On this point, there is concurrent finding by the Courts below and no case is made out by the appellant to interfere with the said finding in the present appeal. Aftab Ahmad Anasari vs. State of Uttaranchal, AIR 2010 SC 773.

46. Rape and outraging of modesty of woman.—The prosecution has clearly established commission of offence punishable under Secs. 354 and 506 IPC. So far as the offence punishable under Sec. 376 IPC is concerned, the basic ingredients are set out in Sec. 375 IPC. On a reading of the evidence of the prosecutrix, we find that a case of rape has not been established so far as the respondent is concerned.

That being the position, we allow the appeal of the State to the extent that the respondent is convicted for offences punishable under Secs. 354 and 506 IPC. The sentence are two years' and six months' rigorous imprisonment respectively. It is stated that the appellant has suffered more than that period of custody. If that being so, he need not surrender to custody. The appeal is allowed to the aforesaid extent. State of Himachal Pradesh vs. Prem Singh, AIR 2009 SC 1010 : 2009 (1) SCC 420 : 2008 CrLJ 786 : 2008 (15) SCR 1058 : 2009 (15) Scale 132.

Attempt to rape — Outraging modesty of women. Action of lifting victim, putting her on bed, removing her underwear and lifting her frock did outrage the modesty of victim. There was no attempt to rape as there was no attempt to penetrate. Held, offence under S. 354 made out. Tika Ram Chettri vs State of Sikkim, 2010 (4) CriLJ 4025 (Sikkim).

An attempt to commit an offence can be said to begin when the preparations are complete and culprit commences to do something with the intention of committing the offence and which is a step towards the commission of the offence. The moment he commences to do an act with the necessary intention, he commences his attempt to commit the offence. This is what exactly provisions of S. 511 IPC require. In the present case accused has made preparations, his preparations were complete when he had put off his pant and took out his male organ in order to fulfill his lust, he put his male organ into the mouth of the prosecutrix and then struck against her private part or vice versa the accused had commenced his act and it was subjected towards the commission of offence, but in the meantime he was interrupted by the calls of the mother of the prosecutrix and fled away from the spot. Thus, series of acts inevitably leads to the commission of the offence which accused neither foresaw nor intended, happens to prevent this. Therefore, there is no escape but to hold accused guilty of the offence of attempt to rape and outraging the modesty of the prosecutrix. Kamal Kumar v. State of H. P., 2009 CriLJ 36 (HP).

47. Abduction and rape.—The appellant belonged to the same Caste and Gotra of the prosecutrix and was a frequent visitor to the house of the prosecutrix. There was a love affair between them and the Court also observed that she did not ever resist her being repeatedly deflowered by the appellant Sunil. In this background, close and careful determination of the age of the prosecutrix is imperative. Doctor, who had clinically examined the prosecutrix, found that her secondary sex characters were well developed.

Doctor who examined the prosecutrix referred her for verification to the Dental Surgeon and the Radiologist. The failure of getting the prosecutrix examined from the Dental Surgeon or the Radiologist despite the fact that she was referred to them by doctor is a serious flaw in the prosecution version. The prosecution also failed to produce any Admission Form of the school which would have been primary evidence regarding the age of the prosecutrix.

The School Leaving Certificate produced by the prosecution was also procured, six days after the incident and three days after the arrest of the appellant. As per that certificate also, she joined the school in the middle of the session and left the school in the middle of the session. The attendance in the school of 100 days is also not reliable.

The prosecutrix was admitted in the school by her brother. The said Ashok Kumar was not examined. The alleged School Leaving Certificate on the basis of which the age was entered in the school was not produced.

The father of the prosecutrix has also not been able to give correct date of birth of the prosecutrix. In his statement he clearly stated that he is giving an approximate date without any basis or record.

On consideration of the totality of the facts and circumstances of this case, it would unsafe to convict the appellant when there are so many infirmities, holes and lacunas in the prosecution version. The appellant is clearly entitled to benefit of doubt and consequently the appeal filed by the appellant deserves to be allowed. The appellant is directed to be released forthwith, if not required in any case. The appeal is accordingly disposed of. Sunil vs. State of Haryana, 2009(4) Crimes 321 (SC) : 2009(14) JT 644 : 2009(14) Scale 370 : 2009(8) Supreme 20 : 2009(9) SLT 92 : 2010(1) JCC 140.

Abduction and rape—Consent. Appellant abducted victim girl and committed rape on her. Victim girl was a minor aged about 13 years. It was established that at time of abduction, appellant offered laddu to victim and after taking laddu she was under intoxication. Further plea that victim girl left her house out of her own will and that she stayed with appellant has got no relevancy since there is no value of her consent she being minor. Conviction of appellant is proper. Pappu Rajak vs State of Jharkhand, 2010 (4) CriLJ 3998 (Jhar).

48. Amendment in provisions—Object of.—The offence of rape occurs in Chapter XVI of IPC. In that Chapter, there is a separate heading for 'Sexual offence', which encompasses Sections 375, 376, 376-A, 376-B, 376-C, and 376-D. 'Rape' is defined in Section 375. Sections 375 and 376 have been substantially changed by Criminal Law (Amendment) Act, 1983, and several new sections were introduced by the new Act, i.e. 376-A, 376-B, 376-C and 376-D. The fact that sweeping changes were introduced reflects the legislative intent to curb with iron hand, the offence of rape which affects the dignity of a woman. State of Madhya Pradesh vs. Sheikh Shahid, AIR 2009 SC 2951 : 2009 (12) SCC 715 : 2009 (8) JT 277 : 2009 (5) SCR 1038 : 2009 (5) Scale 679 : 2009 (3) SLT 744; See also State of Madhya Pradesh vs. Basodi, AIR 2009 SC 3081 : 2009 CrLJ 4284 : 2009 (2) Crimes 273 (SC) : 2009 (12) SCC 318 : 2009 (6) JT 92 : 2009 (6) SCR 1166 : 2009 (6) Scale 353 : 2009 (3) Supreme 501.

49. Intention to introduce Sexual offences—Scope—Discussed.—The offence of rape occurs in Chapter XVI of IPC. It is an offence affecting the human body. In that Chapter, there is a separate heading for 'Sexual offence', which encompasses Secs. 375, 376, 376-A, 376-B, 376-C and 376-D. 'Rape' is defined in Sec. 375. Secs. 375 and 376 have been substantially changed by Criminal Law (Amendment) Act, 1983, and several new Secs. were introduced by the new Act, i.e. 376-A, 376-B, 376-C and 376-D. The fact that sweeping changes were introduced reflects the legislative intent to curb with iron hand, the offence of rape which affects the dignity of a woman. The offence of rape in its simplest term is 'the ravishment of a woman, without her consent, by force, fear or fraud', or as 'the carnal knowledge of a woman by force against her will'. 'Rape' or 'Raptus' is when a man hath carnal knowledge of a woman by force and against her will (Co. Litt. 123-b); or as expressed more fully,' rape is the carnal knowledge of any woman, above the age of particular years, against her will; or of a woman child, under that age, with or against her will (Hale PC 628). The essential words in an indictment for rape are rapuit and carnaliter cognovit; but carnaliter cognovit, nor any other circumlocution without the word rapuit, are not sufficient in a legal sense to express rape; 1 Hon. 6, 1a, 9 Edw. 4, 26 a (Hale PC 628). In the crime of rape, 'carnal knowledge' means the penetration to the slightest degree of the organ alleged to have been carnally known by the male organ of generation (Stephen's "Criminal Law" 9th Ed. P. 262). In 'Encyclopaedia of Crime and Justice' (Volume 4, page 1356) it is stated ". . . . . even slight penetration is sufficient and emission is unnecessary". In Halsbury's Statutes of England and Wales (Fourth Edition) Volume 12, it is stated that even the slightest degree of penetration is sufficient to prove sexual intercourse. It is violation with violence of the private person of a woman-an-outrage by all means. By the very nature of the offence it is an obnoxious act of the highest order. Shekara vs. State of Karnataka, 2009 (4) JT 360 : 2009(3) Scale 104 : 2009(1) Crimes 472 SC.

50. Rape—Meaning of.—The offence of rape in its simplest term is 'the ravishment of a woman, without her consent, by force, fear or fraud', or as 'the carnal knowledge of a woman by force against her will'. 'Rape' or 'Raptus' is when a man hath carnal knowledge of a woman by force and against her will (Co. Litt. 123-b);' or as expressed more fully', rape is the carnal knowledge of any woman, above the age of particular years, against her will; or of a woman child, under that age, with or against her will' (Hale PC 628). The essential words in an indictment for rape are rapuit and carnaliter cognovit; but carnaliter cognovit, nor any other circumlocution without the word rapuit, are not sufficient in a legal sense to express rape; 1 Hon.6, 1a, 9 Edw. 4, 26a (Hale PC 628). It is violation with violence of the private person of a woman; an outrage by all means. By the very nature of the offence it is an obnoxious act of the highest order. State of Madhya Pradesh vs. Sheikh Shahid, AIR 2009 SC 2951 : 2009 (12) SCC 715 : 2009 (8) JT 277 : 2009 (5) SCR 1038 : 2009 (5) Scale 679 : 2009 (3) SLT 744.

51. Adequate and special reasons for Imposition of less than prescribed minimum.—In both Sub-sections (1) and (2) of Section 376 minimum sentences are prescribed. Both in cases of Sub-sections (1) and (2) the Court has the discretion to impose a sentence of imprisonment less than the prescribed minimum for 'adequate and special reasons'. If the Court does not mention such reasons in the judgment there is no scope for awarding a sentence lesser than the prescribed minimum. What is applicable to trial Courts regarding recording reasons for a departure from minimum sentence is equally applicable to the High Court. State of Madhya Pradesh vs. Sheikh Shahid, AIR 2009 SC 2951 : 2009 (12) SCC 715 : 2009 (8) JT 277 : 2009 (5) SCR 1038 : 2009 (5) Scale 679 : 2009 (3) SLT 744.

52. Promise of marriage.—Prosecutrix had categorically mentioned about a promise of marriage and the conduct of the appellant in not honouring the same requiring her to submit herself to a person from whom the appellant had to seek a favour.

The suicide note establishes that the intention of the appellant was to use the unfortunate girl and never marry her. Consent of prosecutrix was obtained under a promise of marriage and that the intention of the appellant from the very beginning was not to marry prosecutrix. The proposed matrimonial bond was nothing but a bait to obtain prosecutrix's consent to have physical relationship with the appellant. Ashok Rai vs State, 2010 (1) Cri LJ 1105 (Delhi).

Willingly consented. In the instant case admittedly the prosecutrix was a grown up lady and she was in love with the appellant and she without informing her parents and other persons, used to meet the appellant frequently for last few years at the lonely place and cohabited with him. The only question which needs to be considered is whether she has consented to sexual intercourse after giving assurance of marriage by the appellant to her or not. From scrutinizing the evidences of the witnesses including the informant on record and the contents of the Panchayati report, it is clear that they were in love and they used to meet often. There is no such evidence that the first act of the sexual intercourse was done after giving assurance of marriage by the appellant to the prosecutrix. It usually happens in such cases, when two young persons are madly in love, they make promises several times to get themselves married whatsoever obstacle may come in their way. As stated by the prosecutrix the appellant also made such a promise on more than one occasion. In such circumstances the promise loses all significance, particularly when they are overcome with emotions and passion and find themselves in situations and circumstances where they in a weak moment, succumb to the temptation of haveing sexual relationship. This is what appears to have happened in this case as well, and the prosecutrix willingly consented to having sexual intercourse with the appellant with whom she was in love, not because he promised to marry her but because she also desired it. In these circumstances it would be very difficult to impute to the appellant's knowledge that the prosecutrix had consented in consequence of a misconception of fact arising from his promise. In any event, it was not possible for the appellant to know what was in the mind of the prosecutrix when she consented, because there were more reasons than one for her to consent.

Considering all these circumstances, we find that the prosecution has miserably failed to bring home the charge under Section 376, IPC against the appellant beyond all reasonable doubts. Therefore, we allow this appeal and set aside the judgment of conviction and sentence. Supai Hansda vs. State of Bihar, now Jharkhand, 2010 (3) Cri LJ 3359 (Jhar).

False assurance to a minor girl. In the present case, the victim/prosecutrix, a minor, was deceitfully allured on the false assurance of marriage and under psychological pressure she had been agreeing for repeated sexual intercourse with accused while they were living together for long time as husband and wife and the accused since inception knowing it fully well that he would not marry had successfully exploited the virginity of victim and subsequently resiled from the assurance of marriage betraying her. In these circumstances, the whole testimony of minor victim/ prosecutrix divulged in natural course, inspires confidence and is sufficient to prove the guilt of offence against the accused under Sec. 376 and evidence of the mother as well as the grandmother of the victim are corroborating the fact of repeated physical interaction and sexual exploitation of the victim/prosecutrix by the accused. The fact of residing together having physical relation as husband and wife for long time gives sufficient support to the prosecution version. Thus the prosecution beyond reasonable doubt has been able to prove the guilt/offence under Sec. 376 of IPC against the accused and keeping in view the facts and circumstances the conviction and sentence of accused under Sec. 376 would be proper. Santosh Sinha v. State of Tripura, 2007 (1) CriLJ 7 (Gau).

53. Rape and attempt to rape—Distinction between.—Distinction between an attempt to rape and rape is very suttle. When an attempt to penetrate is made, but no penetration takes place, it can be said to be an attempt to rape; but when an attempt to penetrate is made and a slight penetration takes place, the same would constitute rape. In the present case, the evidence on record does not suggest that there was an attempt to penetrate. That being the situation, there was no attempt to rape. Tika Ram Chettri vs State of Sikkim, 2010 (4) CriLJ 4025 (Sikkim).

54. Sodomy & Rape.—Victim aged 10 years. Instead of informing doctor about sexual assault stated to have sustained injuries fall from bicycle. As the victim was examined by doctor, though she revealed the history as due to bicycle injury, the fact that victim sustained swelling in the region of vulva and that it may be caused trauma to vulval region, it is evident that the injury was on the private part and there were no external injuries on the victim. If really, victim had fallen from the bicycle, there was no reason for her or her mother to lodge the complaint with an allegation of forcible sexual intercourse and an act of sodomy by putting the male organ by accused in the mouth of victim. It is in these circumstances, if the injury sustained by victim is looked into as mentioned the absence of external injuries on the body is inconsistent with the version of the accused about victim sustaining injury by fall from the bicycle. In this context, if the material placed on record is appreciated, it is relevant to note that when a girl aged 10 years is subjected to sexual assault or an act of sodomy, generally the victim does not desire to expose such fact to the people as it would be an insult and it causes lot of humiliation and embarrassment. It may be because of this reason that her mother instead of informing the doctor about sexual assault, might have stated that victim had sustained the injury by fall from the bicycle and when the material placed on record overrules the possibility of the victim's sustaining the injuries by fall from the bicycle and the fact that victim has sustained injury on the private part would lead to the only inference that her mother did not give the true information with regard to the sexual assault by accused.

The prosecution has examined the medical officer of the Government Hospital at Honnali, who examined the accused and after the examination, issued the certificate stating that accused is able to or have the potency to commit the rape.

The Investigating Officer has collected the FIR, which has been produced with regard to registration of crime-against accused for the offence punishable under Section

309, IPC. The perusal, the FIR reveals that the Head Constable of Honnali Police Station submitted the complaint stating that when he went to the hospital, wherein accuse was admitted to take treatment for consuming poison and attempted to commit suicide. He came to know that after the incident of sexual assault on victim accused had consumed insecticide and thereafter admitted in the hospital for the purpose of treatment. So, the fact that accused was in the hospital for the purpose of treatment which supports the prosecution and an inference could be drawn that after the sexual assault, apprehending the possibility of insult and arrest, accused could have made an effort to commit suicide and thereafter must have been in the hospital for treatment. Channabasappa vs. State by Honnali Police, 2010 (3) CriLJ 3369 (Karn).

55. Rape is most serious offence then outraging modesty.—Section 354 is attracted when a person assault or uses criminal force to outrage the modesty and the offence is punishable with imprisonment upto 2 years. Offence of rape is actually entering the private part of a man into the private part of woman. Thus, these three offences stand on different grades. The offense under Sections 354 and 509 are minor in relation to the offence under Section 376, IPC. The offence under Sec. 509 is complete as soon as the accused makes certain sound or gesture even though he does not assault or uses any force against the woman. Offence under Section 354 is complete as soon as assault or criminal force is used against the woman even though no attempt is made to commit rape. Offence of rape punishable under Sec. 376 is the most serious offence against a woman. Normally, to commit the offence of rape, the accused assaults and uses criminal force and it is followed by the penetration. In view of this, when a person is convicted for the offence under Section 376, IPC there is no logic or reason to separately convict and sentence the accused for the offence punishable under Section 354 also, if it pertains to the same woman and the offence is committed in the same transaction. It is possible that the accused may assault on another, during the same transaction. In that case he may be convicted and sentenced for both the offences separately. But in the present case, the accused committed rape on the prosecutrix. No other woman or any other transaction was involved in this case. Therefore, there could be no justification for the conviction of the accused for offence under Sec. 354 also when he is convicted for the offence punishable under Section 376, IPC. Salim Alim Shamsher Shaikh vs State of Maharashtra, 2010 (4) CriLJ 4064 (Bom).

56. Rape on minor girl.—Sole testimony of prosecutrix. The following parameters and factors that need to be kept in mind, which emerge in cases of a rape of a girl child. Such cases need to be dealt with sensitively and not like cases involving other penal offences. In other words, the whole approach of the Courts must be quite different. The traditional non-permissive bounds of Indian Society must be kept in mind while examining the evidence in cases involving sexual offences. Social factors play an important role in the nature and quality of available evidence. The sole testimony of a prosecutrix is enough to convict a person accused of rape, if the testimony is free from blemish and implicitly reliable. Such testimony does not need corroboration: but if there is some doubt about the implicit reliability of the testimony, then the Court may look for assurance to the acceptability of the testimony, short of its corroboration. If the testimony of the prosecutrix is reliable and trustworthy, then minor contradictions are not enough to throw out the evidence and other issues such as non-examination of an available witness, even the non-examination of a doctor or the non-production of the doctor's report would not be fatal to the case of the prosecution. Mohd. Alam v. State (NCT of Delhi), 2007 CriLJ 803 (Del).

Victim a minor girl—Consent immaterial. When out of the two victims of rape, one of them is a minor girl, plea of consent would be unsustainable. The plea of consent is too shallow to even need detailed analysis or consideration. A minor girl cannot legally give a consent which would necessarily involve understanding of the effect of such consent. It has to be a conscious and voluntary act. There is a gulf of difference between consent and submission. Every consent involves a submission but the converse does not follow, and mere act of submission does not involve consent. An act of helpless resignation in the face of inevitable compulsion, quiescence, non-resistance or passive giving in when the faculty is either clouded by fear or vitiated by duress or impaired due to deficiency cannot be considered to be consent as understood in law. For constituting consent, there must be exercise of intelligence based on the knowledge of the significance and the moral effect of the act. In the instant case, the faculty of the victims was clouded by fear and duress. Therefore, the contention with regard to the consent is not tenable. Even assuming that the victim was previously accustomed to sexual intercourse, that is not a determinative question. On the contrary, the question which was required to be adjudicated was did the accused commit rape on the victim on the occasion complained of. Even if it is hypothetically accepted that the victim had lost her virginity earlier, it did not and cannot in law give licence to any person to rape her. Sarafat v. State of Uttaranchal, 2006 CriLJ 654 (Uttaranchal).

Intercourse by a man with his wife during separation.—Whoever has sexual intercourse with his own wife, who is living separately from him under a decree of separation or under any custom or usage without her consent shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years and shall also be liable to fine.

Comments

Series of sexual acts. Prosecutrix on her own went to meet accused at various places and hotel rooms. Held, those been forcible acts those would not have gone unnoticed by persons around.

The assertion of mistaken belief cannot be pressed and pursued barely in the form of argument. There has to be a charge to that effect. It is not the case of the prosecution and it is apparent from the charge that the prosecution has proceeded on the basis or foundation that due to mistaken belief of the prosecutrix she had consented for sexual intercourse.

It is not the case of the prosecution that from the very beginning promise to marry was a hoax and was made without intention to perform from the very inception.

The argument of prosecution is that due to promise by accused to marry, the prosecutrix had consented. Even if any such argument is now advanced at this stage, it denies to the accused an opportunity to defend the charge. No such charge was at all framed.

---

In the background of these successive meetings and sexual relations, the prosecution and the prosecutrix want that Court should believe that she had no craving for what was due during every meeting and was repeatedly happening. Prosecutrix feels that she was unwilling for sexual relations which unwillingness she construes and interprets to be "resistance" on her part. This physical desire with inner unwillingness seems to be her psychological resistance i.e. from within than physical resistance.

What emerges from appreciation of evidence and its analysis is that the prosecutrix must be under compulsion from within for what her mind and body wanted, and she has succumbed to the passion, and to this her second thought resists.

Had it been that prosecutrix had no desire to have company of the accused or keep sexual relations with him, may be in spite of promise to marry, she would not have repeatedly visited the hotel rooms with the accused, apparently with close doors. Had those been forcible acts those would never have gone unnoticed by even those around and would not have gone unchecked.

It is a mystery which has not been solved by the prosecutrix as to why her version about the sexual relations on 13.04.2004 of the accused, removing her salwar and committing intercourse could not be treated to be a voluntary act on the part of the prosecutrix.

Considering the flow of statement of prosecutrix as regards her version about rape on every date of visit or/occasion after 05.05.2004, it becomes very difficult to believe that the incident dated 13.04.2004 as well was a sheer act of rape on her by the accused.

Had the incident which had occurred on 13.04.2004 been an act of rape which also resulted in injury and bleeding from her private part, she would not have, within a span of 20 days on 15.05.2004, and offered herself for further meeting and suffered another rape, and re-submitted for the same episode.

In the given situation, it is hard amongst hardest cases to believe that version of the prosecutrix that even the first act of sex between her and the accused was a forcible act. If the version of the prosecutrix as stands in the examination-in-chief is accepted on the face of record, nothing except unqualified and un-conditional the consent for sexual intercourse on every occasion would emerge.

The version of the prosecutrix that on all occasions commencing from 05.05.2004, all are the acts at forcible sexual intercourse, does not inspire confidence.

In the result, this Court concurs with the submissions advanced in support of the appeal and disagrees with the prosecution case. The appreciation and construction of evidence of the prosecutrix seen from any angle fails in satisfaction of the story couched by prosecutrix that it is a case of rape being the acts without consent or with consent on mistaken belief of facts.

Present case is more or less replica of this Court's judgment in case of Anil alias Bowa S/o Ashanna Nannewar, 2009 All MR (Cri) 15, cited by learned APP, as well as the case of Uddhav supra, and caveats recorded in all other citations do not help the prosecution in distinguishing present case on facts.

All that reveals from the version of the prosecutrix if said version turns out to be believable a little, is that it is due to the promise to marry which the prosecutrix subsequently believed, she did not object the sexual access by the accused which now she calls as forcible intercourse. Anwar Khan Iqbal Khan vs. State of Maharashtra, 2010 (3) CriLJ 3597 (Bombay) (Nagpur).

1. Reduction of sentence.—Where the offence was committed by the appellant prior to Indian Penal Code being amended. Section 276(2)(f) was brought on the statute book afterwards and thus, would not be applicable to the case in hand. However, the maximum life imprisonment could be imposed even under Section 376 of the unamended Indian Penal Code. In the present case, the Court felt that sentence of life imprisonment imposed on the appellant was harsh. Held the interests of justice would be well met by imposing sentence of ten years rigorous imprisonment in place of imprisonment for life. Balbir Singh v. State, 1996 Cr LJ 2403 (Del).

The appellant was admittedly a young man of 21 years of the age at the time of the commission of the offence. He committed the said offence on account of an erotic impulse and with a view to satisfy the same. The prosecutrix after the operation has recovered. She is hale and hearty now, keeping in view the above circumstances, a sentence of ten years RI with fine of Rs. 2,000/- would be sufficient enough to meet the ends of justice under Section 376 of the Indian Penal Code. Zamir Ahmed v. State. 1996 Cr LJ 2354 (Del).

2. Statement of prosecution does not require corroboration.—In the statement of the prosecutrix it is quite clear and unequivocal on the point as to who has ravished her, there is no reason, whatsoever, as to why the said statement, without any corroboration from any quarter, whatsoever, cannot form the basis of conviction Thus her statement is to be scrutinised like the statement of any other witness and if there is a ring of truth about it and if it inspires confidence the Courts would be under an obligation to rely thereupon. In that eventually they need not look for corroboration. Zamir Ahmed v. State, 1996 Cr LJ 2354 (Del).

3. Procedure.—The offence of rape under Section 376 is cognizable, non-bailable and triable by Court of Session. If the intercourse is by a man with his wife not being under twelve years of age, the offence is non-cognizable, bailable and triable by Court of Session. Under Section 376-A, the offence is non-cognizable, bailable and triable by Court of Session. Under Sections 376-B, 376-C and 376-D, the offence is cognizable (but no arrest shall be made without a warrant or without an order of a Magistrate), bailable and triable by Court of Session.

4. Intention to introduce Sexual offences—Scope—Discussed.—The offence of rape occurs in Chapter XVI of IPC. It is an offence affecting the human body. In that Chapter, there is a separate heading for 'Sexual offence', which encompasses Secs. 375, 376, 376-A, 376-B, 376-C and 376-D. 'Rape' is defined in Sec. 375. Secs. 375 and 376 have been substantially changed by Criminal Law (Amendment) Act, 1983, and several new sections were introduced by the new Act, i.e. 376-A, 376-B, 376-C and 376-D. The fact that sweeping changes were introduced reflects the legislative intent to curb with iron hand, the offence of rape which affects the dignity of a woman. The offence of rape in its simplest term is 'the ravishment of a woman, without her consent, by force, fear or fraud', or as 'the carnal knowledge of a woman by force against her will'. 'Rape' or 'Raptus' is when a man hath carnal knowledge of a woman by force and against her will (Co. Litt. 123-b); or as expressed more fully,' rape is the carnal knowledge of any woman, above the age of particular years, against her will; or of a woman child, under that age, with or against her will (Hale PC 628). The essential words in an indictment for rape are rapuit and carnaliter cognovit; but carnaliter cognovit, nor any other circumlocution without the word rapuit, are not sufficient in a legal sense to express rape; 1 Hon. 6, 1a, 9 Edw. 4, 26 a (Hale PC 628). In the crime of rape, 'carnal knowledge' means the penetration to the slightest degree of the organ alleged to have been carnally known by the male organ of generation (Stephen's "Criminal Law" 9th Ed. P. 262). In 'Encyclopaedia of Crime and Justice' (Volume 4, page 1356) it is stated ". . . . . . even slight penetration is sufficient and emission is unnecessary". In Halsbury's Statutes of England and Wales (Fourth Edition) Volume 12, it is stated that even the slightest degree of penetration is sufficient to prove sexual intercourse. It is violation with violence of the private person of a woman-an-outrage by all means. By the very nature of the offence it is an obnoxious act of the highest order. Shekara vs. State of Karnataka, 2009 (4) JT 360 : 2009(3) Scale 104 : 2009(1) Crimes 472 SC.

5. Charge.—I, (Name and office of the Sessions Judge) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :

"That you on or about............at........you committed rape on A (name of the woman raped) and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 376, IPC and within the cognizance of the Court of Session or the High Court."

"And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge by the said Court."

1. Amendment.—The words in italics have been substituted for the words "transportation for life" by Act 26 of 1955, Section 177 and Sch. with effect from 1.1.1956.

2. Consent.—To establish an offence under this section, the consent of the party upon whom the offence is committed is quite immaterial. In re Mathuranath Ghosh, 1 J.G. 43. A mere fifthy and indecent assault, without proof of attempted or intended penetration would not amount to an offence under this section. 1 Weir 383 ; AWN 1884, 25. A conviction can be safely based on the uncorroborated testimony of the boy, if it is not otherwise doubtful. 42 PR 1914 Cr ; but see 73 PLR 1918. It is doubtful whether the act of having connection with a woman in her mouth would amount to an offence under this section. 1 Weir 382. A sentence of whipping is far more suitable for a juvenile offender convicted of bestiality than a sentence of imprisonment. 3 PR 1884 Cr ; AIR 1937 Pesh 22 ; 38 Cr LJ 429. But an attempt should not be punished with whipping. AIR 1938 All 16 ; 39 Cr LJ 233.

3. Carnal intercourse.—Coitus per os is an offence. 26 Cr LJ 945 ; AIR 1925 Sind 286. Evidence to support charge under Section 377 must be convincing. AIR 1926 Lah 375 ; 8 LLJ 180 ; 27 Cr LJ 593 ; 27 PLR 353 ; 95 Ind Cas 257 ; AIR 1932 Sind 143 : 33 Cr LJ 900. Stains of semen make important evidence in sodomy. AIR 1930 Lah 311 : 10 Lah 794 ; 31 Cr LJ 343. The offence made punishable under Section 377 requires that penetration however little should be proved strictly. Thus an attempt to commit this offence should be an attempt to thrust the male organ into the anus of the passive agent. Some activity on the part of the accused in that particular direction ought to be proved strictly. A mere preparation for the operation should not necessarily be construed as an attempt. AIR 1934 Sind 206. Where the accused was proved to have had carnal intercourse by placing his penis inside the nostril of a bullock, held, that he was guilty of an offence under Section 377. AIR 1934 Lah 261 ; AIR 1968 Guj 252 (putting miles organ into the mouth of a boy).

4. Cases.—A charge under Section 377, IPC should allege the time, when the place where and any known or unknown person whom, the particular act charged as an offence under Section 377 was committed. 6 All 204.

The defence examined three witnesses, including Dr. Shiv Shankar Prasad (D.W. 2) who stated about treatment of the appellant in the Kurhani Hospital when he was hospitalised and remained confined during the period from 3.8.1988 to 4.8.1988. Pursuant to which he was discharged from the hospital. Other two defence witnesses were examined obviously to place some documents on record to suggest litigation between the parties. The trial court on meticulous appreciation of the evidence placed on the record while acquitted Dinesh Thakur giving him benefit of doubt for insufficiency of evidence about his identification, rendered verdict of guilt under Section 363 and 377, IPC and sentenced appellant to suffer rigorous imprisonment for a term of six months and 2 and 1/2 years both these counts, respectively with the direction that both the sentences shall run concurrently. On considering of totality of the circumstances of the case, while upholding the finding of guilt recorded by the court below, the petitioner is sentenced to a term of 1 and 1/2 years under Section 377, IPC. Mohan Ojha v. State of Bihar, 2002 Cr LJ 3344 : 2002(2) BLJ 196 : 2002 East Cri C 500.

5. Evidence.—In a prosecution for an offence under Section 377, IPC, the complainant, a boy, who is found to have been a willing party, must be regarded as an accomplice and it is not therefore safe to convict the accused on the evidence of the complainant boy, unless his evidence is corroborated in material particulars. 61 CLJ 538 ; 39 CWN 1051. On evidence of boy only and medical evidence showing abrasion on anus due to unnatural intercourse, conviction was to be held proper. 1961 Jab LJ 405.

6. Medical evidence.—In a case of completed offence under this section medical evidence could and should be definite against the accused. AIR 1947 All 97 ; 48 Cr LJ 376 ; ILR 1945 Nag 226 ; 46 Cr LJ 68 ; AIR 1944 Nag 245.

7. Sentence.—The punishment of whipping is in a case of bestiality (sodomy on a boy of eight years) is useful as deterrent. 167 Ind Cas 655 ; 30 Cr LJ 429 ; AIR 1937 Pesh 22 ; 9 R Pesh 90 ; see also AIR 1936 Lah 256 ; 1936 Cr C 205 ; 38 PLR 437 ; 37 Cr LJ 474 ; 161 Ind Cas 591.

Where there was conviction under Section 377, IPC—Oral evidence corroborated by medical evidence—Commission of offence established. Therefore it was held conviction confirmed however in the facts and circumsta-nces of the case lenient view taken. Avinash v. State of M.P., 1995 Cr LR 119 (MP).

There was swelling in anus area and there was injury of 1 cm. length. The injured prosecutrix and other witnesses were there to support, and hence case is proved. But looking to age of accused the sentence was reduced to 4 years from 7 years. Chouhal Singh v. State of Rajasthan, 1995 Cr LR 237 (Raj).

In case of highway robbery and murder when accused did not show any regard for human lives, life sentence be enhanced to capital punishment. Prem v. State of Maharashtra, 1993 Cr LJ 1608 (Bom).

Where appellant was a boy of young age and faced—Agony of trial was established fine and sentence reduced. Jit Masih v. State of Punjab, (1994) 1 CC Cases 335 (P & H).

Where the charge was of committing sodomy with student of 8th class by petitioner, a Sanskrit teacher—Conviction and sentence was given and revision petition was filed. The petitioner having faced agony of trial, his educational background and serious consequences concerning job, his sentence reduced to already undergone. Om Prakash v. State of Haryana, (1994) 2 Crimes 250 (P & H) : (1994) 2 Recent Cr R 78 : 1994 (2) CC Cases 487 (P & H).

When medico-legal report coupled with injuries found on victim supported allegation to sodomy and when identification of accused is established then accused was rightly convicted under Section 377, IPC. Kailash v. State of Haryana, 2004 Cr LJ 310 (P&H) : 2003 (3) Rec Cri R 462.

8. Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not comp- oundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

9. Evidence.—In a complaint for unnatural offence when it is found as a fact that the complainant was a perfectly willing party, it is not safe to convict the accused unless the complainant's evidence is corroborated in material particulars implicating the accused. It is a matter of prudence, that there ought not to be any conviction without such corroboratlon, except in very exceptional case. 61 Cr LJ 883 ; 39 CWN 1051 ; 38 Cr LJ 70.

The man convicted for offence of sodomy pleaded for leniency in sentence on ground that such type of acts are not considered as offence in England. Rejecting the plea it was held that practice of adopting English Laws is not always conductive to Indian society. The medico-legal report coupled with injuries found on complainant victim supported allegation of sodomy. The conviction and sentence were, therefore, upheld. Kailash v. State, 2004 Cr LJ 310 (P&H) : 2003 (3) Rec Cri R 462.

10. Charge.—I (name and office of the Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :

That on or about the.............day of......at.......you had carnal intercourse against the order of nature with........ (specify the object.........whether man, woman or animal) and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 377 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance (or the cognizance of the Court of Session or High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried (by the said Court)[1], on the said charge.

Sentence.—1975 Cr LJ 30 ; AIR 1974 SC 352 ; 1974 SCC (Cr) 49 Q (reduction of sentence by Supreme Court).

11. Acquittal.—Where there was prosecution for sodomy and had delayed in FIR—Delay was not properly explained—Evidence was not reliable and there was also non-corroboration of medical evidence.—Accused, held, entitled to benefit of doubt. Dilip Maheshwari v. State of M.P., 1995 Cr LR 80 (MP).

12. Conviction.—Where there was appreciation of evidence—Victim's version found to be natural—Medical evidence corroborating prosecution case—FIR lodged next day with proper explanation for delay and no illegality or perversity in findings of courts below, hence conviction was upheld. Chandrashekhar v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (1995) 1 CCR 86 (MP).

13. Attempt.—For committing or for attempt to commit an offence under Section 377, IPC penetration must be proved before the accused can be convicted. Since preparation to commit an offence, under Section 377 is not an offence no offence is said to have been committed and charges under Sections 377/511 could not have been framed. Hence quashed. Biren Lal v. State of Bihar, (1995) 2 East Cr C 526 (Pat).

[1] In cases triable by Magistrate, omit the words within brackets.

14. Rape and unnatural offence.—Accused Headmaster have raped or subjected school girls aged between 8-12 years to unnatural offence. Victims, capable of being tutored and overwhelming evidence reflecting such tutoring. Their testimony being not corroborated, cannot form basis for conviction. Sekaran vs. State, 2010 (2) CrLJ 2341 (Mad).

15. Sodomy & Rape.—Victim aged 10 years. Instead of informing doctor about sexual assault stated to have sustained injuries fall from bicycle. As the victim was examined by doctor, though she revealed the history as due to bicycle injury, the fact that victim sustained swelling in the region of vulva and that it may be caused trauma to vulval region, it is evident that the injury was on the private part and there were no external injuries on the victim. If really, victim had fallen from the bicycle, there was no reason for her or her mother to lodge the complaint with an allegation of forcible sexual intercourse and an act of sodomy by putting the male organ by accused in the mouth of victim. It is in these circumstances, if the injury sustained by victim is looked into as mentioned the absence of external injuries on the body is inconsistent with the version of the accused about victim sustaining injury by fall from the bicycle. In this context, if the material placed on record is appreciated, it is relevant to note that when a girl aged 10 years is subjected to sexual assault or an act of sodomy, generally the victim does not desire to expose such fact to the people as it would be an insult and it causes lot of humiliation and embarrassment. It may be because of this reason that her mother instead of informing the doctor about sexual assault, might have stated that victim had sustained the injury by fall from the bicycle and when the material placed on record overrules the possibility of the victim's sustaining the injuries by fall from the bicycle and the fact that victim has sustained injury on the private part would lead to the only inference that her mother did not give the true information with regard to the sexual assault by accused.

The prosecution has examined the medical officer of the Government Hospital at Honnali, who examined the accused and after the examination, issued the certificate stating that accused is able to or have the potency to commit the rape.

The Investigating Officer has collected the FIR, which has been produced with regard to registration of crime-against accused for the offence punishable under Section 309. IPC. The perusal, the FIR reveals that the Head Constable of Honnali Police Station submitted the complaint stating that when he went to the hospital, wherein accuse was admitted to take treatment for consuming poison and attempted to commit suicide. He came to know that after the incident of sexual assault on victim accused had consumed insecticide and thereafter admitted in the hospital for the purpose of treatment. So, the fact that accused was in the hospital for the purpose of treatment which supports the prosecution and an inference could be drawn that after the sexual assault, apprehending the possibility of insult and arrest, accused could have made an effort to commit suicide and thereafter must have been in the hospital for treatment. Channabasappa vs. State by Honnali Police, 2010 (3) CriLJ 3369 (Karn).

16. Rape and Unnatural intercourse—Intercourse is necessary ingredient in both offences.—In the instant case the prosecution itself has alleged that the accused is guilty of the offences punishable under Sections 376 and 377 of IPC. It is true that such a charge in a given case can be levelled and framed. However, both acts are separate offence. If sexual intercourse forcibly with a woman and that too a minor is an offence punishable under Section 376 and unnatural intercourse is independently made an offence under Section 377, then mere version of the victim when both charges are levelled i.e. the act of rape and unnatural intercourse, would not necessarily be conclusive to hold that the charges are proved. The medical evidence and the reports of chemical analyzer assume some significance. In this case, the samples have been collected nearly two months from the incident and the analysis report has been forwarded a good five and half months after the date of incident. The findings therein do not conclusively show that either of the offences have been committed. The charge under Section 375 can be proved by demonstrating that the case falls in the explanation to Section 375. However, there has to be evidence of atleast intercourse and penetration so as to bring it within the case of the explanation. In the instant case, even that is not conclusive, leave alone, reliable and trustworthy. Rape constitutes sexual intercourse with a woman. The explanation states that penetration is sufficient to constitute the sexual intercourse necessary to the offence of rape. Section 377 of IPC presupposes carnal intercourse against the order of nature. It has similar explanation. However, intercourse is necessary ingredient in both the offences. That itself is not proved in this case. Hence accused would be entitled to acquittal. Kailash Laxman Khamkar vs. State of Maharashtra, 2010 (3) Cri LJ 3255 (Bom).

CHAPTER XVII

OF OFFENCES AGAINST PROPERTY

Scope of the chapter.—"The offences defined in this Chapter are made punishable on the ground that they are violations of the right of property. But the right of property is itself the creature of law. It is evident, that if the substantive law touching this right be imperfect or obscure, the penal law, which is auxiliary to that substantive law, and of imperfect or obscure, the penal law, which is auxiliary to that substantive law, and of which the object is to add a sanction to that substantive law, must partake of the imperfection or obscurity. If it be a matter of doubt what things are the subject of a certain right, in whom the right resides and to what that right extends, it must also be matter of doubt whether that right has or has not been violated. For example A, without Z's permission, shoots snipes on Z's ground, and carries them away, here if the law of civil rights grants the property in such birds to any person who can catch them. A has not, by killing them and carrying them away, invaded Z's right of property. If, on the other hand the law of civil rights declares such birds are the property of the person on whose lands they are, A has invaded Z's rights of property. If it be matter of doubt what the state of the civil law on the subject actually is, it must also be matter of doubt whether, A has wronged Z, or not . . . . As the substantive civil law varies, the penal law, which is added as a ground to the substantive civil law, must vary also".—Morgan and Macpherson.

OF THEFT

Sec. 378. Theft.—Whoever, intending to take dishonestly any moveable property out of the possession of any person without that person's consent, moves that property in order to such taking, is said to commit theft.

Explanation 1.—A thing so long as it is attached to the earth, not being moveable property, is not the subject of theft ; but it becomes capable of being the subject of theft as soon as it is severed from the earth.

Explanation 2.—A moving effected by the same act which effects the verance, may be theft.

Explanation 3.—A person is said to cause a thing to move by removing an obstacle which prevented it from moving or by separating it from any other thing, as well as by actually moving it.

Explanation 4.—A person, who by any means causes an animal to move, is said to move the animal, and to move everything which, in consequence of the motion so caused, is moved by that animal.

Explanation 5.—The consent mentioned in the definition may be expressed or implied, and may be given either by the person in possession, or by any person having for that purpose authority either express or implied.

Illustrations

(a) A cuts down a tree on Z's ground, with the intention of dishonestly taking the tree out of Z's possession without *Z*s consent. Here, as soon as A has severed the tree In order to such taking, he has committed theft.

(b) A puts a bait for dogs in his pocket, and thus induces Z's dog to follow it. Here if A's intention he dishonestly to take the dog out of *Z*s possession without *Z*s consent. A has committed theft as soon as *Z*s dog has begun to follow A.

(c) A meets of bullock carrying a box of treasure. He drives the bullock in a certain direction, in order that he may dishonestly take the treasure. As soon as the bullock begins to move, A has committed theft of the treasure.

(d) A being *Z*s servant, and entrusted by Z with the care of *Z*s plate, dishonestly runs away with the plate, without *Z*s consent. A has committed theft.

(e) Z, going on journey, entrusts his plate to A, the keeper of a warehouse, till Z shall return. A carries the plate to a goldsmith and sells it. Here the plate was not in *Z*s possession. It could not therefore be taken out of *Z*s possession. and A has not committed theft, though he may have committed criminal breach of trust.

(f) A find a ring belonging to Z on a table in the house which Z occupies. Here the ring is in *Z*s possession and if A dishonestly removes it, A commits theft.

(g) A finds a ring lying on the high road, not in the possession of any person. A by taking it, commits no theft, though he may commit criminal misappropriation of property.

(h) A sees a ring belonging to Z lying on a table in *Z*s house. Not venturing to misappropriate the ring immediately for fear of search and detection. A hides the ring in a place where it is highly improbable that it will ever be found by Z, with the intention of taking the ring from the hiding place and selling it when the loss is forgotten. Here A, at the time of first moving the ring, commits theft.

(i) A delivers his watch to Z, a jeweller to be regulated. Z carries it to his shop. A not owing to the jeweller any debt for which the jeweller might lawfully detain the watch as a security, enters the shop openly, takes his watch by force out of *Z*s hand, and carried it away. Here A, though he may have committed criminal trespass and assault, has not committed theft, inasmuch as what he did was not done dishonestly.

(j) A owes money to Z for repairing the watch, and if Z retains the watch lawfully as a security for the debt, and A takes the watch out of *Z*s possession, with the intention of depriving Z of the property as a security for his-debt. he commits theft, inasmuch as he takes it dishonestly.

(k) Again, if A having powned his watch to Z, takes it out of *Z*s possession without *Z*s consent not having paid what he borrowed on the watch. he commits theft. though the watch is his own property, inasmuch as he take it dishonestly.

(l) A takes an article belonging to Z out of *Z*s possession without *Z*s consent. with the intention of keeping it until he obtains from Z as a reward for its restoration. Here A takes dishonestly : A has therefore committed theft.

(m) A being on friendly terms with Z, goes into *Z*s library in Z's absence, and takes away a book without *Z*s express consent for the purpose merely of reading it, and with the intention of returning it. Here, it is probable, that A may have conceived that he had *Z*s implied consent to use *Z*s book. If this was A's impression, A has not committed theft.

(n) A asks from *Z*s wife. She gives A money, food and clothes, which A knows to belong to Z her husband. Here it is probable that A may conceive that *Z*s wife is authorised to give away alms. If this was A's impression, A has not committed theft.

(o) A is the paramour of *Z*s wife. She gives a valuable property, which A knows to belong to her husband Z, and to be such property as she has not authority from Z to give. If A takes the property dishonestly, he commits theft.

(p) A in good faith, believing property belonging to Z to be A's own property takes that property out of B's possession. Here, as A does not take dishonestly, he does not commit theft.

1. Essentials of offence.—To constitute the offence of theft the prosecution must establish (a) that there was dishonest intention to take property, (b) that the property was moveable property, (c) that it was taken out of the possession of another, (d) that it was taken without the consent of that other, and (e) that there was removal of the property in order to accomplish the taken of it. 54 Ind Cas 992. Commission of theft consists in (1) moving a moveable property of a person out of his possession without his consent (2) the moving being in order to the taking of the property with a dishonest intention. Thus (1) the absence of the person's consent at the time of moving and (2) the presence of dishonest intention in so taking and at the time are the essential ingredients of the offence of theft. AIR 1957 SC 369 : 1957 SCA 364 : 1957 SCC 192 :

1957 SCJ 386 : 1957 SCR 627 : 1957 Cr LJ 552. The offence of theft is contemplated where there is dishonest moving of the property even though the property is detached from that to which it is secured. But for moving the property the offence of theft is not contemplated, though it may be still an attempt. AIR 1958 Mad 476 : 1958 All Cr R 330 : 1958 Cr LJ 1198. Guilt depends not on mere ownership of property in any one but on its removal from possession of owner and appropriation. ILR 1953 Mys 617 : 33 Mys LJ 188 ; see also AIR 1963 SC 1098 ; AIR 1965 SC 926 (whether illegal seizure of cattle who trespassed into accused's land and caused damages to the crop, amount to theft. The loss contemplated by Section 378, need not be a total deprivation but it is enough if it is a temporary keeping deprived the owner of the lorry with a view to gain a temporary advantage for themselves in view of the strike at the workshop of the owner of the lorry.' 1959 Ker LJ 1053 : 1959 Ker LJ 878. Before the offence of theft is made out it has to be established that (1) the accused was not legally entitled to the property alleged to be stolen and that the complainant was wrongfully deprived of the property ; (2) the means employed to take possession were unlawful and (3) the taking was without consent. 1964 All Cr R 483 : 1964 All WR (HC) 674 : 1965 All LJ 214. It is necessary for the prosecution to establish in a case of theft that certain movable property was taken out of the possession of a person without his consent and that for the purpose of such taking the said property was removed. Another important ingredient which has to be established is that the accused had the intention to take the said property dishonestly. 1961 (1) Cr LJ 685 ; AIR 1960 Pat 546 : 1960 Cr LJ 1646.

It is clear from the definitions of 'dishonestly' in Section 24, and 'wrongful gain' and 'wrongful loss' in Section 23, that the gain or loss contemplated need not be a total acquisition or a total deprivation but it is enough it is a temporary retention of property by the person wrongfully gaining or temporary "keeping out" of property for the person legally entitled to. This is clearly brought out in Illustration (1) to Section 378, Penal Code, and is uniformly recognised by various decisions the High Court which point out that in this respect "theft" under the Penal Code, differs from 'larceny' in English law which contemplated permanent gain or loss. AIR 1957 SC 869 : 1957 SCJ 386 : 1957 SCR 623 : 1957 Cr LJ 552 : 1957 SCC 192. UBR (1892-1895), Vol 1, 232. If the materials of a house are taken away dishonestly, the act is theft, even though the house is left uncared for. UBR 1904 1st Qr. Penal Code, Section 7. No theft can be committed in respect of a property, where the owner has given up possession of it. 4 MHC App 30. An owner retaking property, which was illegally distrained, cannot be convicted of theft. 1 Weir 422 : 1 Weir 421. Where the accused cut and removed certain crops under attachment in order to save them from being washed away, held, that the mere removal, without proof of dishonest intention would not constitute the offence. 1 Weir 423 : see AIR 1956 All 630 ; 1956 Cr LJ 1176. Where the accused cut and removed crop from the possession of the custodian under attachment orders of the Court in spite of the knowledge, was held guilty of the offence under Section 378. Where in execution of decree against certain person, property belonging to another person is wrongfully taken away by the bailiff, the owner takes back the same, he does not commit offence under Section 379. AIR 1959 Raj 289 : ILR (1958) 8 Raj 1109 ; 1959 Cr LJ 1475 ; AIR 1956 Raj 190 , 1956 Cr LJ 1430 (2) ; ILR 6 Raj 722. If a Jointly owned animal is actually in possession of one co-owner, this circumstance alone would not be sufficient to bring act of the accused within Section 378. The act must be done dishonestly as defined in the Code. 103 Ind Cas 847 : 28 Cr LJ 767: AIR 1927 Lah 650. The case was of stealing railway property—Accused found moving trolley loaded with railway property.—Possession of accused of such property was proved.

5. Husband and wife.—There is not the same union of interest between a Mohammedan wife and her husband which exists between the English husband and wife and she can be convicted of theft or abetment of theft of her husband's property. 6 BH Cr C 6. The intent with which the husband's property is removed is a question of fact and where a dishonest conversion is intended, it clearly amounts to theft. 17 M 401. But the removal by a Hindu wife of her stridhan property from the possession of her husband does not amount to the offence of theft. 8 BHC Cr 11 ; Rat Un Cr C 44 ; 74 CWN 935 (theft alleged of trust and gift to accused by complainant).

6. Master and servant.—Servant taking away master's goods for unpaid wages without consent commits theft. 28 Cr LJ 531 ; AIR 1927 All 470 ; 102 Ind Cas 339 ; AIR 1965 Cal 355 ; AIR 1956 Orissa 212 ; 1956 Cr LJ 1421.

7. Without consent.—An essential ingredient of theft is the taking of the property out of the owner's possession and without the owner's consent. Where a debtor gave certain property to the creditor upon the understanding that a debt was due from him to the accused, but subsequently he found out that the debt was a "time barred" debt, held, that the subsequent knowledge could not change the fact, that at the time when the consent was given, it was a full and unqualified consent, and that the accused should not therefore, have been convicted of theft for retaining possession of the property. 1 ALJ 508. Where a servant, with the consent of his master, renders a person the assistance sought by him, in order to procure his punishment, the removal of the property by such person, with such assistance would not constitute the offence of theft, inasmuch as the owner has knowledge of the removal. 4 Cal 366 : 3 CLR 625.

8. Bona fide claim.—In case of bona fide claim of right in the property there can be no conviction for theft. AIR 1951 Cal 207 : 51 Cr LJ 1575 ; AIR 1965 SC 585 : 1965 (1) Cr LJ 496 ; 1974 Cut LR (Cr) 343 ; 1962 (1) Cr LJ 766 : AIR 1961 Tripura 25 ; AIR 1962 SC 586 : 1962 (1) Cr LJ 518 : 1982 All Cr R 222 ; AIR 1965 SC 926 : 1965 (2) Cr LJ 18 ; 1971 Cr LJ 1363.

10. Removal of property for taking.—Where crop was dishonestly cut and removed by the order of the accused, he himself, being present, held, that the accused was guilty of an offence under this section. 43 Ind Cas 404 : 19 Cr LJ 404. The act of cutting the string by which a pass was fastened to woman's neck and forcing the ends apart constitutes a sufficient moving to bring the act within the purview of this section. 29 PR 1917 Cr: 37 PWR 1917 Cr. In order to constitute theft, it is sufficient if property is removed against his wish, from the custody of a person, who has an apparent title, even a colour of right to such property. 27 Cal 501 : 4 CWN 480. Where there is no proof of taking the property found in the possession of the accused he must be convicted of an offence under this section. Rat Un Cr C 143. Removal of property dishonestly, that is, with the intention of wrongfully depriving the owner of the possession thereof for however short a period, is theft. Rat Un Cr C 908. Where the intention of the accused is not to convert the property to his own use or take make it his property permanently, no offence under this section has been committed. 11 Cal 635. Theft of silver anklet from a child calls for a deterrent sentence because it very often leads to murder. 1930 MWN 173. In theft the original taking is without honesty and without the consent of the owner. In criminal breach of trust the original taking is with honesty and with the consent of the owner. In obtaining property by cheating the taking is dishonest but with the consent of the owner. In criminal misappropriation the taking is honest but without the consent of the owner. 106 Ind Cas 678 : 29 Cr LJ 86 : AIR 1928 Nag 113. But in a latter case it was held that to constitute the offence of theft it is not necessary that the taking should be permanent or intention to appropriate the thing taken, or there should be wrongful gain to some one in addition to the wrongful loss to the owner, but there must be an intention to take the thing dishonestly. 25 Cal 416: 2 CWN 347 ; 1 Weir 417 ; 1 Weir 419 ; LBR (1872-1892), 399 ; 1 PR 1887 ; 1 Bom LR 515. But in 1953 Cr LJ 1035 : AIR 1953 Mad 516 : (1953) 1 MLJ 290, it was held that Section 379, requires that the removal of the property from the possession of another should be with intent to cause wrongful gain to himself or wrongful loss to the other person. Dishonest intention is the gist of the offence.

Since the intention of theft in Section 378, requires that the moving of the property is to be in order to such taking, "such" meaning "intending to take dishonestly" the very moving out must be with dishonest intention. 11. Explanation 1.—"If the property be attached to the earth the mere severing is not theft. To constitute theft of any kind, there must be, as is noticed in the definition and there after, a moving of that thing after severance. The severance as such, only puts the thing into that condition in which a theft can be committed of it. In many cases things attached to the earth may be severed from it without being moved and then, if there be no subsequent moving, there is no theft. If Indeed the same act which effects the severance, also effects a moving of the things as in the case supposed in the illustration, that moving is sufficient ; but in many cases thing attached to the earth may be severed from it without being moved : and then if there be no subsequent moving there is no theft".—Morgan and Macpherson. Where by the term of the kabuliat it was proved that if the tenant cut any trees, he would pay to the landlord compensation at a certain rate and it was found that the tenant mala fide cut some trees in order to injure the landlord. Held, that although the tenant was in possession of the land he committed theft by severing the trees from the ground as they were in the possession of the landlord. 27 CLJ 228. Theft of the trees will be committed only when they were out to remove them from the possession of the owner and not when the cutting was merely to annoy him. 29 Ind Cas 672 : 16 Cr LJ 544. 1. Cases.—Where it appeared that a landlord had jointly cultivated land with a non-occupancy tenant and had cut and removed the crops, held, that the landlord must be deemed to be a part owner and in possession and could not be convicted of theft. 10 ALJ 427 : 14 Cr LJ 3 : 18 Ind Cas 146. Whether the removal of fish from an irrigation tank amounts to theft depends upon the facts of each case. When the water is so low that the fish could not escape, the removal may be theft. 36 M 472. The possession of a trustee is a sufficient possession within the definition of theft. LBR (1872-1892), 410. A Criminal Court should not convict of theft any person who asserts a claim of right unless it is in a position to say that the claim is a mere pretence. 9 CWN 974 : 2 Cr LJ 836 ; for power of criminal Court to decide title see 6 DLR 13. In order to constitute larceny, there must be an intention to take entire dominion over the property, i.e., the taker must intend to appropriate the property to his own use but there may be theft without an intention to deprive the owner of the property permanently. 8 ALJ 1237. Where the tenant is accused of theft of paddy, reaped and stored up, his and the landlord's share not having been divided, a conviction for theft is bad. 15 Cr LJ 186. A tenant was ejected from his holding under the provisions of the Agra Tenancy Act. Formal possession was delivered to the zamindar but as he failed to tender the price of the standing crops the tenant cut and removed them. Held, that the tenant was not guilty of theft. 14 ALJ 279. A son who appropriates to his own use any part of the family property he thinks fit, against the will of his father who is the manager of the property, commits theft, and a sentence of fine only passed on him was held to be proper. 4 CPLR 174. In cases of theft from a railway train, where the Magistrate is once satisfied that the accused has committed the offence, the sentence should be of a deterrent nature. 14 Bom LR 504. There cannot be bona fide assertion of right in answer to a charge of theft when the accused knew that he had possession of the property and gathered a produce grown by the complainant. 16 Cr LJ 458 ; AIR 1929 Pat 502. Where the petitioner was convicted of abetment of theft of wood from a forest, and the defence of the petitioner was that he had right to take wood from the forest in question without a pass, he could not be convicted of theft or abetment thereof when it was not found as matter of fact that he was not entitled to take wood from the forest. 18 CWN 397. Where process is signed by a*min* but does not bear seal of Court, the attachment is illegal. Hence, removal of such property is not offence. An attempt to commit theft under this section is not punishable with whipping. LBR (1872-1892), 338. It is wholly illegal to punish a man for a grave offence, involving many totally different ingredients to a charge of theft on a charge under this section. 16 Ind Cas 165. No offence under this section has been committed when the pledgee takes possession of the things pledged. 1 CPLR Cr 100. When the accused was found in possession of two freshly flayed skins of a goat and kid within 24 hours of theft he was charged under Section 379, of the Penal Code. Held, that it was absolutely necessary for the prosecution to establish that the skins found on the accused were those of the goats recently stolen. 16 Cr LJ 440 : 29 Ind Cas 72. In a case of theft with rioting the evidence adduced by the prosecution of a general nature that the accused were present on the scence of the occurrence, is not enough, and unless something specific is mentioned in a rioting case, socially when the accused have also been convicted under Section 379, it is not safe to convict the accused even under Section 147. AIR 1941 Pat 613 : 43 Cr LJ 294.

Where the properties are removed from the possession of the sureties with whom they were left by the amin, the complaint of Court is not necessary for a prosecution for the offence under Section 379. 43 Cr LJ 438 : 199 IC 210. Charge-sheet under Section 379, setting out facts which constitute the offence under Section 163, Cl. In order to sustain a conviction of theft or dishonest receipt of stolen property, it is sufficient that the property found in the prisoner's possession was like that stolen. There must be finding to the effect that the property was stolen. Rat Un Cr C 277.

Persons, who cleared a piece of Government land, cutting down and appropriating the trees thereon without permission were convicted of theft under Section 379, IPC and of mischief under Section 425. Held, that the conviction was not illegal as the mischief proceeded the theft, which under Section 379, Exp 1, could not have been committed until the tree had been detached from the ground. 2 BHC 392. The stealing of two bullocks belonging to two different persons at the same time, from the same custody, is only a single offence and should be punished only once. AWN 1881, 154. Where the accused were entrusted with certains lands with the standing crops to be taken care of and they subsequently cut and disposed of the crops, they could be convicted under Section 379, IPC, of theft, and not under Section 405, 36 Cal 758 : 10 Cr LJ 253 : 3 Ind Cas 189. The accused, an employee under a Steamer Company, whose business it was to check the tickets of passengers, asked to see the complainant's ticket but the complainant for having got one, the accused took possession of his umbrella as security that he might be compelled to pay his fare. Held, that there being no suggestion that the accused intended either to get any wrongful gain to himself by compelling payment of the fare or to cause any wrongful loss to the complainant who was bound to pay his fair a conviction for theft was wrong. 14 CWN 936 : 7 Ind Cas 257 : 11 Cr LJ 444. The appellant was in dire need of money as established. The Accused/appellant knew that his visa had come on and that a large amount of money was required. He had also tried to arrange for loan.

According to accused in the house of the deceased, a large amount of cash and jewellery was available which could have been taken away by the accused/appellant and that he, as a conscientious man, had taken so that he could repay before his departure. The contention is devoid of any merit and has been found to be incorrect by the Courts below. It would be pertinent to mention here that the trial Court has adverted to the fact that the jewellery and cash were lying in hidden condition and thus knowledge of its existence cannot be attributed to the accused/appellant.

At the stage of recording of statement under Sec. 313 of the Code, the accused had come with another explanation that the deceased Augustine had paid him amount. No evidence at all has been adduced to show that he was present in the shop of Augustine and had been given the said amount. Furthermore, even wife of the accused/appellant has not stated that she was told at any stage by her husband that he had received amount from the deceased Augustine. The trial Court and the High Court both have disbelieved it.

The analysis of the evidence shows that the accused/appellant was in dire and urgent need of more and he had a motive for getting the said amount of money. M.A. Antony vs. State of Kerala, AIR 2009 SC 2549 : 2009 (6) SCC 220 : 2009 (7) JT 372 : 2009 (6) SCR 829 : 2009 (6) Scale 36 : 2009 (8) SLT 255.

2. Sentence.—When the offence charged are theft and house breaking and the Magistrate gives merely a nominal sentence of imprisonment till the rising of the Court, then although he is complying with the letter of the law, he is in the fact treating the accused more leniently than if he had applied Section 562 (1), Cr PC. But theft and house breaking are offences for which separate punishments can be given. If the accused is convicted under Section 379, IPC, theft, or Section 380, IPC theft in a building, he may, in a proper case, be released on probation of conduct. If he is convicted of house-breaking with intent to commit theft (Sections 454 and 457), a sentence of imprisonment is obligatory. Where therefore the accused is convicted under both these sections and the Magistrate considers that it is not desirable to inflict a substantial of imprisonment, his proper course is to direct the accused to execute a bond under Section 562 (1), for the offence of theft and to sentence him to imprisonment until the rising of the Court for the offence of house-breaking. AIR 1938 Bom 463 : 40 Bom LR 927. A heavy fine must be imposed for cattle theft. AIR 1939 Sind 339 : 41 Cr LJ 187 : AIR 1940 Ker 88. Plea of Alibi—When not reliable. The theatrical explanation given by the accused/appellant that he was going Perumbavoor and at Thottuva, nearly 35 kms away, the auto driver tried to snatch his money and he ran and stayed at a dilapidated house for the whole night has been rightly rejected by the Courts below. And if he was at Thottuva which is admittedly 35 kms away from the place of occurrence, he could not have been seen on the early hours, at the place of occurrence. M.A. Antony vs. State of Kerala, AIR 2009 SC 2549 : 2009 (6) SCC 220 : 2009 (7) JT 372 : 2009 (6) Scale 36 : 2009 (6) SCR 829.

3. Who can complain ?—The general rule is that a complaint need not necessarily be made by the person injured but may be filed by any person of the offence and the only exceptions to this rule are in Sections 195 to 199, of the Cr. P. Code. An offence under Section 379, IPC, not being one to which Sections 195 to 199, Cr. P. Code, apply the prosecution for theft can be launched by a person who is not directly interested in the property stolen or adversely affected. 1962 Ker LJ 1099 : ILR (1962) 2 Ker 696 : 1963 (1) Cr LJ 458.

4. Scope.—The main ingredient of theft is that movable property should be taken away dishonestly. If the wife takes away her "Stridhan" property as alleged in the complaint, then it cannot be said that she has taken it away dishonestly. A person cannot be said to have committed theft of her own property even if she is a married woman. (1988) 1 Cr LC 28.

5. Applicability.—The accused was convicted under the section for the offence of picking pocket of the petitioner. He picked up money from the chest pocket of petitioner and tried to run away but was caught by the petitioner with the held of others. Counsel for accused contended that accused was young person of 19/20 years, at the relevant time and incident dated back to over 10 years and there was nothing against petitioner's antecedent or character apart from the present allegation the punishment of imprisonment might turn him into more serious criminal while in the company of hardened criminals in jail. Held, that offender to be released on probation of good conduct instead of taking the sentence forthwith. 1987 Cr LJ 1378 (Gau).

Regarding charge under Section 379, it was observed that there must be proof of commission of offence of theft by taking the property out of possession of another person without that person's consent. It followed that offence would be wholly inapplicable if property was removed from a dead person. There was no evidence that property had been removed from the possession of the deceased while he was still alive. No charge under Section 304, was framed which provided for dishonest misappropriation of property possessed by deceased person at the time of death. 1987 Cr LJ 196 (Ori).

8. Theft by Minor.—The accused convicted of theft under Section 376, IPC was aged between 16-17 at the time of the occurrence on 27-3-1978. Giving margin of one year in approximation, he was taken to be a child on the date of the incident on 27.3.1978. At the time of hearing of appeal, his age was about 37 years, so there was no question of sending him to an approved school either as per Section 29 of the U.P. Children Act. The Supreme Court maintained the conviction of the accused under Section 379, IPC but quashed the sentence of one year R.I. Ram swarup v. State of U.P., 2000 Cri LJ 3926 (All). Where it appeared that two witnesses who were the only eye-witnesses had been assaulted by the accused and during the course of assault, theft was also committed, there was no reason to disbelieve the two eye-witness on the ground that there was no specific evidence as to who of the accused persons removed which of the article from the house and therefore, conviction of the accused persons had been rightly recorded by the trial Court. Dinesh Chaudhary v. State, 2004 Cr LJ 4360 at p. 4363 (Pat) : 2004(3) BLJ 488.

15. Hire-purchase agreement.—If the owner under hire-purchase agreemen terminates the agreement and takes possession of the hired vehicle in terms of the hire-purchase agreement which binds the onwer and the hirer, the re-possession of the vehicle may not amount to any criminal offence. But where the hirer-complains that the entire amount is paid but the owner did not get the entry of hire-purchase agreement cancelled, the Court dealing with the complaint of theft alone has to look into the matter. To escape the criminal liability, the financier must show to the Court either before trial Magistrate or before the High Court dealing with an application under Section 482 of Cr.P.C., for quashing that the financier has taken possession of the vehicle for commiting default by the hirer in terms of the hire-purchase agreement. The owner/financier after expiry of the period of agreement, especially after long lapse of time cannot exercise the right to take possession of the vehicle covered by hire-purchase agreement. The rights of the owner/financier under the agreement is extinguished in accordance with Section 27 of the Limitation Act. Utham Kumar Jain, v. The State of A.P. and others, 2005 CriLJ 3601 (AP).
